An editorial appearing in the May 12 edition of the Philadelphia Inquirer, one of America's leading newspapers, captioned "Tax relief needn't await budget cut" said in part:

> To pave the way for tax reduction, the House voted to slash $6,000,000,000 from Mr. Truman's new top-heavy budget. The Senate cut it by four and a half billions.
> It ought to have been possible to get together long before this on a compromise figure. The protesting Senators, as has been said, are right in opposing further delay.
> But they are wrong in withholding their support of any tax relief at this session until they are certain just how much the swollen Federal budget is to be reduced, down to the last dollar.
> This is the position taken by at least some of the Senators, while many of their Democratic colleagues are obstinately opposing any help for taxpayers, no matter what economies are effected.
> The real question that has been holding up budget reduction is how best to allot the savings. Those who demand that the whole sum or a major part of it be applied to debt reduction have been engaging in a tug-of-war with supporters of tax relief first, with a reasonably moderate payment on the public debt.
> The case for tax relief first was so strongly impressed on the House by such outstanding authorities as the two former Under Secretaries of the Treasury, John W. Hanes and Roswell Magill, that it went ahead and passed its tax-cut bill 6 weeks ago by a vote of virtually 2 to 1.
> Senators who threaten to block tax relief until they know exactly how much expenses are to be trimmed are ignoring the way tax revenues have been increasing under present wartime rates.
> To sum it up: The people want tax relief for all and they want it now. Substantial easing of the tax burden now will contribute to that end. There is no need to know just how much expenses are going to be cut before reducing tax rates.
> Finally, there should be a stop to playing politics with tax relief. Why should it be delayed until election year affords an opportunity for the administration to take the lead in doing something for the taxpayers? Despite the stand by obstructionist Senators and President Truman, let Congress assume its responsibility, perform its plain duty, and earn the thanks of the American people.

Mr. President, in conclusion let me quote from one of the best-known Americans of the twentieth century, as follows:

> Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors because they are a burden on production and are paid through production. If those taxes are excessive, they are reflected in idle factories, in tax-sold farms, and in hordes of hungry people, tramping the streets and seeking jobs in vain.

All Senators remember that statement made in the Presidential campaign of 1932 by the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

With all my heart and soul I endorse that statement and commend it to those who followed his leadership as well as to the followers of Jefferson, Jackson, and Cleveland. I suggest, however, that we practice what he preached rather than preach what he practiced.

Mr. President, the immediate consideration of this bill is of vital importance to the economy of our country. Today is the time to defeat the motion of our distinguished, able, and respected senior Senator from Georgia.

To my colleagues I offer a very old but still sound slogan: "Let us not put off until tomorrow what we can do today."

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, out of order I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of a technical amendment to the pending bill. I believe there is no objection to the amendment from the other side.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there is no objection to the proposed amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLANDERS in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 14, line 23, it is proposed to strike out "entitled under" and insert "entitled, or would be entitled if she were an employee receiving wages, under".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I yield 30 minutes to the senior Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, arguments which are plausible have been made against the reduction of income taxes before we accomplish all we expect to do in reducing Government expenditures and cutting the budget.

To me, those arguments do not seem to be sufficient to delay us in saying to the American people, "Right now we are going to do something which lies within our power to give you new faith and hope in the future; something that will renew your interest in investing capital in businesses which are not perfectly sure of making a profit; something to stimulate research that may produce future earnings and profits, a fair part of which will remain with the producer; something that will let you know that you can afford to take this or that reasonable risk because if you win, you can keep a little more of what you make than you have been keeping under the burdensome taxes that have been laid upon you by your Government."

Mr. President, I go even further, and say that if the present Congress gives evidence of a desire to be thrifty and saving and economical with the people's money, procured through the power of taxation, it may be the beginning of a rebuilding of the moral fiber of the people of the United States.

We should do something right now that will say to the man who is working 6 days a week for the Government, "We are trying to fix it up so that you will only be working 5 days a week for the Government"; something that will say to the man who has been working 5 days a week for the Government, "We are trying to fix it up so that you will only be working 4 days a week for the Government"; something that will say to the man who has been working 4 days a week for the Government, "We are trying to fix it so you will only be working 3 days a week for the Government"; something that says to each one of them all the way down the line, "We are trying to fix it up so that if you do something worth while to promote the welfare of the industrial system of the United States, you will be able to keep enough from what you earn so that you can provide a fund for yourself and your family for rainy days and not have to look forward to nothing but charity or special consideration from the Government and, at that, a Government which has become socialistic."

The prime difference between the United States of America today and many of the formerly great European countries, as well as other nations throughout the world, is that in many of them the people are working 7 days a week for the Government.

The people in those countries are taking what a dictator government tells them they can have. They are doing what that government tells them they must do, and they are enjoying only the small part of freedom which that government tells them they can enjoy, according to the will or whim of the dictator at the particular time.

We have gone far enough away from our American system already so that men are working all the way from part of a day a week to 6 days a week for the Government without compensation.

The proposed tax bill is a move which, in my opinion, is timed not one moment too soon to say to the American people, "We want you to get away from working for the Government as much as you have been. Your Representatives in Congress wish to heed the admonition of Chief Justice John Marshall, when he said, 'The power to tax also contains the power to destroy'."

In the light of the facts which have been set so clearly before the Senate, namely, the opinion of the Congress that the budget can be cut a minimum of four and five-tenths—and I say that advisedly, because that is the decision of the Senate, which is one and one-half billion dollars less than the House figure—billion dollars, the best obtainable opinion that the national income payment in more than reasonable probability will run $170,000,000,000 a year or more, and in the light of the cost of living, I believe we should not delay one moment putting into effect the income-tax reductions and provisions contained in H. R. 1, as amended by the Senate Finance Committee.

Certainly it is foolish to imagine that we shall have a picture on June 10 which is more clear and more definite than the picture we now have to justify taking action then, which some on the other side of the aisle would avoid taking now. I say that because between now and June 10 we shall know more about some things but we may know less about some others.

I would like it far better if we had already cut the appropriations $6,000,000,000. Some of the ablest men in the country who are interested in the welfare of the Nation, have stated that the budget can and should be cut a minimum of $6,000,000,000.

I stated on the Senate floor at the time I discussed the budget that there are two ways for this Nation of ours to become communistic. One is through attack upon us by external forces which have the power to force us to their will—which will and objective are communism. The other is for that external force to sit silently by and watch us spend ourselves into national bankruptcy which would end in some new form of government, and, in my opinion, without doubt, socialism or communism.

America was not built by knowing all the facts in advance, but it was built by able men using the experience of the past as a foundational guide for acts in the future.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] showed very clearly in his speech to the Senate the other day that we have never been guaranteed the facts, nor have we, with absolute accuracy, diagnosed what was in front of us.

We have known a considerable part of the facts and diagnosed them with reasonable accuracy, but I contend that what we shall know on June 10 will not be of any more value to us than what we know today.

The Nation is waiting for some encouraging word from this Congress that we are going to return to the principles of taxation for revenue, and not remain with taxation for the redistribution of property.

Nothing can be more important to the future of this country than to encourage its private citizens to make plans for the future on the basis of keeping a fair share of the reward available as an incentive to accomplishment.

There is no way to wave a magic wand 2 years from today and bring into existence instantly the things which need to be brought into existence by setting the machine to working now.

The very things we may need 2 or 3 years from today to give employment and prevent a depression can only come into existence if the American people know now, and on time, that they will have a legitimate right to expect to be rewarded and keep a substantial part of that reward for accomplishment—if they proceed with their money, genius, and industry to do the things which the people of the United States have always done up to date.

In the June 29, 1946, issue of the London Economist there appeared an article, under the title "The Carrot and the Stick," which presented an interesting analysis of the question of incentive which I have been discussing. The article contains some thought-provoking statements which show how the destruction of incentive through the misuse of taxation in England has brought her to her present dilapidated, unproductive, and humiliated position.

From the knowledge I have gained regarding what makes people work and produce in all countries of the world, I have come to the conclusion that free men work best under an incentive plan which rewards them in proportion to their accomplishment.

In countries where men are not free, they are driven to work by a government which has taken away their freedoms and has the power to make them work up to a certain standard but no further.

In the field of work where men are free to win through the possession of greater ability, more industry, determination and courage, we find the same principles apply as in the athletic field.

Men and women in our schools and colleges spend considerable time and effort in training for athletic events and accomplishment. They wish to excel. Their desire to excel is based upon their desire to win—sometimes a prize, sometimes a cup, sometimes a medal, and at other times only a certificate of accomplishment.

Mr. President, the point I wish to leave with my colleagues is that if some day we should say to all the athletes in our schools and colleges, "We do not want any of you to excel others; we have decided not to permit anyone to win in the athletic events, because it makes some people feel badly when they lose; we want you to train so that you can run faster than the slowest one in the race, or jump higher than the poorest jumper or throw a discus farther than the poorest discus thrower, or play the games of football and baseball better than the poorest player; but in all these events, before the game is over, we are going to see that no one wins; in the 100-yard dash, we intend to stop everyone at the 95-yard line until the slow runners catch up with the fast ones, and then we want you to step through the tape at the same time"—under such circumstances how many athletes would we have, and how long would the competition which means so much in our school and college life continue?

This imaginary plan for the conduct of athletics is the same thing that has been happening in many countries, and it is the same thing that has been happening in many labor unions. It cannot continue if America is to excel in competition with the rest of the world, and if America is to remain a wise and considerate leader of the world.

Mr. President, at this point I wish to pay my compliments and respects to the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], chairman of the Finance Committee, for the clear, concise, and thorough way in which he has placed before the Senate the facts and figures relative to the action which it is proposed that we take in connection with House bill 1, in the amended form in which it has been reported by the Finance Committee. It seems to me that he has covered the situation so clearly that it is unnecessary for me now to discuss the facts and figures which justify our taking the action which the Finance Committee recommends that we take in regard to House bill 1.

I have great respect for the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], and I feel that his judgment is unusually sound. I am positive that he is not actuated by any political objective in joining others to seek delay upon the decision in connection with H. R. 1, as amended by the Senate Finance Committee. I have great respect for the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. I feel that he has done the Nation a great service as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and as the senior member of the minority group of the Senate Finance Committee at the present time.

I agree with both of these distinguished Senators that we must cut Government expenditures. That is vital to our entire future.

I also agree with them that we should make some reasonable payment against the national debt, but I would not start making debt payments of a size which cannot be maintained under an ordinary economy.

It is far better to make a reasonable payment which can be maintained than to make a large payment one year and nothing the next, because that gets one into the habit of thinking that payments do not need to be made.

It is poor policy, and one which the banks and all people in financial institutions dealing with loans do not favor.

Since the President's budget was announced, it has developed clearly to me that the national income payments will be substantially greater than anticipated. We also have the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. John W. Snyder, that the Government sees no recession in sight.

If I were to make a prediction on the volume of business and income payments we will have in this country over the next year or two, I would make it on a higher basis than the committee has chosen as the foundation upon which it is recommending that we proceed with the tax cut.

Nothing should stop this country from doing a tremendous business over the next 2 or 3 years. We can by willful, selfish, improvident acts seriously interfere with the operation of our free-enterprise machine, but that can happen any time. And if we are to use that factor in determining the rate of taxation and the time of reducing taxes it will be in the picture the same on June 10 next, on January 1, 1948, or any other date, as it is now.

Of course, we can tear down our whole system and lead ourselves into a situation where the Government will find it necessary to confiscate property.

A choice between going on and functioning harmoniously in the interest of our great system and the welfare of all, on the one hand, and choosing to shut down the Nation by strikes and discord, on the other, is a choice that lies within our own hands.

If the Government will give to the actual working men and women of this country an even distribution of justice, as accorded to all others, and if the Government will recognize that capital must be protected and encouraged in order to go into action and take the ordinary and extraordinary risks of progress, then I make the prediction that we will find the figure of $170,000,000,000 in national-income payments a most conservative one on which to base tax reductions at this time.

I wish to leave this thought with the Senators and the people of the country: Perhaps the best way to get our Government back into the position it should occupy, if we are to continue our American way which rests upon the free-enterprise system is to encourage our people to work and to say to the Government that they will no longer pay into the Treasury unnecessary sums which cripple the free-enterprise system just to enable the Government temporarily to continue its course of profligate spending.

Mr. President, extravagant and unrestrained spending by Government and its agencies is not what made the United States of America the leader of the world, and it will not keep her the leader of the world. It is not what will make the United States so strong and powerful in the right that no other nation will ever attack her or attempt to destroy her.

Let us always remember that national solvency is our bulwark of defense. If, through waste and profligacy and failure to organize effectively, so as to live within our income and pay our debts, without crushing the individual spirit, the financial strength of this Nation is dissipated, some of the younger Members of Congress will wake up some day to realize that the only effective defense of a capitalistic state against the inroads of socialism and totalitarianism has been destroyed.

Let us remember always that we won two great wars and saved the world for freemen because we were sufficiently strong financially to do the things which were necessary to defeat those who would destroy the rights of freemen.

I have known companies whose directors and management were wasting the stockholders' money through useless and extravagant expenditures. They asked their stockholders to make additional contributions to conduct the business. The stockholders refused, and the public, other than the stockholders, refused to put money into a business so conducted.

When the board of directors and management found that the money was no longer available, they often reverted to a proper conduct of business and cut out all useless expenditures and waste. If they failed to adopt the proper course, the stockholders either got a new set of officers and directors, or the company went on the rocks.

I am not sure but that cutting taxes now may be a blessing in disguise, and may cause us to realize that we cannot have our American free-enterprise system and allow government to continue to waste money in extravagant expenditures, as it has been and still is doing.

I have known many men who have developed extravagant families and have tried to bring them back to live within their income and have met great opposition.

When those men had their income definitely reduced or their salaries cut, they found it necessary to do one of two things: Either define what their family could spend in order to live within their income and thus preserve solvency, or spend themselves into bankruptcy and take advantage of the bankruptcy laws.

We are meeting the same type of opposition every time we endeavor to remain within our income through action by the Congress. Think of the pressure groups. Every time we try to reduce expenditures they come here and say, "Yes, we want Government expenditures cut; we want to get back to operating within our income, but you cannot do it here, because it hits us." Unfortunately, there is no way for the Government of the United States to go under 77–b of the bankruptcy law.

As I see it, if the United States goes broke and cannot keep faith with its obligations to its people, then we can just say good-by to our great American system, and we will find ourselves in the slough of despair with other nations of the world who once were great, before their leaders spent the people into bankruptcy or financial troubles so deep that no one could see a way out, without default and reorganization.

God grant that the American people will soon awaken to the fact that we must live within our income, and each of our citizens must accept within the limit of his ability his individual responsibility if we would remain freemen.

Mr. President, I strongly recommend the passage of H. R. 1, as amended by the Senate Finance Committee, and it is my earnest hope that this Nation will not embark upon a campaign of soak the rich and destroy our leaders, but rather that we will come back to the point where we are all willing to pay the price and accept our share of the burden of getting back to the point where Government occupies its proper place as related to its people, and the people assume their responsibility of being the master of their Government.

I ask why anyone should worry about one person having more than another, provided the opportunities of the system are kept fairly open to all.

Let me remind the Senate that God, in his infinite wisdom, did not make all human beings equal.

In the Bible there is the lesson of the man with one talent, the man with two talents, and the man with five talents; and the Creator held each man responsible only for what he possessed.

Alexander Pope said:

Order is heaven's first law; and this confessed,
Some are, and must be, greater than the rest,
More rich, more wise; but who infers from hence,
That such are happier, shocks all common sense.
Condition, circumstance is not the thing;
Bliss is the same in subject or in king.

In our country, we can say bliss is the same in all of our people, regardless of whether they call a small home their castle, or have the trials and tribulations of living in a large home as a castle.

Our objective is to keep our system so working as to give maximum employment on the basis of a decent living wage, in the hope of producing a maximum of happiness and bliss for all our people.

I am certain I am right when I say that if we sit idly by and let the tax burden destroy the leaders of the Nation and the incentive of those who, under fair conditions, will become leaders, then we are guilty of contributing to the injury and destruction of the rest of the people of the Nation.

I have known thousands of working men and women, and most of them have recognized the vital necessity of having great leaders in business who have the vision and ability to conceive and develop industry in the interest of fuller employment and better working conditions.

Only a very small percentage of the working people I have met have been led into the perverted form of thinking which causes them to reach the unsound conclusion that the man down the line is benefited by destroying the man at the head of the line.

What they want is fair, decent leaders who lead, rather than drive. I have seldom seen a good workman who begrudged a fair leader the success he attained through his leadership.

I wish we would all remember that man can only be a custodian of funds. Our great objective should be to make as many good custodians of funds as is possible. History shows that nearly every man in this country who has produced a great fortune has been a custodian of the funds for only the short period of life in which he possessed them. Most of those men have been inclined to start charities, philanthropies, research foundations, libraries, museums, and so forth, for the benefit of mankind in general.

If time permitted, I could mention, with great credit to most of the families who accumulated those fortunes, the plans they have made for the use of them. For instance, Mr. President, consider the Rockefeller Foundation and the distribution of the Rockefeller fortune. Think of the distribution of the Carnegie fortune. Then remember the cases in which men have been tightfisted and have lacked the important impulse of human interest. But fortunes they accumulated were left to members of their families who have had those human and Christian impulses and have established foundations in the interest of humanity.

Soak the rich means the destruction of the opportunities of the ordinary man to improve himself and raise his standard of living. Soak the rich means the destruction of the opportunities of the poor, as is evidenced by the writings on the walls of history now before our eyes.

Let us stop and listen to the pleas for food, clothing, shelter, and heat that come from a large part of the world, which once was prosperous. Then certainly we must agree that a soak-the-rich policy is a fallacious one.

If we remain unwilling to take cognizance of the results of a soak-the-rich policy, then I imagine the American people must pass through the same bitter experience that the people of the countries of Europe and nations elsewhere have undergone.

Mr. President, soak the rich means the destruction of those who, through genius and energy and hard work, built the foundations upon which our free people in the United States of America have made a better living than has been had by any enslaved people under any government which takes over the freedoms of the people and their pocketbooks in return for a bare living.

Think of England following a course of confiscatory taxation and government control and regulation of the lives of its citizens which led to the point where, I am informed, in 1946 there were less than 50 people in the United Kingdom who had an income of $24,000 a year after taxation, and less than 1,000 people who had an income of $16,000 a year after taxation.

Remember that Germany fixed taxation after World War I, so that no one could keep an income of more than $10,000—and thus enslaved her people.

Look at the wreckage that has come from such a course, and let us ask ourselves whether it is better to follow a fair course of taxation and create a few rich people with millions of people comfortably situated, or to pursue the course of other nations and find ourselves in a position where we might need to borrow five or ten billion dollars, but would have no place to go to get it.

Is it not strange, Mr. President, that this capitalistic Nation, the United States of America, has thrived and survived under our profit-incentive system to the point where in all the world it is the only Nation that, with a debt of $258,000,000,000, still has the heart and the spirit and the material means to succor the stricken people of the world, in the hope of preventing starvation, and teaching them to rise again and accept their full individual responsibility in caring for themselves?

The mainspring that keeps the free competitive enterprise system going is not the original reward received, but that part of the reward which may be kept after taxation.

I have talked with hundreds of young men—able, fine Americans—who are interested in hard work, and who have ability and genius. Nearly every one of them asks the question, "What chance is there for me in the future, if our Government is going to continue to use taxation for the purpose of making a redistribution of earnings and rewarding the slothful and indolent from the fruits produced through the efforts of the diligent, industrious, and thrifty citizens?"

I know there are many people in the United States, perchance in the Congress, who will laugh that off, and will say, "We must provide for all citizens"—never realizing that in providing charity for those who are able to provide for themselves, if they are willing to work, we are doing the people of our Nation as a whole a great injustice.

I know dozens of men who have money or bonds right now and have a good enough standing to be able to get credit, and who would like to embark upon a business; but they see the "Stop—Look—Listen" sign raised by unfair taxation which is not yet cured, and by unfair labor-leader practices not yet cured, and by doubt as to whether our objective in the international field is only to help the world get on its feet, or to enter into international agreements which in leveling off all humanity, will lower our American standards, and thus again break the mainspring of reward for individual initiative and accomplishment.

It is my earnest hope that this great Congress will recognize that millions of people are waiting to hear from the Congress the word that taxation will be used in the future only to produce the revenues which are necessary for the conduct of Government in its proper role of the agent of the people.

Millions of our citizens are waiting to hear the word that although the Government is deeply interested in protecting the fair and just interests of the working men and women of the United States and permitting them to unite to protect their interests by means of unions voluntarily joined, collective bargaining honestly engaged in, and strikes, when necessary, and when called only with due regard to the vital interests and welfare of the people as a whole, nevertheless the Government is determined to become bigger and stronger than any group in our American life, and is prepared to protect the proper interests and welfare of those who make business possible through investment, and that the Government recognizes that a monopoly in the hands of labor leaders is quite as injurious to the welfare of the people as a whole as any other monopoly yet known to man.

Let us ask ourselves whether we would rather have an able man in his private capacity handle the invested capital in business and industry and accept all the responsibilities for his acts so long as he is the owner of such capital or whether we would prefer to have the Government, composed of a group of politicians, with only temporary responsibility, direct the investments of the Nation and through that power, define the benefits and privileges and freedoms of the people.

Mr. President, to my mind, there is only one choice, because I know that the richest man in the country can eat only three meals a day and sometimes not even that. The richest man can sleep in only one bed at a time and often he does not get as peaceful and calm a sleep as the man who carries fewer burdens and cares upon his mind.

As for me, I prefer to take my chances with the American system as it has been for more than 150 years. I prefer to take my chances with the same system that gave me an opportunity to earn a living for myself and my family, without going to the Government for aid. I prefer to take my chances with the system that made America so great that the whole world has had to come to her twice in the last 33 years to ask help in keeping the lamp of freedom burning.

Believing these things, I say that, so far as my mind and judgment run, the time has arrived for the Congress to say to the American people, "We are not going to ask you to work from 1 to 6 days a week for the Government, and we are now going to begin a program which will permit you to enjoy more of the fruits of your own efforts than has been possible under the program you have faced the last few years.

"We, as your representatives in Congress, are going to reduce the expenditures made by Government so as to establish them on a sound and efficient basis. We are going to eliminate, so far as possible, all unnecessary and profligate spending which is opposed to the preservation of the American system of freemen.

"We expect your aid and help based on your understanding as to what has happened thus far, and as to what must happen if we are to stop the Government from absorbing most of the fruits of production, through the expense that has resulted from having the Government leave its own field and enter fields never dreamed of by our forefathers or by those who built this Nation and developed it to the point where we have, knowingly or unknowingly, become the leaders of the world."

Mr. President, the people's representatives cannot alone accomplish what is in front of them. The people must understand that if we are to get back from where we have gone to where we must be, if we are to preserve ourselves as a free people, then each and every group and each and every American citizen will have to bear willingly some of the burdens incident to this reconversion, and show by voice and action that he or she is willing to pay the price incident to the accomplishment desired.

If we are to retain the American system of freemen, then the people must decide to reharness the Government and force their representatives to curtail the vast expenditures which, if continued, will do more to destroy this Nation and make it communistic and socialistic than all the outside armies of the world.

To sum up my position on House bill 1, as amended by the Senate Finance Committee, I say now is the time for action. I predict that all the factors which some Senators may wish to have present in order to completely justify such tax reduction will never be present.

The Appropriations Committees are making progress. I believe that if we encourage them, they will without question reach their objective. The national income will be considerably higher than the figure used by the President in preparing his budget. The fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, will show a surplus, rather than a deficit as calculated in the President's budget. A reduction in income tax does not of necessity mean a reduction in Government revenue; but granting that it probably will mean that, it is necessary for the continuance of the life of the machine that produces the profits from which Government revenue must come.

I cannot join the distinguished gentlemen in this Chamber who have predicted that when we fix the tax rate for the coming year, beginning July 1, 1947, it will be the top rate which must carry through 1949, 1950, and 1951. Since when have the conditions governing taxation changed? I have watched the taxing program for a number of years; and whenever a movement to reduce taxes gains momentum, the Government declares an emergency, and, ipso facto, taxes are raised.

I do agree that it will be pathetic if we have to go back to a point where most of the productive people of the United States are working from 1 to 6 days a week for the Government, thus crushing their hope for future accomplishment. I know of no better way to stop anyone from spending money for unnecessary things, even though those things may be desirable, than to tell him he cannot have the money.

We cannot have our American system that we have enjoyed for 150 years and adopt socialistic and communistic practices.

We cannot have our American system if we are going to break millions of little mainsprings that keep the millions of competent, industrious, and thrifty people in this country going as part of the great national business and industrial machine.

We hear a thousand cries raised against anyone who has tried to cut expenses in an effort to enable us to live within our income.

We hear the cry of national safety.

We hear the cry that certain subsidies which never were given until in recent years must be maintained.

We hear the cry that we must make more and more loans, which should be called gifts, to nations abroad.

In my opinion, the way to have national safety is to keep out of other people's business and to function cooperatively with the world under the United Nations.

The way to have long-time national safety is to stop spending our whole substance in war materials and maintaining an unnecessary armed force at a time when the whole world is too weak to have another war, unless we help to make one.

The way to have national safety is to get ourselves financially strong by paying the national debt so that we shall have the necessary financial strength if and when the United Nations or some other agency fails to keep the peace of the world.

All we have got to do to destroy ourselves is to continue spending excess money for the maintenance of armed forces throughout the world for 10 or 15 years, and go ahead with crushing taxation that destroys the energy and initiative of our people. We then shall find ourselves right where all the other nations of the world who have followed these processes find themselves today—in the junk heap or so close to it that even we are worried about them.

I had thought in the beginning that we must have an agreement between the House and the Senate on the budget ceiling, but certainly when the House fixes a budget reduction of $6,000,000,000 and the Senate fixes a budget reduction of $4,500,000,000, and we take the lower of the two, from my point of view the argument to defer taxes on that basis is of no value.

I agree that I would like to see all the budget reductions accomplished, but let us remember that there is leeway in the picture on account of the increased national income payments, and, also, in my opinion, the budget reduction recommended by the Senate will be accomplished.

It will be accomplished more readily and more definitely if we deal fairly with the people on their income-tax payments so that they may know the benefits will begin accruing to them as of July 1, 1947.

Mr. President, it is my considered opinion and judgment that H. R. 1, as amended by the Senate Finance Committee, is a proper step for the people's representatives to take at the present time in the interest of the people. I say "proper step" because it is a step toward correcting the evil of our having our citizens work more of their time for the Government than they do for themselves and their families.

There are dozens and dozens of injustices in our present tax law, and that whole subject must be properly analyzed and considered in the light of hearings to be held in the interest of permitting the people to express before their representatives their own opinions as to the course future taxation should follow.

No man knows the future of the world, but it is my earnest hope that we will take this action in recognition of the fact that we have a solemn duty to the people to lower taxation; that we have a solemn duty to the people to get rid of useless, unnecessary, and profligate expenditures by Government; and that the people have a right to look to us at this time to bring Government back from where it has gone since the last two world wars, and reharness their Government so that the people may be its masters rather than its slaves.

I shall vote for H. R. 1 as it is in the hope of making some contribution toward correcting other tax evils as rapidly as it is possible to consider the subject fairly in the interest of all.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I yield 15 minutes to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield to enable me to present a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall, but I fear that I shall have a reservation.

Mr. WHITE. I think there will be no offense in what I suggest. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy may be permitted to sit this afternoon with that committee during the session of the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, before the request is granted, I must again call attention to the fact that the slim attendance now upon the floor of the Senate is due solely to the fact that requests such as the majority leader has just now made have been made on behalf of numerous committees. At this moment the Committee on Appropriations has been called to assemble to consider the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill. I am a member of that committee and there are several statements I should make to the committee upon that bill, but I feel that, in justice to myself, I should be on the floor of the Senate to make some observations on the pending measure, the most important of all bills.

Requests of the kind just made should not be granted while a measure of this tremendous importance, proposing a reduction in taxes while our national debt is at the highest pinnacle ever reached, is pending, but when these important bills are under discussion, the Republicans, secure in the majority which they have, knowing that the votes will be cast regardless of what the arguments may be or what reason and logic may be, are quite willing to have the Chamber emptied into the committee rooms, where the appropriation bills are being rushed through to make the showing upon which the reduction of taxes will be based.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator does not object.

Mr. WHITE. Has the Senator objected to my request?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have not objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Maine is granted.

TAX REDUCTION NOW IS RECKLESS PROPOSAL

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion the majority party, in bringing in the tax bill before us, have brought in one of the most reckless legislative proposals ever made in the history of the Government of the United States. If, at a time when our national debt approximates $260,000,000,000, a figure which no one can imagine, they are willing to cut taxes before they know what our obligations will be, before they know whether or not it will be possible to raise the revenue needed to operate the Government, it seems to me that is a policy of such obvious folly that no serious person could undertake to support it for a moment.

Yet it is supported. Men of intelligence, of ability, yes, of patriotism, come here and say, upon the basis of guesses—and they acknowledge that all they can offer is guesses—that the United States may run the risk of so reducing its revenue that it will be unable to carry on the necessary functions of government, and unable to reduce the national debt.

SECRETARY MELLON FOR DEBT REDUCTION

I have remembered, during the pendency of this measure, that long before I became a Member of the Senate, when I was practicing law out in Cheyenne, Wyo., during the administrations of Harding and Coolidge, the Secretary of the Treasury at that time, Andrew W. Mellon, seemed to be of the opinion that surplus Federal revenues should be used for reduction of the debt, rather than for reduction of taxes. So last Saturday I undertook to find out what Mr. Mellon had said, and I have here several very interesting quotations from that great Republican Secretary of the Treasury. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who sits beside me, has remarked sotto voce that Mr. Mellon was generally termed by the Republicans of that time as "the greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton."

What made him great, Mr. President? Was it because he believed that debt reduction was the prime consideration of sound finance, or was it because he was willing recklessly to cut the taxes without reducing the debt?

In 1924 Mr. Mellon published a book entitled "Taxation: The People's Business." On page 30 of that book I find an interesting paragraph I wish to read, and I ask that the members of the majority who are present here this afternoon pay some attention to the words of Andrew Mellon, if not to the exhortations of the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], whose motion we are debating.

Said Mr. Mellon:

> Many people cling to the old policy that debt retirement is bad for business, being the reverse of inflated conditions accompanying vast borrowings. They hold that new borrowings with reduced taxes are preferable to higher taxes with reduced debts. But a moment's reflection will convince anyone—

I do not suppose the Secretary of the Treasury in the Harding-Coolidge administrations was including in that word the gentlemen of the majority who now constitute the ruling power in the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. In those days they used to listen to Mellon. In these days they want to cut a melon. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator has produced the word to represent the conditions that exist. We are cutting a melon before the melon is grown.

Secretary Mellon proceeded:

> A moment's reflection will convince anyone that prosperity cannot come from continued plunging into debt. The present condition of Germany is the best proof of the dangers of inflation and financial pyramiding. As a matter of fact, orderly debt retirement out of surplus revenues is better calculated to restore prosperity, for the debt is retired by taxes paid in for the purpose and the money retained for the payment of such taxes is saved from being dissipated in useless expenditure.

TO SAVE MONEY, REDUCE THE DEBT

Mr. President, it would be difficult to condense in a shorter paragraph the correct philosophy which ought to be followed by the Congress at this moment. Every possible economy in the expenditure of the public funds ought to be adopted; but, before undertaking to reduce our revenue, we should undertake first to apply every possible dollar of surplus upon the reduction of the national debt. Then, and only then, should we begin to think of cutting the melon, as the Senator from Maryland has so well said.

The Republican Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, from whose book I have quoted, took that position in several instances. In his annual report for 1924 he had this to say:

> Sound Government finance, including a rigid debt-paying policy, is absolutely indispensable to the best interests of business and private finance.

Mr. President, I undertake to say that those businessmen, if any there be, who are supporting the pending proposal to reduce taxes, before we know what our expenditures must be, are literally cutting their own financial throats. At the very moment when the forces of totalitarianism are spreading all over the world the argument that capitalism is too greedy to preserve itself, there are those who are so short-sighted that they are willing to endanger the solvency of the United States by reducing revenue before they know they can have a balanced budget. After 18 years, Mr. President, we stand within scarcely more than 30 days of the first balanced budget in all that time; and the majority not only proposes to prevent the balancing of the budget by reducing revenues, but it is unwilling even to postpone the consideration of the bill until the 10th of June, when it will be possible for the Senate to have a better idea of what the appropriation bills will be.

Private credit—

Said Mr. Mellon—

> cannot continue to flourish if the public credit is in a state of chaos. Therefore the debt-paying program has been the only consistent policy to follow. The necessity for such a policy is obvious when it is realized that this country came out of the war with a debt at its peak in 1919 equal approximately to the total expenditures of the government during its entire existence prior to 1917.

O Mr. President, if Secretary of the Treasury Mellon could so characterize the puny debt of $26,000,000,000, in 1919, what would he say now if he had in contemplation the towering debt of $260,000,000,000? Would he be one to urge the reduction of taxes rather than the reduction of the debt? Let me go on reading from the Secretary:

> The debt per capita has risen from $12 at the beginning of the war to about $250 at the middle of 1919.

What is the per capita debt now? It is over $2,000 for every man, woman, and child in the United States—and yet we are asked to temporize with a condition of that kind. Going on with the views of Mr. Mellon:

> Interest alone on this debt has been about a quarter of a billion dollars more each year since 1920 than the total Government expenditures during the fiscal year 1916, the last prewar year.

Every single one of these statements made by Secretary Mellon, in alarm, in amazement, is now absolutely dwarfed by the statements which can be made at this moment about the magnitude of the debt and the cost of carrying it. Let no one forget that this huge national debt of almost $260,000,000,000 is not a debt that was incurred by "Government spending." It was the debt that was incurred by unanimous action of the Congress of the United States, Democrats and Republicans voting together to win the war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall ask the Senator if I may have a few more moments.

Mr. GEORGE. I will gladly yield 5 or 10 minutes more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If it were desirable that we should pay high taxes during the war, in order to pay for it, then it is equally desirable to urge payment of the debt now, for the debt we now carry no less than the taxes we have already contributed constitutes payment for the war.

Let me return to the advice of Secretary Mellon:

THE NATIONAL DEBT IS A MORTGAGE ON THE NATIONAL WEALTH

The nation which does not follow a policy of paying its debts—

I commend this to the attention of all Senators—

The nation which does not follow a policy of paying its debts, but allows them to accumulate, may be compared to an individual who follows a similar course. It is a sign of debility and denotes the absence of essential vigor and foresight. The public debt is a mortgage or lien upon national wealth, and unless the country pursues a policy of paying off this mortgage, it is bound to become more and more burdensome as time goes on. Debt reduction, in fact, is the best method of bringing about tax reduction. Aside from gradually refunding at lower rates of interest, it is the only method of reducing the heavy annual interest charges.

Secretary Mellon was alarmed at the thought of interest charges running about $250,000,000 a year. Now, we have interest charges running at the rate of $5,000,000,000 a year; which is more than the entire cost of Congress, of the White House, of the Library of Congress, all the Federal courts, and most of the civil functions of the Government. But, Mr. President, do we understand that the whole capitalistic system stands now upon the solvency of the United States of America? Unless we preserve the solvency of this Government, capitalism will perish from the earth. I undertake to show that all business and industry relies now upon a fiscal policy that will place debt retirement first.

As to the outstanding debt, the actual figure as of March 31, 1947, according to the report which I requested from the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, was $256,000,000,000. Of this amount, $65,000,000,000 was held by individuals, including partnerships and personal trusts. Of this latter amount some $50,000,000,000 was represented by E, F, and G bonds. Every one of those bonds is a "demand payment" upon the Treasury of the United States. Everyone of those bonds may be presented at any time and payment must be made at the face value. The time will come, as the result of the policy which the majority is initiating here, when legislation will be introduced in the Congress of the United States to permit those bonds to be sold at a discount, and then the veterans of World War II will be forced to lose on their investment, as did the veterans of World War I, when they sold their bonds as low as 80 cents on the dollar.

Insurance companies hold $25,000,000,000 of these outstanding bonds. Mr. President, the 36 largest legal reserve life insurance companies in America own more than 80 percent of all the assets of all life insurance companies, and they have reported that 47 percent of their assets are invested in Government bonds. I say, Mr. President, every life insurance policy in America rests upon the solvency of United States bonds. You tamper with the solvency of these bonds and you tamper with every life insurance policy that is outstanding.

Corporations and other associations have $23,000,000,000 of Government bonds. State and local governments have six and one-half billion dollars of Government bonds, and Federal agencies and trust funds have thirty-one and one-half billion dollars of Government bonds.

Let us now look at the picture with respect to bank holdings. Commercial banks own seventy and one-half billion dollars of Government bonds. Every person who has any knowledge at all about finance knows that these bonds held by commercial banks are the creators of money, they are the creators of demand, they are the bases of inflation, and if there is any one thing that the Government should do it is to concentrate all its authority and all its efforts upon the payment as rapidly as possible of these bonds held by commercial banks and trust companies. Other bonds can be more safely carried, but in the interest of reducing the cost of living, the holdings of commercial banks should be reduced.

The Federal Reserve banks own twenty-two and one-half billion dollars of Government bonds.

In other words, there is a total of $93,000,000,000 which is so held that it constitutes a constant threat of inflation.

Mr. President, if we add together the bonds held by the commercial banks, by the mutual savings banks, by the Federal Reserve banks, and by the insurance companies, we find that 57½ percent of all the bonds the United States has issued are being held by such institutions. Yet here it is lightly said, "Forget the bonds. Let that matter pass. We will reduce the taxes."

TAX BILL FAVORS VERY WEALTHY

Mr. President, I undertake to say that the tax reduction which is proposed here is a reduction which is designed to lower the tax burden on the very wealthy at the expense of those at the bottom of the economic scale. I have before me a table based upon the table placed in the RECORD the other day by the chairman of the Finance Committee in which he showed the amount of spendable income for married persons with no dependents in the various income groups, and I have added two columns, one showing the amount of money saved for every $1,000 of income, and the other the percentage of spendable income which is saved by this bill. I ask unanimous consent that the table may be printed in the RECORD without my reading it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

[Computed from table on p. 5589, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 21, 1947]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wish to call the attention of Senators who are listening to this talk that on the first thousand dollars of income the little people of the land are given a saving of $9.50. The $10,000 income man receives, not a saving of $9.50 per thousand dollars, but of $43.50 per thousand dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield me further time?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield 5 minutes more to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If we go to the $15,000 a year income, we find that the saving per thousand dollars under the pending tax bill is upped again to $53.93. When we come to $100,000 income per year, the saving under the pending bill is $118.44 per thousand dollars of income.

Mr. President, why should we undertake to pass a tax bill which will save $118 per thousand dollars for the income recipient in the $100,000 bracket and give only $9.50 per thousand to the little fellow at the bottom of the scale?

I now turn to page 37 of the report filed by the Finance Committee, and find this very interesting information. The total number of taxpayers in the United States receiving less than $5,000 a year is 47,723,103. They constitute 96.08 percent of all the taxpayers in the United States.

The taxpayers who are receiving over $5 000 a year number 1,948,060. They constitute 3.92 percent of all the taxpayers. To this 3.92 percent to this minority, 1,948,060 high-income recipients, out of a total of 49,671,163 taxpayers, the Finance Committee bill makes a gift of 36 percent of all of the reduction which is granted. Less than 4 percent of the taxpayers get 36 percent of the benefit.

Mr. President, if we were to take the little group which receives between $4,000 and $5,000 a year, we find, according to the report of the Finance Committee, that they constitute 1,909,500 persons, almost the same number as those in all the brackets from $5,000 to $1,000,000 and over a year, those above the $5,000 line of demarkation.

To the 1,948,000 above $5,000 a year it is proposed that there shall be a tax reduction of 36 percent. To the 1,909,000 receiving between $4,000 and $5,000 a year it is proposed that there shall be a tax reduction of only 6.03 percent.

Are we speaking of equality of obligation under the law? Are we speaking of equality of benefits? Are we speaking of a solvent government when we undertake to say, as we shall say if we vote against the motion of the Senator from Georgia, that it is so important to grant these reductions of taxes to those who are receiving more than $5,000 a year that we shall not be willing to wait until the 10th of June to find out how much the Government of the United States will have to spend to maintain the capitalistic system?

I have no hesitation in saying that if we pass this bill we shall be doing more to jeopardize the private economy than anything Hitler and Mussolini ever did or Stalin even thought of doing.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for 10 minutes?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the Senate has never laid down any written rule regarding pairs upon legislation to be voted upon in this body. It is and always has been a personal matter between individual Senators. Most of the past records of the United States Senate clearly indicate that the pairing of Senators upon important measures has been agreed upon through senatorial courtesy which held high the tradition and dignity of what many of us like to call the greatest deliberative body in the world. In the old days we found Senators exercising with charity and tolerance their rights of pairing. That was particularly true when a Senator was ill or when there was serious illness in his family.

Let me turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 16, 1920, and enlighten Members of the present-day Senate as to what was done at that time in connection with one of the most important votes that any Senator had cast in this body up to that time.

The late distinguished Senator Lodge of Massachusetts said:

Mr. President, I had intended when I called up the treaty this morning to say a word in regard to pairs. On a question of such great moment as the Treaty of Peace I think no one can wish that it should turn on any loss of votes because of the absence of Senators or because of any juggling of pairs.

Think of it, Mr. President. In 1920 the United States Senate was discussing the treaty of peace, one of the greatest issues that had ever been before this body in the experience of any Senator who was serving at that time.

I think that we should take the same course that was adopted with reference to the suffrage amendment—

Another tremendous issue before the United States Senate and the country—when the Senate, with the traditional character for which it was noted, agreed at that time not to juggle pairs and to have an honest expression of Senators in the event that any Senator should be absent because of personal illness or because there was illness in his family.

I think that we should take the same course that was adopted with reference to the suffrage amendment, when there was an understanding on both sides that a pair should be arranged for any Senator who was absent on account of personal illness or on account of illness or death in his family. I merely mention this now, because I think the whips on both sides who are entrusted with this matter should see to it that some such arrangement is made. I think that is only fair and proper.

Those words were spoken by the late Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts.

I read further from the RECORD of that date:

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question. Of course, the Senator means equal pairs upon the question of the adoption of reservations and amendments?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, and double pairs upon the question of ratification.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When it comes to the final question of ratification pairs would be arranged on a basis of 2 to 1.

Mr. LODGE. They would be arranged upon a basis of 2 to 1, of course. That is the understanding I wish to have. I merely mention it now, because I think it is important that that should be understood. None of us wish to reach a decision of this question by any accident.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest that the Senator ask unanimous consent to the effect he has indicated.

Mr. LODGE. Pairs are outside the rules, and I do not think I have any right to ask unanimous consent. I think all I can do is to state the understanding which I hope will be arrived at.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have sent word to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Hitchcock], and I expect him here in a moment. If the Senator cares to present the matter again, I suggest that he do so when the Senator from Nebraska returns.

Mr. LODGE. Pairs are wholly outside the rules, as I have stated. Pairing is a matter between individual Senators.

Mr. KING. I appreciate that fact, but I should be glad to see some satisfactory arrangement made.

Mr. LODGE. I have no doubt the matter will be arranged as it was in the case of the suffrage amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have no doubt any such arrangement will be carried out on this side.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wanted to make the suggestion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am sure we will be glad to see that the final action represents the thought of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely.

Here we have an interesting and cordial colloquy between Republicans and Democrats, which can well be placed in the category of true statesmanship when it comes to voting upon questions such as we have before the Senate today. It demonstrates the outstanding character and bigness of Senators in those days upon a question of human relationships.

Mr. President, in the early days of my experience in the Senate an incident occurred which struck me forcibly. I had been a Member of the Senate for approximately 12 months, when a very close friend of mine passed away in Illinois. We were debating the Hatch bill. It will be recalled that at one time we almost defeated it, by a vote of 44 to 46. I was against the Hatch bill at that time, and still am, so far as that is concerned. But I did not wish to leave, after participating actively in the debate, unless I could obtain a live pair.

From whom do Senators think I obtained that pair? From the late distinguished, lovable Charles McNary, one of the greatest leaders ever to serve in the Senate. I went to Senator McNary and said, "Senator, a close friend of mine has suddenly passed away. I should like to obtain a live pair. I do not want to run out on my colleagues, because I have been very active in this debate." Senator McNary said to me, "Scott, your place is at the side of your dead friend in Illinois. You go and attend the funeral, and I will give you a live pair."

Mr. President, that incident endeared me forever to Charles McNary. It demonstrated character and bigness, so necessary for sound statesmanship. It was a senatorial courtesy that I shall never forget. Such courtesy and chivalry should again find a place in the Senate.

Mr. President, today there are two distinguished Senators who sit on this side of the aisle who are ill. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] was compelled by doctor's orders to go to Arizona for the benefit of his health. Mr. President, the minority are entirely helpless in getting a pair from some Member on the other side of the aisle for that outstanding man, a man who is sick. We are told, "Yes; we will pair with you providing the leadership releases us."

I went to the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] in connection with the matter. I knew that he was a close friend of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON]. I said to him, "Will you pair with the Senator from Louisiana on this motion?" He replied, "I should be glad to pair with him, because he is one of the finest men in the Senate; but you will have to see the whip, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. If he will release me, I will pair with the Senator from Louisiana."

There is another Senator on this side of the aisle who is ill, that great leader from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who has served longer in the Senate than any living man. He is now in the hospital, stricken only day before yesterday. He does not want to leave the hospital in his present condition. His doctors oppose his leaving. One would believe that under such dire circumstances we might get a pair for him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. LUCAS. May I have two additional minutes?

Mr. GEORGE. My time is getting a little short. I will yield one additional minute.

Mr. LUCAS. There is not a chance. They will not recognize the fact that this man, ill as he is, is entitled to a pair by all decency and courtesy, so far as the unwritten rules of the Senate are concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator recall any time during the period when we were in the emergency when any such attitude was taken on this side toward requests for a pair on the part of any Senator on the other side?

Mr. LUCAS. I have never known of it. I made inquiry today on that very point in order to ascertain whether we had taken the same position, but I could find no such position as that which is now being taken by the majority upon practically every major or minor question which arises. Here is a matter of postponement of a measure for some 20 days, and we cannot get a pair in connection with it. But the late Senator Lodge was willing to give pairs when the Treaty of Versailles was being considered by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired. To whom do the Senators in charge of the floor yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] for 30 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, regarding the question of pairs, I have been here for a good many years and I have never seen any acknowledged plan or rule regarding pairs. I should say that today if a sufficient number of Republicans to change the situation were too ill to attend the Senate, we could not get a pair from the Democrats for love or money. They have never given us pairs under those circumstances, and they never will. The Senator goes back to 1920 in order to find an instance in which the question has ever before been raised.

There is before the Senate a question which is essentially and in effect a question of budgeting revenue. It is a question of degree. The actual question, so far as we can determine it is, What will be the receipts of the Government and what will be its expenditures in the fiscal year beginning the 1st of July and running until July 1, 1948?

The making of a budget is always an uncertain process, because no one can predict ahead for 18 months. We have to take the best figures we can obtain; we have to take figures from the actuaries; we have to make various assumptions. We have always done that, every year. The Democrats are greatly concerned that in some way we are estimating figures which do not exist and, therefore, the budget which we in effect are presenting here may possibly not be balanced.

Mr. President, for 15 years the Democrats have failed to balance the budget in any year. Not only that, but I do not remember a time when they ever presented a balanced budget to the Congress of the United States. I do not remember a time when they ever provided sufficient taxes to meet the expenditures which they contemplated. Certainly we have not had in 15 years a balanced budget, and we have always had some difficulty in estimating, which we have at the present time and always will have. We have made estimates, and the figures are approximately these: The estimated receipts on which our budget is based are $41,400,000,000. Those estimates were made by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, because the Treasury refuses to make any estimate more recent than the one of 8 months ago when conditions were very different. Those figures are based on conservative estimates. They are estimating a national income of $6,000,000,000 less than the rate at which we are now operating, so they allow for the tapering off of sales and activity. There may be, perhaps, an extraordinary condition if we continue going at the same rate as today. The budget receipts represent $42,800,000,000. We will assume the amount to be $41,400,000,000. The estimate of expenses is $37,500,000,000, or approximately $4,000,000,000 less than the estimated receipts, without any budget cuts whatsoever. If we cut the budget $4,500,000,000, as Senators say they wish to do, we will have a total expense of $33,000,000,000 and will have a surplus of $8,500,000,000.

What does the bill propose to do? It proposes to take $3,200,000,000 of that sum and apply it to the reduction of taxes. It proposes, under those circumstances, that we leave more than $5,000,000,000 for contingencies and for application to the public debt.

It is suggested that those figures may not be correct; that we may not get $41,400,000,000. I have already stated that we have allowed for a considerable recession. Much of the revenue is already on the books. The corporation taxes for this year and a large part of the corporation taxes for next year, reflecting the income for the previous year, are already set and cannot be reduced. Even if we should have a depression, there is usually a very slow recession; and in order to make any substantial difference in the figures the national income would have to go down to approximately $150,000,000,000. We would have to have a sudden and extreme depression in order to prevent the realization of the income figures which have been placed before the Senate. Of course, a budget may always be upset in any year if there is a sudden and severe depression. But the administration certainly does not expect that. It was testified that they look forward to no depression of any kind. They testified that in their opinion there would not even be a recession. Certainly we are justified in making that assumption, based upon receipts. Even if we fall short, Mr. President, a billion dollars in receipts and reach a total of $4,500,000,000, we still can make this tax reduction and have a surplus of over $3,000,000,000 to apply on the public debt.

Those, roughly speaking, are the figures.

Mr. President, it seems to me very clear that tax reduction is a necessary end in itself, to bring about a stable economy in the United States and to enable us to maintain an economic activity which means employment and full prosperity. Think of the burden of taxation. It is made up of approximately $40,000,000,000 of taxes by the Federal Government and approximately $10,000,000,000 of State and local taxes; a total of approximately $50,000,000,000, bearing down on the people of the United States and discouraging and stifling the economy of the United States. It does not particularly affect us when things are on the way up; but the moment they start down we feel the crushing burden which is imposed. It is about 30 percent of the national income. That means that on the average, directly and indirectly, we are paying taxes in such an amount that we work 3 days out of every 10 for the United States Government and 7 days for ourselves. I do not know how high this tax burden can go and still permit a free economy to be maintained such as that upon which we rely in the United States.

Obviously, Mr. President, taxation cannot amount to 100 percent of the national income, or we shall have no free economy left. One hundred percent taxation means the complete socialization of all the activities of the Nation. There is a point at which taxation becomes so high that we can no longer prevent it from destroying our present economic system. A burden of taxation as heavy as 30 percent of the national income discourages every person and every industry, and, sooner or later, industries are unable to do what they are supposed to do, and so the Government has to take them over. We almost reached that point in the case of the railroads during the war and during the depression.

Mr. President, once the Government takes over industries, it has to distribute the burden among the people. The very tax burden itself is a discouragement to the continuation of the free-enterprise system, and a heavy tax burden gradually forces the Government into a greater and greater degree of socialization, until finally complete socialization is reached. If I wanted to socialize the United States, I think the easiest way to do it would be gradually to increase Government activities and taxation until the Government itself was operating all the industries and all the affairs of the Nation. But if that process were followed indefinitely, with a constant increase in taxation, finally the Government itself could not survive. I do not know where that point is. Perhaps it is when taxation reaches 50 percent of the national income. But I say that when taxation reaches 30 percent of the national income, we are reaching a dangerous point, and we should be sincerely and seriously concerned with the reduction of the taxes paid by the people of the United States, who now have a tax burden of $40,000,000,000 a year as apparently a permanent burden on the economy we are trying to maintain.

Furthermore, Mr. President, such a tax burden is a crushing load on the individuals in the lower-income groups. As the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] pointed out, there are approximately 1,000,000 persons in the United States who have an income of less than $1,000 a year. Nevertheless, the tax burdens are heavy on those who have small incomes. For example, a school teacher who receives $1,000 a year must pay an income tax of $90. It certainly is difficult enough to live on $1,000 a year under present circumstances in the United States, even without having to pay any tax. A married couple with an income of $1,500 must pay $90 in income taxes. A single woman with an income of $1,500 must pay an income tax of $190. A married couple with two children, and having an income of $3,000, must pay an income tax of $190. A married couple with no dependents, and having a gross income of $5,000, must pay almost $800 in income taxes. Certainly taxation at those rates constitutes a tremendously severe burden on the people at the bottom of the income scale.

Moreover, Mr. President, to a certain extent the taxpayers bear the burden, and to a certain extent they do not bear it. To a certain extent, employers, seeing how extremely difficult it is for persons in the lower income groups to live on their net incomes, proceed to increase wages and salaries, in order to take care of that problem, and the result is an increase in the costs of manufacturing and other enterprises. Such increased costs bring about increased prices, and increased prices lead to inflation. In other words, we pay, by inflation, for the increases in wages and salaries which sooner or later result from increased taxes. High taxes are all very well for a while, but soon inflation comes, for inflation has always been the escape from overdrastic taxation. So, in effect, we are merely inflating the economy and collecting taxes from inflated incomes.

In the second place, Mr. President, in such circumstances the burden on the middle-income groups is so great that in the case of individual businessmen or corporation executives, or even writers and creative artists, their income after they have worked the first 6 months of a tax year is about all the income they are interested in, for whatever they earn, in addition, during the remainder of the year, is largely taken by the Government in the form of income taxes. The result is that they are not interested in doing any more work and in making any more income in that year because the Government will take anywhere from 60 percent to 85 percent of whatever else they may earn.

An additional result is that people refuse to invest money in risk enterprises; for when income taxes are so high investors take the position that it is much better for them to receive from 1 percent to 1½ percent on tax-exempt municipal bonds, rather than to invest their money in new enterprises in which their chances of receiving an income may be only 50–50. So they are not willing to invest their funds in such enterprises, because they know that if they gain as a result of investing their money in risk enterprises the Government will take the greater proportion of what they gain, but if they lose they will lose their own money. So they find that it is better for them to accept a low income from municipal bonds or similar securities, rather than to attempt to make money by investing in new enterprises. However, all of us realize that the establishment of new enterprises is necessary to the maintenance of our economy; it is necessary if we are to maintain full employment in view of the constantly improved techniques and labor-saving devices. Under present-day standards and techniques it is essential that new enterprises, with their additional hundreds of thousands of employees, be continually established. Obviously it is necessary that the investment of money in them be encouraged. Of course, it is easy enough to persuade investors to invest their money in bonds; but it is essential that investors be persuaded to invest their money in risk enterprises. However, under the present tax system, that is not done. So, Mr. President, I say that the reduction of taxes is a desirable end in itself and is essential if we are to maintain the prosperity of the United States and the full employment in which we are interested. No one could be more concerned about that than I am.

I am somewhat amused to hear the Democrats protest about the necessity of reducing the national debt. The national debt was $22,000,000,000 when the Democrats came into office, and now that they have been in office it is $260,000,000,000. The Democrats have never before shown any concern about the size of the national debt or about increasing the national debt, but now they are greatly concerned about decreasing the national debt this year. I myself think I would accept a $2,000,000,000-a-year reduction in the national debt, and I would be willing to have in the budget an item for debt reduction in that amount. Nevertheless, we must realize that when $2,000,000,000 is taken from the people's incomes and is used to reduce the national debt, the purchasing power of the people is reduced to that extent. In that way we are already reducing the purchasing power by a considerable sum.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted at this point in the RECORD a table which shows that the taxes which are collected for the unemployment trust fund and for the Federal old-age and survivors' insurance fund, the veterans' life insurance funds, and the other funds of that nature now amount to $5,587,298,291 altogether, whereas the expenditures from those funds amount to only $2,780,473,038, leaving net accumulations of $2,806,825,253 in the trust accounts. The result is that even when the budget is balanced, approximately $2,800,000,000 is taken from the people's savings and is put away, not returned to them, and thus their purchasing power is reduced to that extent.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. TAFT. So, Mr. President, when we reduce the national debt $2,000,000,000, we reduce the actual purchasing power of the people a corresponding amount. I think we should reduce the debt; but if we reduce it by too large a sum at one time, we shall reduce the purchasing power of the people to such an extent as to actually damage the economy and actually cut down the ability of the people to purchase.

Mr. President, the President said in his economic report:

> Maximum production and employment this year would yield a substantial increase in the available supply of consumers' goods and services, especially in the area of durable goods. This requires higher real purchasing power to take the goods off the market. If price and wage adjustments are not made, and made soon enough, there is danger that consuming buying will falter.

Certainly, Mr. President, if we are going to apply to the national debt a surplus of $8,000,000,000, we shall cut down purchasing power to a tremendous extent. At the moment, purchasing power is perhaps still on the increase, but it shows signs of having reached a peak. If we take that much purchasing power away from the people during the next 12 months, we may easily contribute to turning the present situation into a recession and a depression. It is obvious that we cannot safely reduce the national debt too rapidly.

The actual existence of a national debt is not necessarily a threat to the people of the United States. The present debt involves an interest charge of approximately $5,000,000,000 a year. If we pay off $10,000,000,000 of the debt, we reduce the expenditures for interest on the debt by approximately $200,000,000, on the basis of a 2 percent interest charge. Of course, it is important to keep reducing the national debt, so that Government credit may be good and there may be a constant movement toward a lower total interest charge on the national debt. But the very existence of the national debt does not threaten the security of the United States, and I do not think anyone in the United States really thinks so today. Of course, we want to reduce the debt, but if at the moment I had my choice between the two, I would prefer tax reduction to debt reduction. As a matter of fact, we are in the fortunate situation that we can have both during the coming year.

Mr. President, it is said that we have not yet cut expenses, that we do not know what the expenses will be. I would only say, in reply, that the Budget of the United States is an extremely complicated document, made up not only of the department appropriations, about which we know, but it is made up of all sorts of Government corporation accounts and cross accounts, with a net figure between the expenditures and receipts, but it is a figure which has many tricks in it.

Let us take, for instance, the Government corporation figures, $440,000,000 for RFC, purchase of mortgages on veterans' homes, as an expenditure of the budget. The mortgages are perfectly good mortgages. The RFC never has counted purchase of mortgages as an expenditure. I do not know why they are in this budget. There is no doubt some reason, some statutory requirement. But there is $440,000,000 of possible savings which can be taken out, and the arguments as to what the expenditures of the Government are going to be will go on for months after the Congress adjourns. We will not know any more about them 30 days from now than we know now. We can tell the trend, and that is all. So far as we can tell from the trend, and figuring the appropriation bills which have passed and are now pending in the Congress, we are accomplishing the goal of keeping expenditures four and a half billion below the budget estimates.

There are various executive figures in the carry-over. I can find no one who can give any definite answer as to what those figures are.

The total figure of $37,500,000,000 is not all a question of appropriations. Only about thirty-two and a half billion is concerned with appropriations. Five billion is from last year's appropriations. Those are also being worked on.

So far as I can judge, the proposed cut from the Army and Navy is about what I estimated, about 10 percent of the total figure. The total bill for the armed services was about $11,200,000,000, and with the rescissions, and cuts in appropriations, I estimate we will save about $1,200,000,000, just about 10 percent of the total amount that was requested.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has made quite a study of the budget in connection with the tax bill, and I wonder if he would mind relating to the Senate the items which make up $4,500,000,000 reduction in expenditures.

Mr. TAFT. I have four pages of the items which I made at the beginning of this session, and which I should be glad to show the Senator, but I can hardly go into them all in detail at this time. At that time I reached a total of about $5,800,000,000, and after deducting items which I think will not be realized, I brought my figure down to about $4,800,000,000.

The largest item was the Army appropriation, to which I referred. My estimate for the agricultural appropriation was $150,000,000, less saving than in the bill which has just been proposed in the House, and I imagine we will have to put back some of that.

The estimate in the case of Federal Security was of a saving of about $50,000,000 less than I estimated.

As to the Navy, we estimated four hundred and fifty-one million. The proposed cut is three hundred and seventy-eight million, but that does not include the rescissions from carry-over last year, so the estimate will be approximately reached.

For the Labor Department I figured savings of only $5,000,000. There has been been proposed $24,000,000.

For the State Department the figure is $61,000,000, which is a great deal more than I had estimated.

All we can say now and all we can say 3 weeks from now is that if a complete force of actuaries were to figure this matter out they would differ by a billion dollars. I will venture to say that when we leave here they will differ by a billion dollars as to what the expenditures of the Federal Government will be in the next 12 months.

After all, the President in December overestimated the expenditures by something like a billion and a half dollars for the 6 months of the current year, and underestimated the receipts.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope the Senator will put his tables in the RECORD, because I should like to examine them. I ask the Senator, however, if the actual cuts made in the nine bills which have already been acted on, excluding the $800,000,000 tax refund provision, and excluding the Commodity Credit provision of $641,000,000, do not total, as acted on by the House of Representatives, $1,205,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. Probably the Senator is correct. I do not think that includes the Army.

Mr. TYDINGS. It does not.

Mr. TAFT. Let us take the Commodity Credit Corporation. I felt when I first saw the figures for that Agency that, to the extent of those figures, the budget was padded. This figure was included in expenditures for the fiscal year 1948, whereas I knew the money was to reimburse the cost of subsidies paid 2 years ago.

Of course we have not saved the money, but nevertheless, when the President presented his $37,500,000,000 budget, he made it $800,000,000 higher than I believe it should have been. It seems to me we have a right to say that that amount was padded in 1948, because it either belonged in 1946 or in the current year 1947, and does not belong in 1948. There is no reason why we should be levying taxes in 1948 to pay for current expenditures of 1946.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think there is a great deal in what the Senator says, but the fact remains, whether we pay it next year or this year, it is not a reduction of expenditures, it is only a payment of a debt this year instead of next year, and that does not represent a cut in the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. TAFT. I quite agree, but, after all, if the budget is lower, I do not care whether it is paid by recalculating of the budget or is paid by saving money. I think the Senator will recognize that the House has done a good job in cutting, but the Senator thinks probably they have done too much.

Mr. TYDINGS. No, I do not.

Mr. TAFT. I am glad to have the Senator's support.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope they will keep on with their cutting, and as one member of the Committee on Appropriations, I pretty generally supported their cuts in the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate; indeed, I not only supported them, Mr. President, but I shall claim eventually a large part of the credit for the savings made.

Mr. TAFT. I should be very glad to give the Senator that credit.

Mr. TYDINGS. Going back to the $641,000,000 of the Commodity Credit Corporation, it has the effect of cutting down the surplus for this year and adding to the surplus for next year, but it does not represent—and this is my point, with which the Senator has been fair enough to agree—a reduction in expenditures.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. President, I desire to conclude by saying that in connection with the question of delay, we are going to have to base the tax bill on the facts of the moment, which will be approximately the same as the facts 3 weeks from now. If we put off action on the bill, I doubt very much whether we can possibly get the deductions into effect on the 1st of July. The Treasury has quite a task in getting out the new deduction tables and getting them to the employers. The employers have to have them in order to set up their calculating machines for figuring the deductions in wages. We have always been told we must give the Treasury 30 days in order that they may get the withholding tables out and have them made effective.

As to the retroactive feature, the House reduced taxes from the 1st of January for the whole year. The result was that the new deductions would be put into effect the 1st of July, and it would have been necessary for the Government to give back a check to reimburse for the extra taxes that have been collected during the first 6 months.

We felt that was unwise. We felt it would be purely inflationary for people to receive checks they did not expect to get. We have been concerned that the tax reduction should begin on the first day of July, that on that day every citizen should receive either a 30-percent or a 20-percent cut in the deductions previously made, that his checks may then be increased as of that day, so that we do not have to give him a refund check to take care of money which we have overdeducted. Of course, it is not so essential for people who pay in quarterly installments, because their first cut, of either 20 percent, 10 percent, or 30 percent, will come on the 15th of September. But if it is desired to get these deductions into effect—and this affects, I think, something over 30,000,000 taxpayers—the bill should be promptly passed. It should be passed in order that there may be no doubt whatever that those cuts begin with the wages which begin on the 1st day of July. I think that is what the people expect. It makes it very complicated to do it any other way, or to begin it at a later period; and I think that alone is a reason not to delay the particular action which is proposed at this time.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Would it be more complicated to follow House bill 1, which makes the tax reduction retroactive to January 1?

Mr. TAFT. Yes; in my opinion it would; because the deductions of 20 percent begin on the 1st of January, and there will be an overcollection for 6 months from 44,000,000 taxpayers. Sooner or later checks will have to be written and mailed to them, presumably as soon as it is possible to draw the checks. That is a very considerable thing. It would affect every taxpayer. There is a certain number of adjustments at the present time, but that particular pay-roll deduction is not nearly so difficult as it would have been under the House bill.

Mr. LUCAS. The only point I make is, the House apparently did not consider the Senator's argument as a valid one, because they overwhelmingly passed a bill which made tax reduction retroactive as of January 1.

Mr. TAFT. I do not always agree with the House. They seemed to feel that they had to do it. I always opposed it, as the Senator knows, and I think it would have been a great mistake to make a retroactive tax cut.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired. To whom does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, what is the remaining time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has 19 minutes to his credit.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I shall yield that to myself.

Mr. President, we are asked to postpone consideration of this bill until June 10. The reasons advanced are that by June 10, the House Appropriations Committee will have reported all of the major appropriation bills; that from these reports we would be in better position to estimate the amount of expenditure reductions in fiscal 1948; that this would put us into improved position to judge the merits of the bill before us.

It is respectfully suggested that the proposal is unsound for many reasons.

To start with, we have no way of knowing how many appropriation bills will have been reported by the House Appropriations Committee by June 10. We have no way of knowing what the House, the Senate, and the conferees will do to bills which have not progressed beyond the reporting stage in the House of Representatives. Indeed, we have no way of knowing what the two Houses might do to the reports of the conferees.

If it is sound to argue for such a delay in order to secure a little more incomplete information which could serve no purpose except to stimulate additional conjecture and difference of opinion, it would be sound on June 10 and thereafter to ask for successive delays for the same reason until the House, the Senate, the conferences, and finally both Houses had disposed of all of the bills.

Let no one be naive enough to believe that these possibilities have escaped attention and would not be fully exploited by those who follow the administration's policy of no-income-tax-reduction bill this year.

The junior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], during the debate the other day, demonstrated that June 10 is ineffectual as a reliable date for information when he pointed out that last year the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill did not become law until June 22; the District of Columbia appropriation bill, until July 9; the Interior Department appropriation bill, until July 1; the Labor and Federal Security appropriation bill, until July 26; the legislative appropriation bill, until July 1; the War Department appropriation bill, until July 16; the Navy Department appropriation bill, until July 8; and the State, Justice, Commerce appropriation bill, until July 5.

Now, even if we knew to the last dollar the totals of our appropriation bills this year, we would continue to be in the field of estimate as to the expenditures for fiscal 1948. This comes about through the fact that money appropriated does not necessarily measure the amount of money expended during a given fiscal year.

For example, last August, after all of the appropriation bills had become law, the expenditure estimate then made for the then fiscal year 1947 by the Bureau of the Budget was forty-one billion five hundred million. In January 1947, despite the fact that the Bureau of the Budget knew to the last penny the amount of prior appropriations, it revised its expenditure estimate for fiscal 1947 to $42,500,000,000, an increase of $1,000,000,000 over its estimate of August 1947. More recently, on April 19, 1947, the Bureau of the Budget again revised its expenditure estimate for fiscal 1947 to $41,250,000,000, a reduction of one billion two hundred and fifty million from its previous January estimate.

How does this come about?

Revisions of that kind result from the effects of rescissions, from the fact that appropriations are not always completely spent during any particular fiscal year, from control of the rate of expenditure, from administrative economies, and so forth.

Running along with changes in estimates of expenditures caused by the operation of factors such as those mentioned are changes in estimated revenues. In a word, there is never a static point from which the whole picture can be seen without the benefit of estimate. On June 10 some things might be clearer and others more obscure. This explains why, as was developed during the debate by the able junior Senator from Maine, that we have passed revenue bills at all different stages of congressional sessions which, of necessity had to be based upon future estimates and conditions. I believe that this is probably the first time that time itself has been asked to stand still so that the hazards of estimating might be minimized.

We all know that under the Legislative Reorganization Act, we should finish this session by July 31. Therefore, our work will be greatly intensified by June 10. The appropriation bills will start coming in June and we know without any doubt, that many of their items will be subject to heated and protracted debate. We will be in the middle of a flood of other legislation that will pour out of the committees onto the calendar for attention before adjournment.

To inject this income-tax reduction bill into that situation will bottleneck the whole legislative program, will kill the bill, or delay its passage so long that it could not possibly become effective, as planned, on July 1.

Do I depart from seemly innocence when I suggest that there may be many Senators who would gleefully join in bringing that about?

Many new forms must go to the taxpayer and employer well ahead of July 1. There will be new rules and regulations. There will be no time for their preparation and distribution and for the necessary adjustments of the taxpayer and employer if this bill is to malinger its way through June.

We believe that our 49,000,000 income taxpayers are entitled to the benefits of this bill without delay. We are not unmindful of the predictions of recession. We know that no better buttress against recession can be found than income-tax reduction. We are also aware that it takes about 1 year for the full effects of income-tax reduction to be felt. Our gloomiest recessionists thus have their own special reason for losing no time in getting this measure into operation.

It is our plan to make this bill effective July 1, and this has important relation and sequence to the fact that there will be presented to the Congress early the next session a general revision bill to correct other injustices and inequities in our tax structure which have been accumulating a long time. The House Ways and Means Committee has already commenced its preparations and hearings. The Treasury is cooperating.

The distinguished senior Senator from Georgia, while not vouching for it and maintaining what I thought was some skeptical reserve, predicted that expenditure reductions reflecting true savings might reach as much as $2,786,000,000. In arriving at this figure, the Senator excluded the $800,000,000 reduction by the House in the $2,000,000,000 item in the executive budget for refund of receipts in the fiscal year 1948.

Passing for the present the questions raised as to this item, and for discussion's sake accepting as achievable the expenditure reduction figure of $2,786,000,000, the estimated expenditures in fiscal 1948 would be thirty-four and seven-tenths billions. Estimating income payments for fiscal 1948 at one hundred and seventy billions, the existing tax system will produce revenues in that year of $41,400,000,000.

Deducting expenditures of thirty-four and seven-tenths bililon, there is a surplus of six and seven-tenths billion for debt retirement, tax reduction, and contingencies. Subtracting $3,200,000,000, the cost of the bill before us, we have three and five-tenths billion for debt retirement and contingencies. Deducting the Senate's goal of two and six-tenths billion for debt retirement, we have $900,000,000 for additional debt reduction or for contingencies.

I have shown the effects of the expenditure reduction figure of the Senator from Georgia of $2,786,000,000 to demonstrate the wide margins of safety within which we marked up this bill. The Senator's figures fall short of the Senate's goal of expenditure reduction by $1,714,000,000, and yet there is room for meeting the Senate's debt reduction goal and for a sizable contingency fund.

We shaped this bill with the definite purpose that our margins should be ample to meet even more conservative views than our own, to allow for substantial errors or contingencies.

We tried to arrive at a sound position between the estimates of no rescession and those of complete disaster.

The House bill as it came to us would have cost the revenues four and nine-tenths billions on the basis of national income payments of $170,000,000,000. The House bill was fully retroactive to January 1, 1947.

Allowing for the cost of the House bill, and assuming the Senate's expenditure reduction goal, there would have been a surplus for debt retirement and contingencies of $3,500,000,0000. This would have taken care of the Senate's program of debt reduction of $2,600,000,000 with $900,000,000 left over for contingencies as contrasted with the Administration's contingency allowance in the budget for 1948 of $25,000,000 and debt reduction of $1,400,000,000.

But out of an abundance of caution, with the object of conforming our bill so that there would be generous allowance for contingencies and speculations of the type which we have heard here, the Senate Committee on Finance decided to eliminate the retroactive features of H. R. 1.

This increased our estimated surplus, after giving effect to the cost of H. R. 1, as so amended, to $5,200,000,000, enough to take care of the Senate's debt reduction goal of $2,600,000,000 with an equal amount left over for further debt reduction or contingencies.

We have had much discussion as to the expenditure side of the budget. We have shown, I believe, that our safety margins are ample to protect against sizable failure, if that unfortunately should occur, in meeting our Senate goal of expenditure reduction.

Now let me discuss how we reached our estimate of revenue receipts and of national-income payments of $170,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948.

Remember, please, that $170,000,000,000 of national-income payments translates into our estimate of tax revenues for the fiscal year 1948 of $41,400,000,000. National-income payments are a standard reference point used by the Treasury and by the technical staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, and by all other authorities known to me, for the calculation of tax revenues.

We examined the annual rate of national-income payments for the first quarter of the present calendar year. It is $176,000,000,000. Had we accepted that rate for the fiscal year 1948, our surplus, after paying the costs of this bill, would have been six and five-tenths billion.

On the Treasury's theory of no recession, we would have been justified in accepting one hundred and seventy-six billion as the income-payment rate for the fiscal year 1948. We preferred to base ourselves on an estimate which would take into account an orderly downward adjustment, some recession, a recession of such magnitude as to increase unemployment from the present level of about two and five-tenths million to about four million. We are not predicting such a recession. We estimated it in the interests of proper caution.

One hundred and seventy billion dollars of national-income payments for the fiscal year 1948 coincides with a drop in the present physical volume of industrial production from its present index number of around 190 down to an average of 171 for the fiscal year 1948. It would represent a drop in commodity prices from the present price line of about 149 to an average for fiscal year 1948 of 136.

This will illustrate to the Senate the basis of the statement that in adopting the income-payment estimate of one hundred and seventy billion for the fiscal year 1948, we were acting conservatively. In adopting the Senate's version of expenditure reduction of $4,500,000,000, we also adopted the conservative course as between the House and the Senate. Had we adopted the House version of $6,000,000,000 expenditure reduction, our estimated surplus would have been six and seven-tenths billions instead of $5,200,000,000.

But I believe it has been demonstrated that the five and two-tenths billions is abundantly ample for our planned debt reduction, for reasonable discounts which anyone wishes to apply to our estimates, and for contingencies.

Let me again remind the Senate that reduction of taxes does not necessarily mean reduction of tax revenues. This was shown by our tax-reduction experiences in the 1920's. It is a well-known fact that restoring to the people their freedom to spend their own money is in aid of a dynamic economy. The circulation of money in the hands of the people has rapid velocity. It gives direct support to the consumer-goods market. The national income is increased and that increases revenue receipts.

This experience is not confined to the Federal Government. New York State reduced its tax on individual incomes by a flat 25 percent for the years 1941 to 1944, inclusive, and by a flat 50 percent for 1945. Another 50-percent cut has been recommended for the fiscal year 1946. Nevertheless, revenues have increased from four hundred and sixty-five million in 1940 to six hundred and eighty-two million in 1946, and a deficit of 1940 has given place to an unbroken series of surpluses, the largest of which occurred in 1946. In spite of the 50-percent cut, a surplus of $60,700,000 is estimated for the fiscal year 1947.

Since the end of World War II, Australia has twice reduced its income tax. The tax program which included the first of these reductions was estimated at the time to cost between two and three million pounds. Instead the tax reductions were followed by an increase in revenue of £17,000,000. I interject to say that Canada is passing an income-tax-reduction bill, the percentages of reduction in which are much the same as our own, and it, too, will go into effect on July 1.

The distinguished senior Senator from Georgia during the debate on our tax-reduction bill of 1945 put it this way—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 91, part 8, page 9948:

> The rate of tax does not determine what comes into the Treasury. The bill, so far as it affects corporations, is properly a tax-rate-reducing bill. It will not necessarily reduce the amount of revenue coming in. Indeed, if it has the effect, which it is hoped it will have, it will so stimulate the expansion of business as to bring in a greater total revenue. I think if one will look back to World War I he will understand precisely what I am now trying to say.
> Mr. President, while it is somewhat aside, I shall pause in the presentation of my prepared statement to emphasize this fact: The Revenue Act of 1918 was approved February 24, 1919, some months after the actual cessation of hostilities. In a sense, that act was both a war-tax act and an immediate post-war tax-rate-reduction act, since it provided one schedule of rates for 1918 and a somewhat lower schedule for 1919, 1920, and 1921. The act of November 23, 1921, made more substantial reductions in rates. The recovery of the country from a state of depression in 1920 and 1921 was rapid. The Revenue Acts of 1924 and 1926 made still further tax reductions, but the income from tax revenues of the Government increased through all of that period.

Mr. President, I affirm that this bill is on a sound budgetary basis, and I hope that the motion to delay its consideration will be defeated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I yield the remaining time to the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I shall occupy the attention of the Senate for the remaining moments available for this debate, in support of the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], to postpone consideration of the pending legislation until the 10th of June.

I realize that on that date we may not have all the information that would be desirable to enable us to act intelligently with regard to any tax reductions at this time or at this session; but as has already been so forcibly said by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] by the date fixed in his motion we shall certainly have a clearer picture of the probable appropriations of this session of Congress than we have now.

We cannot take into consideration the possibility that all appropriations may not be expended, or that there may be an excess of expenditure, calling for deficiency bills between now and the end of this session. Certainly we do not now have anything approaching a clear indication of the total appropriations which will be enacted by this session of Congress and to that extent we shall be walking up a blind alley. We shall be groping in a field where there is not sufficient light at this time to enable us to plant our feet upon solid ground in the matter of Government income and Government expenses, although I concede that even on that date we may not have all the information that we might wish.

I am one of those who, even before the war had ended, hoped for and predicted a drastic reduction in governmental expenditures and in taxes. Nearly 2 years ago, before the war ended, I expressed the hope and belief that when the war should end and we should have discharged whatever temporary obligations by way of expenditures the aftermath of war required, we could stabilize our national expenditures at somewhere between twenty-two and twenty-five billions of dollars.

When I expressed that hope and belief, I was deeply in earnest in the entertainment of both the hope and belief, but the extension of the war and the necessary assumption of international obligations beyond what we then contemplated have made it impossible to achieve this goal up to the present time, though I am not ready to give up the hope that we may yet reduce our governmental expenditures to somewhere near the figure which I have indicated.

When the President submitted his budget of $37,500,000,000, which represents a scaling down by him of more than $5,000,000,000 from the requirements and recommendations of the various departments, I was frankly surprised and somewhat disappointed that a smaller total sum had not been recommended, but after going over the budget recommendations in detail and after one or two sessions of the Joint Committee on the Budget, provided for by the Congressional Reorganization Act of 1946, I was convinced that the President had done his best to reduce the expenses to the lowest figure which he thought possible or practicable in view of our domestic and international obligations. Notwithstanding this I still entertain the hope that we may reduce the amount somewhat below the budget recommendations.

In an effort to perform our duties under the Reorganization Act, and particularly with reference to section 138 of that act, a Joint Committee on the Budget was appointed by the two Houses of Congress, and after some discussions and controversies the House of Representatives passed a concurrent resolution by which it reduced the President's budget by $6,000,000,000. When the concurrent resolution came before the Senate an effort was made by Members on both sides of the political fence to deal realistically with the question of the President's budget and any possible reductions below it. We recognized that it would be practically impossible to cut $6,000,000,000 from the budget estimate, however desirable this result might be. The Senate finally amended the concurrent resolution to provide for a reduction of $4,500,000,000 below the President's estimates and the concurrent resolution was sent to a conference between the two Houses for the purpose of ironing out the differences and finally enacting the concurrent resolution in some form and some definite figure.

The concurrent resolution was adopted by the Senate March 4 last, nearly 3 months ago, and immediately sent to conference. Soon thereafter a brief conference was called by the chairman of the joint committee, Representative JOHN TABER, who is chairman of the House Appropriations Committee. I had assumed before this brief conference was held that the majority members of the joint committee had agreed upon some figure between four and one-half and six billion dollars, and that the conference would be a sort of ratification meeting to act upon the figure previously agreed upon by the majority. We were not even permitted to discuss the figures while they were under discussion in the majority. It was obvious from the beginning that minority Members were not to be taken into the confidence of the majority in the matter of determining the size of the budget.

But it soon developed in this first and only meeting, which was held more than 2 months ago, that the House conferees would not yield by so much as $1, and the conference was adjourned subject to the call of the Chair. This call has never been issued, and the conferees are helpless to do anything except wait in confusion and futility It is now obvious to any thinking man that a $4,500,000,000 or a $6,000,000,000 reduction will not be achieved when the total appropriations have been enacted into law.

We all supported the Congressional Reorganization Act in good faith. We deem it one of the wisest provisions in that act that Congress should in advance make an intelligent estimate of revenues and expenditures for the fiscal year with a provision for the reduction of the huge public debt by whatever could be saved by a reduction of estimated appropriations and expenditures.

The failure to call a meeting of the conferees under section 138 of the act is a gross disregard of congressional obligation and a gross disregard of the financial interests of the Government of the United States from every possible standpoint. If we judge the immediate future by the immediate past we may assume that no further effort will be made to arrive at a figure which both Houses might adopt and no further effort would be made to assemble the conferees for that purpose.

It is not without just foundation to assume that those who are responsible for the conduct of the public business in the two Houses of Congress and those who start out brashly to reduce the President's budget by anywhere from $4,500,000,000 to $6,000,000,000, now realize the impossibility of this task under the program which they have thus far accomplished by way of appropriations and are lacking in the frankness to tell the Congress and the American people of their failure.

But without the guidance of the congressional budget, which was contemplated in the Reorganization Act, certainly by the 10th of June and more certainly by the time the tax bill is considered, if postponed until that date, we would have some knowledge by which we could estimate the ultimate sum total of appropriations that may be made by this session of Congress.

I am not sure, however, Mr. President, that in the minds of the majority this is a matter of any consequence, because House bill 1, which we are now considering and which received its number because it was the first bill introduced in the House of Representatives in this session, was introduced in the House on the first day of the session before the Reorganization Act had taken effect, before the committees had yet been organized or appointed, before the President had even submitted his budget to the Congress, and before either House had had an opportunity to discuss or to consider what our total probable expenses would be in regard to the payment of our debt and the support of our obligations in this session of the Congress.

This estimate of expenditures is subject to the contingency that even after regular appropriation bills have been enacted there will be deficiency appropriation bills which will include items eliminated from the regular bills, which will undoubtedly increase the total amount for the fiscal year beginning July 1. There has been much said about the resistance of departments and agencies against the reductions of their respective appropriations. We may concede this. This habit is not peculiar to any particular bureau or department, nor to any political party, nor any administration. It has been true from time immemorial. But if we are to have any accurate information concerning the possibility of a balanced budget, the possibility of substantial debt reduction and the possibility of an accurate estimate of Treasury expenditures, we must have a clearer picture of the appropriations that will come out of this session of Congress beyond what we possess at this time. I do not desire to embark upon any discussion of partisan politics in connection with this important matter, but it is somewhat strange that those who now constitute a majority in both Houses of Congress have apparently abandoned their historical role as proponents of sound governmental financial policy and a balanced budget. House bill 1, a tax-reduction bill, without the slightest information, took on importance far beyond that of other obligations and duties of the Government of the United States.

I think the American people would like to see a balanced budget, and I think they would like to see our governmental finances stabilized upon a permanent basis, and not merely for a year or two, with the constant fear that our finances might revert to deficit spending and a further increase in our national debt.

It seems to me that nothing could be more discouraging to the American people and the economy of the American people than to vote for a temporary expedient in order to reduce taxes in a single year, with no assurance that future exigencies growing out of governmental obligations would not require an early increase in taxes, or an early increase in the public debt, instead of its gradual decrease, under any sound financial policy.

From time immemorial the Republican Party, now in charge of both Houses, has boasted it was the party of sound economic policy and practices, that it favored a balanced budget, that it favored the protection of the national credit. Although our friends on the other side have consistently complained since 1933 of an unbalanced budget, they rarely, if ever, refer to the fact that the national budget has not been balanced since the second year of the Hoover administration.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] a moment ago referred to the fact that the budget had been unbalanced for the past 15 years. If he had desired to be completely accurate, he would have said 17 years, because the budget has been unbalanced ever since 1930, the second year of the Hoover administration. In that administration the public debt was increased from $16,000,000,000 to more than $22,000,000,000, in a period of profound peace, not only in the United States but in the world.

If I wanted to be partisan, which I do not want to be, I would say that that administration plunged us into the greatest depression that the world had ever seen, experienced, or imagined. Out of it this increase of $6,500,000,000 in the public debt emerged.

Now that they have assumed the responsibility of financial legislation in both branches of the Congress, they seem willing to take the chances that events will repudiate their previous protestation of sound financial policies.

Let us take the situation as it appears from the record. As the Secretary of the Treasury said before the Senate Committee on Finance, the Treasury estimates are neither optimistic nor pessimistic with respect to revenues and expenditures. There is uncertainty in the economic outlook and it would be decidedly unwise to plan the national finances over the next fiscal year on the basis of the most optimistic assumptions which we might entertain. This is not to be construed as a forecast of a depression, large or small, but it is rather an effort to lean in the direction of a safe figure for prospects of financial planning. There are no hazards in such a course, for even if there is no decline in the level of income payments for the remainder of 1947, the surplus for the fiscal year 1948 will still be only approximately $4,000,000,000.

Enactment of the Senate Finance Committee tax bill would, under favorable assumption that present levels of income payments will be maintained, still leave less than $1,000,000,000 for debt retirement. We get an excessive surplus only by assuming that the $37,500,000,000 of expenditures estimated in the President's budget will actually be cut by several billion dollars.

A while ago the Senator from Ohio conceded, very fairly, I think, in a colloquy with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] that when we eliminate $800,000,000 it is a phony reduction, because it has to be paid some day, and the longer it is postponed the more it will amount to, because it will draw 6 percent interest from the time the obligation is incurred, estimated, or ascertained, until it is paid. The bookkeeping saving represents only a transfer from one ledger to another, or a bookkeeping arrangement between the Treasury and the Commodity Credit Corporation. We can see now only a reduction of $1,200,000,000 in the estimated expenses of the Government.

The Treasury estimates of receipts for the fiscal year of 1948, based on $168,000,000,000 national income, is $38,000,000,000. For every $10,000,000,000 in income payments above this level receipts are likely to increase by two or two and one-half billion. Thus, if income payments remain at their current level at about $177,000,000,000 during the entire fiscal year of 1948, Treasury receipts will probably be about $41,500,000,000 under the present revenue laws. At this level of income payments the enactment of the Senate Finance Committee tax bill would reduce receipts by approximately three and one-half to four billion dollars, or a total of about thirty-seven and one-half or thirty-eight billion dollars per annum. It seems clear, therefore, that unless the President's budget of $37,500,000,000 is reduced substantially there would be little or no debt retirement in the fiscal year of 1948, even under these favorable assumptions regarding the level of income payments.

The reductions in appropriations already made in bills passed by the House do not bear out the contention that the President's budget can be reduced to $33,000,000,000, the amount assumed in the report by Senate Finance Committee on House bill 1. That matter has already been so amply explained by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] that I shall not undertake to discuss it at this point. These reductions now aggregate about $1,500,000,000, of which $800,000,000 is for tax refunds which will have to be appropriated for during the next session of Congress, even if it is not appropriated now. The real savings, therefore, under the President's budget are thus only about $850,000,000. The loan to Greece and Turkey will offset a substantial portion of this amount. To bring the estimate down to $33,000,000,000, Congress would have to cut the remaining appropriations by about $4,000,000,000.

The reduction of some $4,000,000,000 in the remaining appropriation would have to be obtained mainly from the War and Agriculture Departments and the Veterans' Administration. I do not know yet what will happen to the appropriation bills for the War Department and the Veterans' Administration. We do know what has happened in the House of Representatives regarding the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture, and the action of the House in regard to that bill has brought forth sharp protests from many persons in all sections of the United States, not excluding a prominent gentleman on the other side of the aisle in this Chamber, who has a genuine interest in the welfare of agriculture in the United States.

However, a reduction of such magnitude in these key appropriation bills is obviously unlikely. The Navy Department appropriation recently passed by the House saves $378,000,000 out of a total request of $3,800,000,000, or about 10 percent. The same percentage saving in the remaining items cannot be achieved, because they contain many fixed commitments. However, even if this optimistic assumption is made, an additional saving of only about $2,000,000,000 would be obtained. Thus, the total budget reduction based on this optimistic assumption, without allowing any offsetting increase for new foreign loans, would be about $2,850,000,000.

By way of summary, an optimistic estimate of receipts in the fiscal year of 1948 is $41,500,000,000, and an optimistic estimate of the size of the budget is $35,000,000,000, leaving a surplus of $6,500,000,000. But it would be unwise to proceed on the assumption that such a surplus will be available for debt retirement and tax reduction, since it leaves no room for error either in the receipts or expenditures figures. With income payments of $177,000,000,000, the Senate Finance Committee tax-reduction bill would reduce this surplus by $3,500,000,000. If receipts fall below the most optimistic estimate or if expenditures are not cut to the indicated $35,000,000,000, the margin for debt retirement would be less than $3,000,000,000. Under present conditions, sound management of our financial affairs warrants action on tax reduction only after we are reasonably certain that there is sufficient surplus for a substantial installment on debt retirement.

We all know we cannot pass on to future generations this stupendous public debt of $257,000,000,000. We all know that the time for debt payments is in the midst of high income and prosperity. We all know that if by any chance there should be a decline of income for 10,000,000 people, the result would be a reduction of three billion in the income of the Treasury, which would wipe out all possibility of debt reduction under this pending tax bill.

On page 7 of the Senate Finance Committee report there is the following statement:

> The economy is not as fully employed as the Secretary (of the Treasury) seems to believe. Unemployment as reported by the Department of Commerce is running now at about 2,400,000 persons. This compares with 650,000 persons during the autumn of 1944, when it can reasonably be said that the economy was fully employed in a fairly absolute sense.

Unemployment of 2,400,000 persons out of a total labor force of almost 60,000,000 does not constitute proof that the economy is operating at less than capacity. At what is usually called full employment, some frictional and seasonal unemployment may be expected. The unemployment level of 650,000 during the autumn of 1944 indicated such a severe shortage of labor that Government controls were necessary for the proper allocation of the short supply. During peacetime, an unemployment figure of 2,400,000 is very close to the minimum in a free economy in which wage earners freely shift from job to job. Production is already at a record peacetime high, and additional output is limited by shortages in supplies of raw material, machinery, equipment, and labor, and by maladjustments in the price structure, rather than by the incomplete use of available production resources.

On page 9 of the Senate Finance Committee report we find the following statement:

> A tax reduction will be a hedge against recession and accumulated deflation and should be enacted now.

It is agreed that tax reduction is desirable to help combat a prospective recession. The important question is to determine when the tax reduction would be most effective. Under present conditions, it is hazardous to reduce taxes in anticipation of a recession. Business is operating at capacity, and inflationary pressures still persist in the economy. Tax reduction now would contribute further to the maintenance of inflationary prices. By contributing to further inflation at the present time, we might increase the severity of any recession in business which might occur in the coming fiscal year. Tax reduction for bolstering mass purchasing power and incentives will be appropriate only after the inflationary trend has been arrested and the necessary price adjustments have been made. The best contribution that we can make to economic stability at the present time is to balance the budget and to obtain a sufficiently large surplus to permit a proper payment on the national debt.

On page 10 of the Senate Finance Committee report on this bill, we find the following statement:

> It is desirable to concentrate any reduction which can be made at this time in the individual income tax. Only through the individual income tax is it possible to give relief to all persons bearing heavy tax burdens.

There is no sound reason for confining tax revision to any one tax. All major taxes have important effects on incentives and the equity of the tax structure. We should revise not only the individual income tax but also the corporation income tax, the excise taxes, and the estate and gift taxes. In this connection, attention must be given to the problems of double taxation of dividend income and of different forms of business enterprise, the carry-over of net operating losses, the tax treatment of family income, and other features of the tax structure. Wise and careful attention will be required to determine the changes which would benefit our economy most. Since many of these adjustments will lose revenue, a premature tax reduction at an annual rate of $4,000,000,000 may prejudge these important questions and prejudice the development of a sound postwar tax system.

On page 13 of the committee report, we find the following statement:

> The decisions of the executives who receive relatively large salaries are of greatest importance with reference to the development of industrial production. The savings of the middle and upper bracket income recipients are the principal sources of the venture capital for business expansion.

Under present tax rates, national income is at a record peacetime high. The limitations on investment and production are not the result of lack of investment and managerial incentives. As already noted, new investment and additional production is limited by shortages in the supply of raw material, machinery, equipment, and labor, and by high prices.

No one group has a monopoly on supplying capital and establishing new businesses. The American economy has always depended, and must always depend, on a healthy group of new small business. These new enterprises are often started by persons of modest means who, by combining their small capital and personal effort, build great enterprises from small beginnings. It is well-known that the ownership of stock in American corporations is widely distributed among all income brackets. Statistics of income show that nearly 50 percent of the dividends received by individuals are received by persons with incomes of less than $5,000 per annum.

On page 14 of the committee's report, we find the following statement:

> Special relief is warranted at this time for persons who have attained the age of 65. At the hearings on this bill the Secretary of the Treasury did not oppose the giving of special relief to persons aged 65 or over but argued that the appropriate method of doing so would be action under the Social Security Act. It is worth noting that the coverage of the social-security legislation is by no means universal. Relief under it would not extend to a great number of the people over 65 who now find themselves in an unusually straitened condition.

All families with low fixed incomes have suffered as a result of the increase in the cost of living. Persons under 65 with low fixed incomes have as urgent a claim as those over 65. This provision of the bill would remove one and one-half million from the tax rolls, but it would still leave on the tax rolls more than 46,000,000 people, many of whom pay in taxes less than the costs of collection. Personally, I do not object to a general provision granting $500 additional exemption to those over 65 years of age. Such an exemption necessarily must apply to all persons over 65, regardless of their income, because it would be administratively difficult, if not impossible, to draw a line between those above 65 who should get such relief and those who do not need it. The truth is that, regardless of age, there ought to be an increase in the amount of exemption allowed under the tax laws so as to remove between four and five million persons who actually do not pay enough in income taxes to justify the collection expense; and any permanent tax bill enacted now or hereafter must take into consideration the wisdom and justice of increasing the personal exemptions beyond those allowed by the present law.

Those of us who support the motion to postpone the consideration of this bill to June 10, or to any other date, do not take this position because of any sentimental objection to tax reductions. We recognize the necessity of appropriate, well-considered, tax reductions at an appropriate time. We emphatically assume the position that existing wartime taxes cannot be continued permanently, or for a very long period in the future. We were responsible for tax reduction last year aggregating more than $6,000,000,000, in which we included a reduction across the board for all individual taxpayers. But we believe that no tax reduction that is based upon political expediency can be sound.

Mr. President, another matter to which I think we should give consideration today in regard to this tax bill is its timing. All of us are supposed to be concerned about the credit of our country, about its solvency, about its ability to pay its debts, and about the confidence of the American people in that solvency. We believe that is important because we believe that the millions of holders of United States bonds, which they have purchased in the stress of war emergencies, both for patriotic reasons and reasons of investments and savings, are entitled to feel a supreme confidence in the solvency of their Government. We believe that if the American people holding more than $50,000,000,000 of E, F, and G bonds, and American banks holding $92,000,000,000 worth of Government securities—making a total of $142,000,000,000 out of our great national debt of $257,000,000,000—ever lose faith in the solvency of their Government and its ability to discharge its obligations, there will be a rush to dispose of these bonds, that not only will involve the credit of the Government of the United States, but might bring on a real depression that not only would affect every American citizen and every American institution, but would have its disastrous repercussions around the world.

Mr. President, if by any chance we should be able to make a tax reduction now and if by any chance we might also make a debt reduction now, if economic conditions should be reversed in 1948 or 1949 and we should then find that under the tax rate we now write into the law there was a Treasury deficit which would preclude the possibility of making any debt reduction, it is not difficult to imagine what might happen to the $142,000,000,000 of our debts which I have just mentioned, based on our Government bonds and other Government obligations, for the very moment the American people begin to lose confidence in the solvency of their Government and in its ability in an orderly manner to pay off the debt of $257,000,000,000, at that moment the holders of these bonds would become the victims of fear, and not only individuals but banks would rush in prematurely to liquidate the bonds or to cash them, so that they might not be the further victims of any lack of confidence on the part of the people of the United States in the Solvency of their Government. As I have pointed out, if such a situation were to develop, it might well bring about not only a recession, but a collapse of our economy, which not only would affect those of us in the United States, but by the same token would emphasize and expand the chaos and uncertainty throughout the world, because the world's economy and the ability of the other nations of the world to employ and to produce and to recover from their present situation depend more upon the solvency and the credit of the United States than upon the solvency and credit of all the other governments of the world combined. In my judgment, we cannot afford to take a chance on having our own people lose faith in their own Government.

Mr. President, I myself need tax reduction as much as any other man, if not more, but so far as I am concerned, I myself would rather continue to pay for another year the taxes that are now imposed upon me, in the hope that we might then see the foundation of financial solidity upon which we might plant our feet, and in the meantime bring about an orderly tax reduction and an orderly debt reduction and a balanced budget for the benefit of our Government and our people.

Let us, therefore, approach this vital and important subject with caution and in the light of the facts. Let us see a little further into the future before we commit ourselves to a policy which we may not be able to reverse, even though a necessity for a reversal should arrive.

For these reasons, I support the motion to postpone the consideration of this tax bill until June 10, and for the same reasons I shall support the amendment to make the tax reductions effective January 1, 1948, instead of making them retroactive to January 1, 1947. Certainly by the end of the present calendar year, we may form some accurate estimate of our economic situation in the immediate future. In the light of this fuller information, we may be able to give to the American people both tax reductions and debt reductions to an extent which will inspire their confidence in the statesmanship of the American Congress and the stability of the American economic and financial system.

So, Mr. President, I shall vote for the motion to postpone until the 10th of June, because even if our action on the tax bill is postponed until that date, we still shall have time to pass a tax bill and there still will be time for the Treasury Department to make out the necessary forms, and there still will be time for the withholding taxes to be imposed—if that is the will of the Congress—beginning on the first day of July. But, in addition to that, as I have said whenever this tax bill is voted upon, I shall vote to postpone its effective date until January 1, 1948, because by that time we shall have an even clearer picture of our financial obligations, and thus may be able to trim our sails according to the wind which may be prevailing at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the time under the unanimous-consent agreement has expired. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to postpone until June 10, 1947, the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income tax payments.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Ecton	Lodge
Baldwin	Ellender	Lucas
Ball	Ferguson	McCarran
Barkley	Flanders	McClellan
Brewster	Fulbright	McFarland

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion submitted by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to postpone to June 10, 1947, the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments.

Mr. GEORGE and others asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MAGNUSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY]. If he were present he would vote "nay," and if I were permitted to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. WHERRY (when Mr. McCARTHY's name was called). The Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] has announced his pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] who is necessarily absent. If present and voting the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that on this vote the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], who is absent by leave of the Senate, would vote "yea" if present.

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—44

Barkley	Johnson, Colo.	O'Daniel
Byrd	Johnston, S. C.	O'Mahoney
Chavez	Kilgore	Pepper

NOT VOTING—3

McCarthy	Magnuson	Overton

So Mr. GEORGE's motion to postpone was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LUCAS. I offer an amendment to H. R. 1, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment was received, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That this act may be cited as the 'Individual Income Tax Reduction Act of 1947.'

"SEC. 2. Increase in personal exemptions.

"Section 25 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to credits of individual against net income) is hereby amended by striking out '$500', wherever appearing therein, and by inserting in lieu thereof '$600', and by striking '$1,000' and by inserting in lieu thereof '$1,200.'

"SEC. 3. Income of husband and wife.

"So much of section 12 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the computation of surtax) as precedes the table therein is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(b) Computation of surtax—

"'(1) Separate return: Except in the case of a joint return by husband and wife, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the surtax net income of every individual a surtax determined by computing a tentative surtax under the table set forth in paragraph (3) of this subsection, and by reducing such tentative surtax by 5 percent thereof.

"'(2) Joint return: In the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the aggregate surtax net income of the husband and wife a surtax determined—

"'(A) by computing a tentative surtax under the table set forth in paragraph (3) of this subsection upon an amount equal to one-half of such aggregate surtax net income;

"'(B) by multiplying the tentative surtax ascertained under subparagraph (A) by two; and

"'(C) by reducing the amount ascertained under subparagraph (B) by 5 percent thereof.

"'(3) Surtax table: The table referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2) is as follows:'.

"SEC. 4. Standard deduction.

"Section 23 (aa) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the optional standard deduction for individuals) is amended to read as follows:

"'(1) Allowance: In the case of an individual, at his election a standard deduction, as follows:

"'(A) Separate return with adjusted gross income $5,000 or more: Except in the case of a joint return by husband and wife, if the adjusted gross income is $5,000 or more, the standard deduction shall be $500.

"'(B) Joint return with adjusted gross income $5,000 or more: In the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, if the aggregate adjusted gross income of the husband and wife is $5,000 or more, the standard deduction shall be $1,000 or an amount equal to 10 percent of such aggregate adjusted gross income, whichever is the lesser.

"'(C) Adjusted gross income less than $5,000: If the adjusted gross income is less than $5,000, the standard deduction shall be an amount equal to 10 percent of the adjusted gross income upon the basis of which the tax applicable to the adjusted gross income of the taxpayer is determined under the tax table provided in section 400.'

"SEC. 5. Reduction in surtax on individuals.

"Section 12 (b) of Internal Revenue Code (relating to rates of surtax) is amended by striking everything after the colon and inserting in lieu thereafter the following:

"'If the surtax net income is:	The tentative surtax shall be:
Not over $2,000	15 percent of the surtax net income.
Over $2,000 but not over $4,000.	$300, plus 17 percent of excess over $2,000.
Over $4,000 but not over $6,000.	$640, plus 21 percent of excess over $4,000.
Over $6,000 but not over $8,000.	$1,060, plus 25 percent of excess over $6,000.
Over $8,000 but not over $10,000.	$1,560, plus 29 percent of excess over $8,000.
Over $10,000 but not over $12,000.	$2,140, plus 33 percent of excess over $10,000.
Over $12,000 but not over $14,000.	$2,800, plus 38 percent of excess over $12,000.
Over $14,000 but not over $16,000.	$3,560, plus 42 percent of excess over $14,000.
Over $16,000 but not over $18,000.	$4,400, plus 45 percent of excess over $16,000.
Over $18,000 but not over $20,000.	$5,300, plus 48 percent of excess over $18,000.
Over $20,000 but not over $22,000.	$6,260, plus 51 percent of excess over $20,000.
Over $22,000 but not over $26,000.	$7,280, plus 54 percent of excess over $22,000.
Over $26,000 but not over $32,000.	$9,440, plus 57 percent of excess over $26,000.
Over $32,000 but not over $38,000.	$12,860, plus 60 percent of excess over $32,000.
Over $38,000 but not over $44,000.	$16,460, plus 64 percent of excess over $38,000.
Over $44,000 but not over $50,000.	$20,300, plus 67 percent of excess over $44,000.
Over $50,000 but not over $60,000.	$24,320, plus 70 percent of excess over $50,000.
Over $60,000 but not over $70,000.	$31,320, plus 73 percent of excess over $60,000.
Over $70,000 but not over $80,000.	$38,620, plus 76 percent of excess over $70,000.
Over $80,000 but not over $90,000.	$46,220, plus 79 percent of excess over $80,000.
Over $90,000 but not over $100,000.	$54,120, plus 82 percent of excess over $90,000.
Over $100,000 but not over $150,000	$62,320, plus 84 percent of excess over $100,000.
Over $150,000 but not over $200,000.	$104,320, plus 85 percent of excess over $150,000.
Over $200,000	$146,820, plus 86 percent of excess over $200,000.'

"SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make such changes in the tables in section 400 (optional tax table) and section 1622 (withholding tables) as may be necessary to reflect the reduction in taxes provided for in the preceding provisions of this act.

"SEC. 7. The amendments to the Internal Revenue Code made by this act shall become effective with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1947."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a brief statement which I have prepared on the bill now under discussion in the Senate.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUGH BUTLER

Mr. President, at this time, I would like to make a very brief announcement on the so-called community-property or joint-tax amendments. For a long time I have been active in attempting to stir up interest in a proposed amendment to our tax laws which would place citizens of all the States on a basis of tax equality with citizens of the 10 so-called community-property States with respect to payment of individual income taxes. By the terms of my proposals, taxpayers all over the Nation would be given the right to divide family income equally between husband and wife and report that income on separate returns, just as residents of the community-property States now do. On February 5, I had this proposal printed as a suggested amendment to H. R. 1030, and I have also had it prepared as a suggested amendment to the pending bill.

After a careful study of the Federal Government's revenue picture for the fiscal year 1948, I have reluctantly decided not to present either of my amendments at this time. By the terms of the bill we have before us, the Federal Government is giving up revenue amounting to approximately three billion two hundred million for the coming year. My proposed amendment would reduce the estimated revenue by approximately another billion dollars per year. I think we cannot afford to cancel that much additional amount of Federal revenue at the present time.

A number of other Members of the Senate have expressed an interest in this same question, and in fact a number of other bills or amendments have been proposed which would have substantially the same effect as my proposal. I understand that an effort may be made to bring it up on the floor as an amendment to the pending bill. I hope that effort will not be made at this particular time, because of its effects on our 1948 revenue, and because we must have a substantial debt reduction as well as tax reduction.

I am glad to see that so much interest has developed in this question of equalizing tax requirements from citizens in the States not having a community-property law. I feel that the present tax laws constitute a serious discrimination against those States which do not have the community-property law, and I intend to work for removal of this discrimination at the earliest opportunity. I have discussed the question with the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], with the distinguished senior minority member of the committee, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and with other leaders on both sides of the aisle. On the basis of these discussions, I believe that the change will have widespread support at the proper time. In fact, I feel confident that it will be included in the general tax-revision bill which is already in process of preparation by the House Committee on Ways and Means. I fear that premature action on our part at the present time would endanger the adoption of the change at a later date. For the reasons stated, I shall refrain from calling up my own proposed amendments on joint-tax privileges, and shall vote against any such proposals that may be presented at this time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. FRED BRADLEY, late a Representative from the State of Michigan, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that I may be absent from the Senate tomorrow, Tuesday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia may meet tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BRADLEY, OF MICHIGAN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution (H. Res. 217) from the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
May 26, 1947.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. FRED BRADLEY, a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the tragic death of Representative FRED BRADLEY is a shock to the Nation and particularly to the State of Michigan which he served so faithfully. He had entered upon his fifth term in the House of Representatives and, at the time of his death, was chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Because of the fact that he attended school in Rogers City, Mich., and had lived in Michigan for many years, he was fully cognizant of the problems of our State. He was honorable and loyal and always had the interests of the people of Michigan and of the Nation at heart. He fought to make the world a better place in which to live, and his life was an inspiration and example to all those who came in contact with him.

Congress is confronted with many very serious problems at the present time and the loss of one with Fred's ability will be keenly felt. He died in the service of his country at his post of duty.

It was my great privilege and an inspiration to know FRED BRADLEY personally, and I join with those who have reason to cherish his memory in this brief tribute to the character of a man who rendered valuable service to his district, the State, and the country as a whole.

We shall indeed be grateful that it was our privilege to serve Congress with FRED BRADLEY, a great American, and we should find courage in the fact that life does not end with death. I feel as though had he been permited to say one last word to us he would have said, with the immortal Tennyson:

Sunset and evening star
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell
When I embark.

For tho' from out our bourne of time and place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the indulgence of the Senate, the President pro tempore of the Senate, speaking from the chair, wishes to associate himself with what has been said by the distinguished junior Senator from Michigan regarding the death of Representative FRED BRADLEY, of Michigan. No more earnest, faithful, devoted public servant ever served the public welfare. No finer citizen, no more patriotic American ever gave himself to our congressional labors. He has dedicated 10 years of his life to his district, to his State, and to his Nation in the burdensome activities of his public work. Literally he died in the congressional harness. Michigan and America will miss him in his fine public integrity. His countless friends and his family will miss him and his great loyalties. He was a rugged character in the best tradition of stalwart citizenship. It is with deepest sorrow that we greet the sad news of his untimely passing.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I offer a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the junior Senator from Michigan will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 117) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. FRED BRADLEY, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the second resolving clause the Chair appoints as the committee to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative the senior and junior Senators from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. FERGUSON].

RECESS

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 27, 1947, at 11 o'clock a. m.

I hereby designate CHARLES A. HALLECK to act as Speaker pro tempore today.

JOSEPH W. MARTIN,
Speaker.

PRAYER

Rev. C. Dale David Doren, pastor, Grace Episcopal Church, Huron, S. Dak., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray. Almighty God, the fountain of all wisdom, whose statutes are good and gracious and whose law is truth, we beseech Thee most humbly to direct and prosper the works and labors of these Thy servants here assembled. Dispose their hearts to the safety, honor, and welfare of Thy people, that all things may be so ordered and settled by their honest endeavors upon the best and surest foundations; that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us all for generations.

Endue with the spirit of wisdom those to whom in Thy name we entrust the authority of government.

All which we ask through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 23, 1947, was read and approved.

PERMISSION TO FILE REPORT

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a resolution (H. Res. 218) from the Committee on Rules making in order the bill H. R. 3601.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN]?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS]?

There was no objection.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. LECOMPTE, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on May 23, 1947, present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 236. An act to amend the Nationality Act of 1940 so as to permit naturalization proceedings to be had at places other than in the office of the clerk or in open court in the case of sick or physically disabled individuals;

H. R. 384. An act for the relief of W. H. Baker and Walter Baker;

H. R. 428. An act for the relief of Charles N. Bemis;

H. R. 444. An act for the relief of the estate of Archie S. Woods, deceased;

H. R. 602. An act to amend an act of September 27, 1944, relating to credit for military or naval service in connection with certain homestead entries;

H. R. 1494. An act for the relief of the estate of Nellie P. Dunn, deceased;

H. R. 1844. An act to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant easements in lands belonging to the United States under his supervision and control, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 3245. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

THE LATE HONORABLE FRED BRADLEY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty today to announce to the House the sudden passing of the distinguished Representative of the Eleventh Michigan District, the Honorable FRED BRADLEY. He departed this life on Saturday last while on an official visit to the Coast Guard Academy at New London, Conn.

This colleague was first elected in 1938 and has served continuously since. Members of this House have been increasingly impressed with his alertness, with his capacity for hard, intelligent, patriotic work, with his determination to do his full duty as he saw it, and with the splendid courage with which he always met the many controversial problems which confronted him. There has been no Member of this House, during my long years here, whose service has impressed me more favorably than his. I deeply regret the passing of this friend.

Mr. Speaker, the passing of a colleague brings to each and every one of us not only grief at the severing of associations, but a somber pondering on the meaning of this enigma of human existence. The mortal sense of life would make of man little more than the grass of the fields, flourishing for a brief season and then withering away. Compared to eternity, the human span is but a twinkling. We are apt to forget that billions of individuals have come and gone; the millions who are now living will, in no great stretch of time, join the silent majority. When we stop to realize by what a narrow margin we cling to that which we call life, we wonder not that some of our colleagues have gone from us, but that more have not gone.

Every tenet of religious faith, every tenet of philosophy, every tenet of logic, every tenet of human hope bids us to be of good cheer, because our colleagues, having passed beyond our ken, are not forever blotted out, but live on and work on.

None can explain the mystery of death. We can hope. None can reason how or why our colleagues should have been called, except that that is the way of flesh. But there is vast consolation, Mr. Speaker, in the hope and the faith that our colleagues, somewhere, in some happier realm, labor on, rising ever upward in their striving to attain truth.

So, instead of grieving as our stricken colleagues depart, we can find it in our hearts to be grateful to infinite being that we were permitted to know them, to be associated with them, to work with them, and to cherish their memories as we hope those left behind when we go will cherish memories of us.

That great philosopher, that kindly gentleman, that able Justice of the Supreme Court, the late Oliver Wendell Holmes, once put into words the hope and the faith that I would voice to you here today. Said he:

> I think it not improbable that man, like the grub that prepares a chamber for the winged thing it has never seen but is to be—that man may have cosmic destinies that he does not understand. And so beyond the vision of battling races and an impoverished earth, I catch a dreaming glimpse of peace.

It seems to be, Mr. Speaker, the common fate of kings and beggars, of just and unjust, of saint and sinner, that each of us shall sometime embark upon that journey from earth to the far yonder shores of an unknown eternity.

So it has been with the colleague and my devoted friend of whom we speak today. May his soul rest in peace to the end of time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, a long-distance call has been received by one of our colleagues, a member of the Michigan delegation. Congressman FRED BRADLEY, of Rogers City, Mich., left this world last Saturday on a journey from which no traveler returns.

In his desire to serve his country, which he loved devotedly, he contributed every talent he possessed. He symbolized unselfish devotion to duty and responsibility as a legislator and public servant. He was an able man, dynamic and forceful.

His district, the Eleventh, Michigan, consists of 16 counties and is the largest in area in our State. It is one of the most important districts in the Nation because it includes the famous locks at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

He served the people of his district, with its diversified interests, with all the power at his command. If he ever erred in his zeal to advance their interests, that error was of the head and not of the heart.

He was chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. No Member of this body was better qualified to hold that most important position. He was thoroughly conversant with the subject and possessed an intelligent understanding of its problems.

He yielded all he had, even life itself, in his desire to discharge the trust reposed in him by his electorate.

He died literally standing up in line of duty with his boots on.

The people of his district have lost a true and trusted friend, our State has lost a wise and able counselor, and our Nation has lost a capable legislator and a courageous American.

May an unfaltering Christian faith sustain his widow and his family as it must sustain all of us when the shadows fall across the pathway of life.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, we are sad at heart this morning. Death has again invaded our ranks. This time Representative FRED BRADLEY, of the Eleventh Michigan District, has answered the final summons. We are again reminded that nothing is so uncertain in life as life itself.

When the House adjourned for the week end, Mr. BRADLEY was apparently in his usual health, carrying on his duties and meeting the great responsibilities, not only as a Representative of his congressional district but as chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, one of the important committees of the Congress. His sudden demise has disrupted a legislative career marked from the beginning by energy, determination, and courage. He always performed the duties at hand in an enthusiastic and capable way. With an adequate background of education and practical business experience, his views and conclusions were inevitably worth while.

Mr. BRADLEY was instinctively a salesman; that is, when he espoused a cause, he immediately became an advocate of the cause and was always on the forefront in selling his views to the Congress and to the country. His sincerity and his integrity were never questioned. He never condemned those who did not agree with him. He always recognized that in great problems of Government there is usually room for controversy, and he liked to talk things over and argue things through. In the end he accepted the judgment of the majority, in keeping with the principles of a representative democracy.

Coming from the great Northland in the great State of Michigan, he loved his district, was proud of its accomplishments, its resources, and the part that section played, and is playing, in the development of the country as a whole.

I never knew FRED BRADLEY until he came to Congress in 1939. Coming as I do from the extreme southern part of the State, I only knew him by reputation. We were all glad to have so able an exponent of our great vacation land in Congress, and he always spoke with authority based on study and personal information. In business life he was most familiar with shipping and the necessity of bringing the industrial part of our State in contact with the vital resources of his district. His particular knowledge in this line naturally qualified him for leadership on the great committee of which he was chairman at the time of his passing. Under his leadership that committee was in the dawn of a new era so far as our merchant marine, our fisheries, and the others matters over which he had jurisdiction are concerned. There was no chairman who ever took his job more seriously, and it is just too bad that his activites have been so abruptly terminated. His place will be difficult to fill at the moment. He was performing an official mission when stricken down. Indeed, it can be truthfully said that he died in the harness.

Mr. Speaker, we all liked FRED BRADLEY. One could not know him and feel otherwise. We sometimes wonder why such a young man with so much to live for should be taken away when the occasion seems so inopportune; however, it is not for us to judge. We must accept the inevitable because it must be for the best. A higher power makes these decisions. We must not mourn, but must rejoice in the fact that FRED BRADLEY lived and worked among us. Many a statute is a better law because he helped write it. Called away at a time when he apparently had most to live for, the shock is the greater. I am sure that we all join in genuine sympathy to his district and his charming wife.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY].

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, joy and sorrow are closely intermingled in this busy world of ours. Last week, our departed colleague, FRED BRADLEY, of Rogers City, Mich., was with us—happy and apparently in good health—daily performing his duties as a Member of the great House of Representatives, and more particularly as chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Now, he has passed to that "undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns."

Our former colleague was devoted to the service of his country, and the Eleventh District of Michigan had honored him for five consecutive terms in electing him as the United States Representative from that fine district. Fred was adequately prepared for the duties of that high office, both from the educational and business standpoint.

He was a graduate of Cornell University where he received his A. B. degree. He had served with his father in the building of a great business in which he was eminently successful. He was devoted to the people of his district. He loved constitutional government in its highest form, and his every thought was to serve his district, his State, and his Nation efficiently and well.

A fine public servant has departed with the resulting loss to his district and to his Nation. This House will miss him, and those of us who had the honor of being closely united in friendship will miss him greatly.

In this greatest of deliberative bodies, neither invective, sarcasm, nor partisanship can sever the bonds of real friendship.

With the poet we join:

> There is no friend like an old friend
> Who has shared our morning days;
> No greeting like his welcome,
> No homage like his praise.
> Fame is the scentless sunflower
> With gaudy crown of gold,
> But friendship is the breathing rose
> With sweets in every fold.

We all join today in sorrow over Fred's untimely death and our hearts extend our utmost sympathy to his widow and relatives in their hour of bereavement.

While Fred is gone, his memory will linger with us like the aroma of beautiful flowers as long as life lasts.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary for anyone to repeat what has been said here by my colleagues from Michigan showing the value of the service rendered his district, State and Nation by our friend. There is only one note which I wish to add, and that is a personal one.

At the Republican State convention in 1938 Mr. BRADLEY introduced himself to me as a candidate for Congress from the Eleventh District, and wondered whether any of the Republicans who were in Congress would assist him. I told him I knew of one. He said he would call for me in Allegan. His home was near the northeastern end of the southern peninsula, mine in the southwest corner. He was doing his campaigning by auto and plane. I spent some 15 days in his district during that campaign.

If you will draw a line across the State, cutting off the upper third of the Lower Peninsula of Michigan, you have that section of his district. A line running east and west, cutting the northern peninsula in two, extending some four or five hundred miles east and west, taking the southern half, will give you that section of his district, the easternmost point being as far east as Toledo Ohio, while the western end is west of St. Louis, so you know something of the difficulties of campaigning in that district. Fred campaigned by plane and by auto, in fair weather and foul. We traveled from one end of the district to the other, sometimes by plane, and when forced down, then four or five hundred miles at a time by auto. Later, in a subsequent campaign, it was my privilege to be in that district for something like 10 days. It was hard, tiresome, uncomfortable work, and the days were long and the nights short.

You ask, What is the point of all this? The point is this, that during that 25 days, in the two campaigns, difficult as it was, tiresome as it was, and the weather was bad, there was never an hour when Fred was not looking first after my comfort, wanting to know and asking whether I was all right. He was not thinking of himself, of his own interests, but of the welfare of those around him. That was typical of his attitude during all the time I have known him, always thinking not of himself but of his friends and of what he could do for them. That characteristic is the thing that made him true and lasting friends. That is a quality that I think we might all keep in mind in our relationships with others. So today, putting aside this thought of the service he rendered to the country—and that was a great service—the thing that is first in my mind and heart is the way in which he always was so thoughtful of others, so solicitous of the welfare of all with whom he came in contact.

All who knew him wish him "good hunting" in the land to which he has gone.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JONKMAN].

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, once again we are forcefully reminded that the sands of life run swiftly; we know not when the silver cord will be loosed, the golden bowl be broken.

Our colleague, FRED BRADLEY, was one of the four youngest members of the Michigan delegation. He was the first of that membership of 17 to answer the last summons during my service in the Congress. This thought made even more poignant the shock when on Saturday last I heard of his passing on.

Apparently robust and in the full vigor of manhood, he had well begun his work as chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. For this task he was eminently fitted—he was a natural. In it he worked for the joy of working and took to his job with a zest and zeal that was an inspiration as well as a great service to the Congress and his country. The few months in his new responsibility gave promise and were an earnest and of a long and outstanding leadership in these difficult times. But the Master of all good workmen had other plans. He took FRED BRADLEY unto Himself.

The country has lost an outstanding public servant. Michigan has lost a great citizen and we have lost a valued friend. His beloved wife, his friends, and his constituents have our deepest sympathy.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it was with deep regret that we learned of the sudden passing of our colleague, FRED BRADLEY, of the Eleventh Michigan District. Those of us who were privileged to have his friendship will feel his loss very keenly. Fred was a keen student of public affairs and an able legislator. He was always fearless and forthright in the position he took on legislative issues and fought vigorously to uphold his convictions. His superb sense of loyalty to his country and to the people of his own congressional district helped to mitigate against his health. He worked long and assiduously to perform to the fullest extent all of his congressional duties. The chairmanship of the important Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which he assumed at the beginning of this Congress, added further to his burdens and responsibility, and I fear, contributed further to his ill health.

To Mrs. Bradley, his widow, and a very fine lady, we all extend our deepest sympathy.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the sad and shocking news of the premature passing of our distinguished colleague, FRED BRADLEY, brings to mind the friendly warning of but a fortnight ago when I pleaded with him to reduce his burdensome schedule of official duties which visibly was sapping his energy and health.

But FRED BRADLEY was not the kind to spare himself, to shirk responsibility, or lay down in harness. He had a duty to perform even at the risk or expense of life itself.

It is perfectly understandable how great was the load which crushed his rugged, manly frame and stilled the noble heart which with the two-fold purpose beat so friendly and warm for his fellow man and propelled him ever onward in the service of his constituency.

The lamentable passing of our colleague in the prime of life should serve to caution those of us left behind that danger lies ahead, and only the Lord knows who shall next be called before His throne. Watch and pray and take care meanwhile that you do not undertake to carry, at accelerated pace, a burden too great for your frail frame. That would be the advice of our departed friend and colleague.

May God rest his weary and deserving soul as He lends strength and consolation to his devoted wife and loved ones. We who have known him hold dear the precious equity of friendship and sorrow made easier to bear by the thought that our parting is but temporary and part of God's own plan and that someday we shall all meet again in Heaven.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, it was only within the last several months that I came to know FRED BRADLEY and in any wise have any friendship with him. He impressed me as one of the sturdy type. He impressed me as one who probably came from a long line of the sturdy type—I might say the fighting type of American citizen. Knowing him as I did, of course, my grief is not at all small, especially when one in the very prime and vigor of his life, when the career he had hoped for was opening before him. It is my prediction that had Mr. BRADLEY lived he would have made one of the outstanding chairmen of the committees of the present Congress.

To his family and the people of his district who I know must have been deeply personally devoted to him, I extend my deepest and most heartfelt sympathy.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I was with our late colleague and friend, FRED BRADLEY, on his last congressional assignment as a member of the Board of Visitors to the United States Coast Guard Academy at New London, Conn.

He had had a busy day going over the various problems in connection with the work of the academy and was about to leave for a week's rest in his home State of Michigan when death came suddenly.

It had been my great pleasure to serve actively with FRED BRADLEY on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, of which he was chairman, for the past 7 years. FRED BRADLEY had a keen interest in everything maritime. He was a great advocate of making the American merchant marine paramount on the high seas. All of his energies and efforts were centered in that direction. It was his hope that America would maintain that supremacy in the years to come.

He had a great love for his home State, and particularly the Great Lakes region. As a member of the Merchant Marine Committee, and later as chairman, he was responsible for the focusing of attention on this great area as a vital part of our great shipping operations. His determination and persistence were responsible for legislation that was not only beneficial to his own region but to the entire Nation as well.

He performed his duties as chairman with a high degree of fairness. Never have I known the element of partisanship to enter into the deliberations and discussions of our meetings. He was always determined to do only those things which would be in the best interests of the American merchant marine.

Mr. Speaker, I personally have lost a true and valued friend. The country, and the American merchant marine in particular, have lost an able and devoted public servant.

I join with my colleagues in extending to his family my deepest sympathy.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the House is saddened by the death of our late friend, FRED BRADLEY. Many great figures in the history of our country have come and gone as Members of this great body, and they have all left their imprint upon the legislative pages of this body and of our country. FRED BRADLEY, during his term of service in this body, served the people of his district, his State, and our country with devotion, and with seriousness. He has left his marked imprint upon the legislative pages of this great body.

We shall all miss him, those who knew him personally as well as those who knew him officially.

A serious mind, a pleasant personality, his leaving creates a gap that will be hard to fill. His unfortunate death has made a deep impression upon all his colleagues without regard to party. We all grieve his passing.

As chairman of the great Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries during this session of Congress FRED BRADLEY gave evidence of the great capacity he possessed as a legislator and was giving to that committee, to the House, and to the Congress the character of leadership so necessary in these trying days.

To his widow I join with the many friends of our late colleague in expressing my sympathy.

To the people of his district and to the State of Michigan and to the Michigan delegation in the House I join with my other colleagues in expressing my deep sorrow on the passing of this fine character, this outstanding legislator.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. COFFIN].

Mr. COFFIN. Mr. Speaker, as one of the newer Members of this Congress, I join with my colleagues and especially with the Members of the Michigan delegation in paying a tribute of love and respect to the memory of our friend, FRED BRADLEY.

The sentiments expressed on the floor of this House today give evidence of the high respect and regard in which he was held by the membership generally on both sides of the House. The statements that have been made here today by the members of his committee, over which he has served with such distinction as chairman during this first session of the Eightieth Congress have been particularly impressive. FRED BRADLEY on many occasions has gone out of his way to be helpful to me as a freshman Member of this Congress. On numerous occasions when I have gone to him with a request for advice and counsel with regard to matters which were being handled by the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee I have been deeply impressed with his thorough and complete knowledge of every problem that was before his committee for consideration. In almost every instance he knew the answer to the question which brought me to his office. If he did not know the answer, he never would permit me to depart from his office until he had secured from others the information I was seeking. His consecration and devotion to the responsibility of his high office as chairman of this committee were both amazing and inspiring and his intelligence with reference to all matters affecting the problems of our merchant marine and fisheries was amazing to me. Although it has been my privilege to know FRED BRADLEY for only a few months, I pay to his memory today the debt of gratitude that I often tried so inadequately to express to him in our many contacts in his office. My thoughts go out particularly at this hour to the wife who even in her grief at his passing must find comfort in the loyalty of FRED BRADLEY'S devotion to the interests of his country and in the great service which he has been permitted to render in the work of this present Congress.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNGBLOOD].

Mr. YOUNGBLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I was profoundly shocked to learn of the all too untimely death of our colleague, FRED BRADLEY, of Michigan. I came to know him well and regarded him as one of the leaders in Congress. At a later and more appropriate time I will address the membership of this body in tribute to my departed friend.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, again the House is called upon to perform a melancholy task. FRED BRADLEY, whose memory we shall long cherish, had many splendid attributes, the most outstanding of which were his fearlessness and devotion to the welfare of our country. He occupied, as has been stated by previous speakers, a very important position in this organization, and he was admirably equipped for the work that lay ahead of him. Unfortunately, FRED BRADLEY took little heed of his own personal welfare and comfort. He utterly disregarded the precept of that old Chinese philosopher who said: "Relax, it is later than you think."

FRED BRADLEY gave a full measure of his strength and of his ability to his country, to his State, and to his district. I need not say that we shall all miss him. To his devoted wife we give our sympathy and words of comfort. We truly grieve with her in the great loss she has sustained.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI].

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I was deeply shocked and grieved to learn of the sudden and untimely death of FRED BRADLEY, my friend and colleague from Michigan.

Today, first of all, we want to extend our deepest heartfelt sympathies to his good wife and companion, and to the members of his family. We join her in mourning in this hour of sorrow, and pray that God may give her courage and strength to bear her burden.

Although FRED BRADLEY was a Republican and belonged to his party organization, he was never a narrow partisan. Democrats and Republicans alike honored, respected, and loved him.

He was a leader, and an energetic, hard-working legislator who was painstaking, thorough, and dependable and took a broad national view of his responsibilities as a Member of Congress. His country's welfare came first in the discharge of his duties in Congress, and he was faithful to the trust that the people of Michigan reposed in him. He served them impartially and to the utmost of his unusual ability.

He was a good friend to all of us. This is why he enjoyed the respect and esteem of the whole Michigan delegation, regardless of party, and I know that this is the feeling of the entire membership of the House of Representatives. He was a man of great character and pleasant disposition a great American and a true Christian.

FRED BRADLEY represented the Eleventh Congressional District of Michigan. This is the northern part of the State, often referred to as God's country, the vacationers' paradise. This district borders on three of the Great Lakes—Lake Superior, Lake Michigan, and Lake Huron. This is the land of greatness—great trees, great forests, great lakes, ocean-sized vessels, great fishing, great hunting, plenty of deer, bear, and game of all kinds. Some great blizzards and great storms, too. Here you see Nature in all its splendor and glory. Here you also see Nature as rough and tough, powerful and dynamic.

FRED BRADLEY was truly a part of his district. He not only represented it; he lived it, he reflected its every mood and season. He was part of the great north country. He was truly a man from northern Michigan. A pleasant disposition, generous and kindly, soft and considerate of others; yet a man with unlimited energy, great driving power, and physical strength.

He loved to work hard. He did not know what it was to rest and take it easy. He loved ships and the great waters of northern Michigan. He loved to fish and hunt. He loved the great outdoors, his dog, the woods, the streams. He loved all of nature and its wonders. He loved his district and its people. The people loved him and elected him again and again.

In his passing we have lost a friend and a worthy and able colleague; the State of Michigan and the Nation have lost a loyal and devoted citizen and public servant. His colleagues, the Congress, his State, and his country will miss him.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND].

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, I was greatly shocked late Saturday evening to hear over the radio of the death of our good friend and colleague, FRED BRADLEY. I was shocked because at 2 o'clock in the afternoon I shook hands with him on the steps of the administration building at the United States Coast Guard Academy, in New London, Conn., and bid him a good vacation. Fred had planned that instead of returning to Washington with the Board of Visitors he would go to New York and there board a train and go to Michigan for a week's rest.

I well recall my last words to him. In a jesting mood I said: "It is very nice of you fellows"—I was referring to the members of the Board of Visitors who were not flying back with us—"to see us off and to you, Fred," and I extended my hand, "let us hope your vacation is a good one because you need it."

Fred was a man of rather gruff appearance, but within that breast of his was a heart of gold. He thought not of himself but of others. While we were of opposite political parties we were the closest friends. I mourn his answer to the last roll call.

To his wife, to his family, to the people of his district I extend my sympathy and, to you, let me say that this country is better because FRED BRADLEY has lived.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, as a new Member it has been my privilege to know FRED BRADLEY only a short time in comparison with many of you, but due to the fact that we have the same name, to the probability that we were distantly related, to our similarity of interests in ships and shipping, and to my membership on the committee of which he was chairman, I have been in close contact with him and have learned to appreciate his rugged virtues and his sterling honesty.

Fred and I have traveled together; we have addressed the same meetings; we have tried to solve the same problems, some of the most difficult which confront the Nation in matters pertaining to the sea.

Fred loved his country, his State, his home, his family, his friends, and his ships—whether those ships sailed the oceans of the world or the inland seas we call the Great Lakes. He met life boldly even as a stanch ship meets the waters of a turbulent ocean. He basked in the sunshine of good weather. He smiled and fought on when the going was tough.

I shall sorely miss FRED BRADLEY, the gentleman from Michigan, the friend of fishermen, of seamen, of canal workers, of wildlife conservationists, of the industrialists who make jobs possible, and of every true American.

May we who go on in life struggling against the obstacles of injustice, poverty, and oppression keep the thought of this departed friend ever green in our memories so that we may better serve America—the land which God has allotted to our safekeeping.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAND].

Mr. HAND. Mr. Speaker, after years of service, which was always too strenuous, it can now truthfully be said that FRED BRADLEY has yielded up to his country the last full measure of devotion. It has been frequently said in the last few minutes, and with great truth, that he always worked too hard; that he cared more for others; that he paid more attention to his duties to his country than he did for himself; and that I know particularly well because in the last few days I was with him a great deal of the time. He spoke in New York on Wednesday evening on matters of consequence to the merchant marine of this country. He came back and spoke again in Washington Thursday evening on the same subject. He left early Friday with the Board of Visitors for New London, Conn., and spent two strenuous days there, and it can be said that up until the very minute of his death, almost, because his death was very sudden, he was engaged in a strenuous and patriotic and selfless service to his country.

I might say of him as the chairman of his committee, which I have the privilege of being a member, that nowhere was his selflessness and his self-effacing more apparent. He was doing a grand job on that committee, and one of the reasons why he did is because he gave to all the membership duties to perform, and he effaced himself. That virtue was no more freely characterized than on this last trip that we took with him to New London. He was a grand man, an unselfish man, a distinguished chairman, and a great American, and his death leaves the House and the Nation much poorer.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER].

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, on becoming a Member of the House of Representatives, I was assigned to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. There I met the friend whom we mourn today. Those were the trying days of the approach of war. During the war that committee had a dual service to perform with the Committee on Naval Affairs and the other great committees that handled the legislation authorizing the effort that we put forth for that great struggle. Among the membership of that committee was FRED BRADLEY. He was faithful. He was attentive. He was always present, and as the war progressed and as controversial legislation came before the committee, FRED BRADLEY was fair. FRED BRADLEY was just in the charges that arose in the consideration of the committee. He lent his effort and his strength to the then chairman of the committee, who was having a difficult time. Because of his fairness, his kindness, and his justice in his associations with the other members of the committee, I became very much attached to him. As the years went on, I had the pleasure of accompanying him on missions for the committee. There I learned to know him better; there I learned to admire him more. I can truthfully say he was a fair, square shooter and an earnest, hard worker for the welfare and the progress not only of Congress and the Nation but all those with whom he came in contact. I learned to admire him highly and to enjoy his company. I was delighted when he became chairman of the Merchant Marine Committee. As chairman, he never disappointed me. I approved his leadership. Saturday, when I heard the sad news of his passing, my wife and I both bowed our heads, because we had had jointly the pleasure of knowing him and his fine wife and being associated with them on many occasions. I shall miss Fred as you will miss him. We will miss him as the folks back home will miss him. God take care of his soul and rest his spirit.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTS].

Mr. POTTS. Mr. Speaker, I came to know FRED BRADLEY when I was appointed to the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Fred was a very stern man, a very firm man, when he needed to be, but beneath his hard outward crust there beat a very warm heart. He was always very kind with all of his friends. He was always eminently fair. There was not a witness who appeared before the committee who did not feel that he got a fair break before FRED BRADLEY.

We who are members of that committee were not particularly shocked at his passing, because we rather expected it. We knew the way he was driving himself and the fits of coughing he had which were an outward sign of his heart condition. Many of us on the committee commented that we wished Fred would take it easy, that we were afraid for his health. What we feared has come to pass. He knew that he was sick. He knew that he should not have gone to the Panama Canal with the committee, but he did. He had been there before, and there was no real occasion for his so endangering himself. He came with the Board of Visitors to the Kings Point Merchant Marine Academy just a week ago. I was on that Board. He was a pretty sick man then. He could not climb the stairs, but he did show up at the Academy.

He knew ships. His father before him had been a merchant mariner, and he carried on in a great tradition. There was nothing about ships that he did not know or could not understand. He really knew his subject.

I know it is a great loss to his wife, to his State, and to his constituents that Fred is gone. They will miss him, and we will miss him, too.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT].

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in times like these, when the Grim Reaper has come within our midst and has claimed the life of one of our loved ones, we do not find words to express the feelings that are in our hearts. FRED BRADLEY is gone, and in his passing the people of the Eleventh District of Michigan and the people of this country have lost a great American. To his lovely and devoted wife, Marie, we join in expressing our deepest sympathy.

FRED BRADLEY and I came to Congress at the same time. We were part of that large group which came here with the Seventy-sixth Congress. Almost from that first day there grew up between his family and mine a real and lasting friendship. I had the pleasure of visiting Fred in his home up around the Straits of Michigan and came to know something of the esteem and admiration with which those fine people looked at Fred as their Member of Congress.

In times like these it is difficult to understand the whys of all this. In fact, we cannot understand. It is for us but to believe and to hold fast to our belief in immortality and to the faith that we will see our friend Fred again in another world.

That belief that was best expressed by the poet who wrote:

Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress trees!
Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
Nor looks to see the breaking day
Across the mournful marbles play!
Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
That life is ever lord of death,
And love can never lose its own!

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, as was stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT], who just addressed the Chamber, FRED BRADLEY came to Congress in the class of seventy-six, of which both Mr. GRANT and I were also Members.

Due to the fact that almost every Wednesday night that Congress has been in session since that time the Republican Members of the Seventy-sixth Congress have met around the dinner table and discussed matters of public business and listened to speeches on public affairs, there has grown up a very close special attachment among the members of what we call the Seventy-six Club. Among the members of that group FRED BRADLEY was very prominent and very highly respected. He was a very loyal attendant at those meetings.

Those of us who came to know him so well through these weekly occasions recognized early that FRED BRADLEY was as forthright as he was friendly. He was a man of very strong likes and dislikes. Anybody who knew FRED BRADLEY at all always knew where FRED BRADLEY stood. He disliked anything shoddy. He disliked anything un-American. He abominated communism. He disliked the chiseler and the short sport. He was always prominent in activities and in legislative matters which would eliminate cheating, bad sportsmanship, and unfairness in any form.

I think it is typical of Fred that he took time from his busy life to introduce legislation to protect homeless dogs in Washington because Fred loved dogs and dogs liked Fred, which is after all a pretty good measure of a man.

Fred was equally emphatic in his likes. He loved America and the people of America, regardless of rank, position, or power. He loved the out of doors. He loved to hear the crack of a gun in the field and he loved to listen to the zing of a fishing reel. He loved to feel the roll of a boat under his feet because he loved nature. He was in truth one of nature's noblemen.

FRED BRADLEY and his charming wife, Marie, are very special friends of Mrs. Mundt and me. We were together many times. I was at his home just last night. While his death came unexpectedly to us, I am sure it did not come unexpectedly to Fred. He had been warned about his heart condition. About a year ago he spent several weeks at naval hospital with the ailment which eventually terminated his career. He was warned to take it easy, to go slow; but typical of Fred he chose the braver and nobler course. He refused to slow down. He refused to take it easy. So Fred went out as he went on, with colors flying, and the signal in the pilot room reading, "full speed ahead."

To his wife, Marie, and the relatives, I extend my greatest sympathy. To the people of Michigan who elected him, I congratulate them on their wisdom in their choice, and commiserate with them in their misery at his passing. The Congress and the country have lost a great man and the merchant marine industry one of its greatest lifetime friends. The ancient writer, Agricola, one time said, "Death comes to all, but great achievements raise a monument which shall endure until the sun grows cold." The achievements of FRED BRADLEY in his unhappily abbreviated career will long bear living testimony to his rugged personality, his generous spirit, and his great love for America. May his spirit rest in peace.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE].

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, we have gathered today to pay tribute to a loyal friend and colleague who died suddenly at New Britain, Conn., while on tour of duty at the Marine College last Saturday, May 24.

Mrs. Gillie and I were profoundly shocked to pick up the Baltimore Sun at the home of our daughter in Baltimore Sunday and to learn of the sudden death of FRED BRADLEY. I have not yet overcome the shock as his death still seems unreal.

FRED BRADLEY and I came to the Congress 9 years ago—the Seventy-sixth Congress. I learned to know him intimately. He was a tireless worker in the House. Later, he became chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, subjects on which he was so well informed. He labored long and enthusiastically to try and help its cause. Fred's father, who was the founder of the Bradley Line on the Great Lakes, gave him the knowledge and foresight for the work he was to carry on in this great committee.

Fred not only worked hard, but he played hard. He loved the great out-of-doors, was a great hunter and fisherman. I have been his guest several times at his lovely cottage on beautiful Grand Lake, Mich. As a host he was a past master, looking after your every want at all times. His guests were given every consideration during their stay.

Fred was one of the organizers and leaders of the Wednesday Evening Club, of which I am a member. It was organized by the Republican Members of the Seventy-sixth Congress, at which top-flight Government men and others spoke on important Government problems.

He was an agreeable companion, loyal and sincere in the discharge of self-assumed obligations and duties. He was a sturdy citizen of the great State of Michigan who has done much for his country and for his constituency of the Eleventh District.

Fred will be remembered for his gentle traits of character which endeared him to his many friends.

And to his lovely wife, Marie—may the precious memories you cherish of your life together and of Fred's unselfish devotion to you and to his country, sustain you now and in the days to come.

The sentiments expressed in the following poem seem to me to bespeak the thoughts that come to my mind at the passing of this fine friend and American:

THE END OF THE ROAD

Tonight we have come to the end of the road, and the way gleams white behind,
With but few dark splotches to mar its course, a few that are hard to find—
But the length of the road gleams white, my friend, for the journey was well run,
And we come to the end with a brief regret, that at last the task is done.
There was joy in seeking the distant goal, whatever the odds between,
There was faith in surmounting the higher hill, with a vision to be seen;
Thus we laughed as we battled them, one by one, for we knew we could not fail,
And we gloried in sighting a farther one, close by the end of the trail.
Here's a sigh for the vales and pleasant dales, for the streams that glided through,
Here's a sigh for the friends whom we met en route and a hope that they win out, too.
To the end of the road with a course well run, what epitaph more could say?
That we held to the faith as we journeyed through and smiled as we won our way?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LARCADE].

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, while I had occasion to know FRED BRADLEY only casually during my first 4 years in the Congress, it was only in the early part of this term that I came to know him well, having been with him every day for 2 weeks on a Merchant Marine Committee investigation trip to the Panama Canal.

Some of us take a longer time to really know a man, but I learned in that time to know FRED BRADLEY. Some of us do not know a man until we see him "carry the ball."

As chairman of the Merchant Marine Committee charged with the supervision of the Panama Canal FRED BRADLEY recognized fully the responsibilities of his committee with respect to this most important and strategic holding of our Government with its huge financial investment, and since under the reorganization of the Congress there were many new members of the Merchant Marine Committee, Mr. BRADLEY decided that it was not only necessary for the new members of the committee to visit Panama, but also the other members of the committee who had not been there, in order that they might see first hand the immensity of the agency they were charged to supervise, but also to make an investigation as to whether or not the Canal Zone was properly and economically administered.

Changes and improvements in the Canal Zone were being proposed and FRED BRADLEY insisted that his committee visit Panama to make an investigation, not only in this regard, but from every angle. He was that way about everything. He had to be convinced.

Mr. Speaker, FRED BRADLEY was a courageous man. He was a man of high character, a patriotic American, a fearless leader, yet most considerate and tolerant toward others. He was charitable, yet exacting.

Our country has lost an able and valuable Member of the Congress, and we in the House have lost a fine colleague.

I join in extending our heartfelt sympathy and condolence to Mrs. Bradley.

As Shakespeare said:

That strain again; it had a dying fall;
Oh! it came o'er my ear like the sweet South,
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing and giving odor.

Mr. Speaker, we can well use the words of Halleck in our farewell to FRED BRADLEY:

Green be the turf above thee,
Friend of our better days;
None knew thee but to love thee
Nor named thee but to praise.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, we have lost a valuable Member, a great American, and a good friend to all of us. I have been an admirer of FRED BRADLEY for many years. He was a fraternity brother of mine. He belonged to the Delta Chi of Cornell University. I followed his career for many years while he was at Cornell. He was one of the most popular men who ever entered the university. He had a fine influence on those with whom he associated. There are literally thousands of Cornell men and women today who will mourn the death of FRED BRADLEY.

He had all the qualities of a fine sailor; he had all the bravery and the courage of a real navigator. He knew that the ship which his spirit occupied was hardly able to weather the storm of this great forum, but he carried on like a true sailor, headed into the storm and carried through to the end. Let us, his friends here mourning and bidding him goodbye, realize that as he sailed out on the high seas for another world and disappeared over the horizon, let us have faith that on the shore of that other world stand many friends waiting to welcome him to his final home.

I sympathize deeply with his wife. He had a happy domestic life.

The friends and loved ones he leaves behind can well be proud of the fine record he has made here in Congress. He has really made a great contribution to the welfare of his country.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL].

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to come to the House in the same Congress with FRED BRADLEY. Throughout the years I found him to be a friend such as Marc Antony had in Caesar: He was my friend, faithful and just to me.

To give you some idea of the typical energy of FRED BRADLEY's make-up let me recall that one evening about 12 midnight Fred called me and asked me to go with him on a sojourn which would have taken us a hundred miles into Virginia to attend an international conference, because he felt that it was the duty of Members of Congress to be present at this particular gathering to look after the interests of America.

FRED BRADLEY was a great American. He was a patriotic citizen. He served his district well in Congress.

When one of our associates passes away or when someone close to us leaves us we are wont to associate the incident with the words of the bard of Avon—I think this applies particularly to our departed colleague in our sentiment and feeling toward him:

For it so falls out
That what we have we prize not to its worth
Whiles we enjoy it, but being lack'd and lost,
Why, then we rack the value; then we find
The virtue that possession would not show us
Whiles it was ours.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS].

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Speaker, the death of FRED BRADLEY hit me mighty hard. I am another of those who came here with him in the Seventy-sixth Congress. We always felt that the Spirit of '76 dominated us and were an independent crowd. Fred was certainly independent. I am another of the members of the Wednesday Night Club that Fred attended so regularly. I have been in his home, I have flown with him in his airplane. He was a great-hearted friend and I shall miss him. I know how his fine wife, Marie, is going to miss him. My heart goes out to her, and to all his family, for I shall miss him, too.

I know how the people of his district will miss him, because FRED BRADLEY put his district on the map with me as few other Congressmen have. Many of you remember the smelt festival that he gave here when he entertained the whole House one evening down in the dining room and conducted some championship contests and had the Queen of Smeltania there and made everybody realize what a great district he had.

He was a valuable man on the House floor and in committee; he was a valuable man to his country.

But what I thought about Fred most is that he exemplified this word we speak of so often—self sacrifice. He believed in sacrificing himself. He realized that time cannot be saved; it can only be spent.

Mr. Speaker, I never knew a man who drove himself as hard as FRED BRADLEY; I never knew a man who looked so stern yet was so gentle; I never knew a man who tried so to give the appearance of being hard, yet once you had any contacts with him you realized that he was soft-hearted, great-hearted, gentle and generous.

At a time like this we all think about immortality. I am thinking of Fred now. He is not dead. FRED BRADLEY was too tough to kill, he was too fine to die. He had a spirit that will never die and while he is not here now physically, he is around us spiritually, he is living and will live in our hearts and in our memories, forever. His is the kind of indomitable spirit that does not die.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAVIN].

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, the passing of our very dear friend and colleague, FRED BRADLEY, brings great sorrow to our hearts.

Over the past several years I learned to know him and admire him greatly. He was a cheerful, friendly fellow who delighted when any acts or deeds of his brought happiness to the rest of us.

His devotion to and love of country was something to be admired. He was earnest and sincere, and always ambitious to uphold and defend the fine ideals and traditions of our Nation.

We are all mindful of the great service he has rendered and his devotion to the best and finest things in life.

He strove mightily to attain those objectives which he thought were for the best interests of all our people. In his daily life he manifested a fine spirit of good fellowship that we all so greatly enjoyed.

His work here in the Congress was outstanding and will be long remembered.

May God give to his wife and family great comfort and consolation at this time. We pay him this last tribute and bid him this last farewell.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD].

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it was with profound sorrow and the keenest sense of personal loss I learned of the passing of our friend and beloved colleague from Michigan, FRED BRADLEY.

It was my good fortune to become intimately acquainted with Fred shortly after we were elected to the Seventy-sixth Congress, almost 9 years ago. During that time I not only came to admire and respect him as a fine patriotic, conscientious public servant, but will always cherish the memory of him as one of my best and truest friends.

Everyone takes pride in a man who thinks straight, says what he thinks, and votes the way he talks. Such a man was FRED BRADLEY. He fought for what he believed was right, and he believed in those basic principles of American freedom which have made this country great. He had unbounded courage to publicly state his convictions. He stood steadfast by those convictions first, last and all the time.

No one was better qualified by experience and background to be chairman of the important Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. With his wide business experience in shipping, his boundless energy to acquaint himself with every detail of his burdensome task, he literally worked himself to death. He died just as much for his country as if he had been killed in battle.

There are few indeed in public office who will sacrifice not only their lives but spend considerable of their own personal fortunes in serving their constituency. FRED did exactly that.

To those of us who knew Fred best, it was not his statesmanlike ability to carry out his official work far beyond the call of duty that we admired, but his kindliness, his generosity, and devotion to his family and friends.

Fred loved the Northland—its forests, lakes, and streams. He thoroughly enjoyed hunting, fishing, and other sports which it so abundantly affords. He had a kindly affection for all dumb animals and was especially devoted to his faithful dog Curly who lies buried there.

Fred is going home to the country he loved. Not only his constituency and his State, but the Nation will mourn his passing.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may be permitted to extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, there is little that I can add to what has already been said about the passing of our distinguished colleague, the Honorable FRED BRADLEY, of Michigan.

Along with the rest of you, I join in extending my heartfelt sympathy to his bereaved widow, one of the most elegant ladies who ever graced the Nation's Capital.

Someone has referred to the friendships that spring up between members of the different political parties in this House as the flowers that overhang the walls of party politics.

FRED BRADLEY was one of the best friends I had in this body; and I valued that friendship beyond measure.

My love and admiration for him sprang from the fact that he was a great American whose loyalty and devotion to his country rose high about the scramble for party vantage or the noisy clamor of men for place and power.

He possessed that rare quality which Vice President Garner said was so badly needed in both Houses of Congress, and that is moral courage. He had the courage to vote his convictions and to stand for what he thought was to the best interest of his country. If we had more men with the courage and patriotism of FRED BRADLEY in both Houses of Congress, and in every department of this Government, communism would not dare raise its loathsome head in our midst, and our Nation would soon be relieved of the menace of the enemies within our gates.

I cannot realize that he is gone. It seems but yesterday that I had a long conversation with him in the rear of the Chamber on the activities of the Communist menace in this country. I did not know then that he was leaving on his last voyage, or taking his final flight in his attempts to strengthen our country from within.

If I had, I would have said to him:

May those winged winds that round your pathway roar
Waft you to some favored spot, where mortals weep no more.
Or may the rolling of the mighty deep, whose billows round you play
Bear you to some sacred place, some haven far away,
Where the weary soul may find the bliss for which it sighs,
Where sorrow never lives and friendship never dies.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, today we have assembled to pay our last tribute to one of our fellow workers who has passed into the great beyond—FRED BRADLEY, of Michigan.

We entered Congress at the same time, on January 3, 1939. We were first sworn in together to serve in this great lawmaking body. We became warm friends upon entering Congress, and this fine friendship has continued, without abatement, until he was called into the Great Beyond on last Saturday. Now, that friendship is but a treasured memory—which will long endure. FRED BRADLEY was a loyal friend, a kindly neighbor, and an outstanding statesman. He was fearless and he was brave—yet, with it all, he was kind and he was generous to all mankind.

Mr. Speaker, the imprint which FRED BRADLEY has left with me—which will long remain—was his tremendous and unabated loyalty to his country, to our people, and to our Constitution. In all of his activities in Congress, his sturdy loyalty to our Nation, to all of the people, and to our form of government was ever apparent. He ever asserted strength in his likes and his dislikes, and as he meditated thus he spoke. He was an archenemy of communism and of every form of un-Americanism; he firmly believed in combating every doctrine which was subversive in whole or in part, or which was in any manner inimical to a 100 percent Americanism. He loved the people of his great State of Michigan. The people were his friends and he was their friend. It was there and among them that he enjoyed the pleasantries of youth, there he attended the institutions of learning, and there, too, he met and conquered the privations and hardships which he confronted; thus, he became deep-rooted in his great affection for all of those about him. The people of his district, and of his State, quickly learned that he was a stanch and loyal friend in whom they could repose the choicest ideals of life. He never betrayed their confidence. He was sincere, and he was honorable, in all of the activities of life.

Mr. Speaker, my good friend, whose memory I will long cherish lived as he died—and he died as he lived—with the weight of the livid problems of the people before him. He was at his post of duty when the silent summons came. He was unafraid. He responded to that summons—just as he had responded to every call during life.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the life work of FRED BRADLEY was ended. The brilliant career of our kindly friend was thus terminated.

FRED BRADLEY needs no encomium. His life and his living of it stand before us as his monument.

We can but say:

Away. We know that tears are vain,
That death nor heeds nor hears distress;
Will this unteach us to complain?
Or make one mourner weep the less?
And thou, who tellst me to forget,
Thy looks are wan, thine eyes are wet.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I, with every other friend of the late Honorable FRED BRADLEY, was shocked to hear of his sudden passing on Saturday last.

When Fred first came to Congress he became a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. We were closely associated in the work of that committee until I assumed my present duties as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the House of Representatives, when it became necessary for me to surrender my membership with him on the Merchant Marine Committee.

To know Congressman BRADLEY was to have a deep affection for him. His sincerity of purpose and devotion to the American Merchant Marine were surpassed by no Member of Congress within my memory. His early training and environment based upon his family's maritime interests gave him the opportunity to early know the problems of the American merchant marine. He used this knowledge for its constructive development as both an arm of our peacetime economy and our wartime national defense. His sudden passing leaves a void at one of the most crucial periods in the history of the American merchant marine. The Nation, the State of Michigan, his congressional district, and his family have suffered a great loss.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, one of our Ohio colleagues, Mr. JOHN VORYS, evidently had in mind that the late Dr. Washington Gladden, author of the hymn, Oh Master Let Me Walk With Thee, was thinking of such men as our colleague, FRED BRADLEY, when he stated, "Life is to be spent, not saved."

FRED BRADLEY truly spent his life in behalf of his country and others. Again and again FRED BRADLEY had been told by those of professional skill to take it easy, to relax, and to save himself. Yes; he had been warned not to go to Panama and New London, but Fred thought not of saving himself but spent everything he had, knowing that he had the skill that would save his country and could do so more constructively in regard to the merchant marine, its activities, and our shores and lakes as well.

"He who gives his life shall find it," and today FRED BRADLEY is finding abundant life because he just gave it. Like most Members of Congress, FRED BRADLEY was a hypocrite in reverse. On the outside he pretended nothing, he gave the impression of one with a rough exterior, but the inner self of FRED BRADLEY meant, "I give all for my Lord and my country."

Most of us do not know who will be the next President and it does not matter much when all is said. None of us know the outcome of some issues about which there is so much strain, nor should we care. The only thing that should concern us is that we live like FRED BRADLEY, pretending nothing, trying to impress nobody, but giving our all.

Therefore, from the life of FRED BRADLEY and others, there is one thing we know, "There is no death." What is called death is a misnomer and in passing on, FRED BRADLEY will not enter a blind alley but a thoroughfare, and a real thoroughfare to eternal happiness which he has earned.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, according to our modern standards, FRED BRADLEY did not live long, but he lived much. In his 49 years he lived harder and accomplished more than most men at the age of threescore years and ten.

He had not passed on life's highway the stone that marks the highest point, but being weary for a moment he lay down by the wayside and, using his burden for a pillow, fell into that dreamless sleep that kisses down his eyelids still. While in love with life and enraptured with the world, he passed to silent and pathetic dust. Yet it may be best, just in the happiest, sunniest hour of all the voyage, while eager winds are kissing every sail, to dash against the unseen rock, and in an instant hear the billows roar above a sunken ship. For whether in midsea or among the breakers on the farther shore, a wreck at last must mark the end of each and all.

FRED BRADLEY, who loved ships so well, has sailed his last voyage on this earth and has launched upon that journey from which no traveler returns. He lived intensely and he died gamely. He was a true apostle of the strenuous life. He bubbled over with energy and drove himself hard—those around him also had to move.

If he had desired, FRED BRADLEY could have lived a life of ease and comfort, but there was nothing soft about him. He deliberately chose the hard road of unselfish service to his district, his State, and Nation. His greatest satisfaction came to him after a hard job well done. After graduating from Cornell University, he became a salesman for his father's firm, which quarried limestone in northern Michigan and engaged in shipping on the Great Lakes. He met all kinds of people in this varied industry and developed resourcefulness and strength through keen competition. He could become theoretical, but always remained practical.

Shortly after his election to the Seventy-sixth Congress in 1938, I became acquainted with Fred and during the years we have served together in Congress I came to know him well. I learned not merely to respect him but a bond of affection grew up between us. He was not always easily understood, and it required time for anyone to break through certain barriers to discover the real person he was. Because of his strong convictions there were times when he appeared hard, but beneath his bold exterior and back of his startling candor there was a big and kind heart, and an absolute and uncompromising honesty.

FRED BRADLEY was a formidable opponent and on any level and under any circumstances he was worthy of any man's steel. I never saw a more fearless individual. He possessed great physical and moral courage. There was plenty of Irish in Fred. For him an ideal or a principle was to be not only accepted intellectually but defended with his whole being.

The things about Fred we will always remember and can never forget were his human qualities. He was a true sportsman. Every type and form of athletics interested him, particularly baseball, football, and boxing—provided each sport was clean. He wanted the game to be played according to the rules and frowned upon cheating or taking undue advantage. He loved the great outdoors and enjoyed fishing, hunting, and boating as much as an adolescent youth. He loved the woods and the sea, good food, and rich fellowship.

Many of us enjoyed delightful trips with him in his boat on the Potomac. We have been the recipients of the gracious and generous hospitality of him and his dear wife in their lovely home. We shall cherish the memories of the good times we have spent in his home and ours; in his office and ours. On the trips we have taken together and in the quiet conversations we have had alone, we learned to know his big heart, his kind soul, and generous spirit. No one could ever love animals, especially dogs, as much as FRED BRADLEY did, and be mean to any human being. He loved children, and his interest in disabled veterans was genuine and touching. It afforded him much pleasure to bring the injured from Walter Reed Hospital into his own home and even to give some employment. He always seemed to be thinking of new ways to help somebody. He spent much of his salary on long-distance calls from Washington to Michigan trying to help some constituent in even a minor matter.

Because of his inherited interest in ships and his practical experience with them, he served, since coming to Congress, on the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. At the beginning of this Congress he was elevated to the chairmanship of this important and powerful committee. It was the fulfillment of a keen ambition and he devoted every ounce of his energy—which seemed to be boundless—to the job.

After visiting two of the hearings of his committee this session, I was impressed with the efficient manner in which he conducted its hearings, but was disturbed over his physical condition because anyone could plainly see that he was literally burning himself up. Only a short time ago I pleaded with him to take things more easily and to try to get some rest because we all knew, and so did he, that he spent several weeks during the last session in the naval hospital.

In addition to his arduous work in committee and on the floor of the House, he personally answered voluminous correspondence and prepared a weekly broadcast to the people of his district. The trips of inspection and investigation, coupled with innumerable interviews, finally broke his resolute will, his determined spirit, and rugged physique. His stout heart could not carry such a heavy load and last Saturday it ran down and stopped beating. Fred died as he would have chosen—at his post of duty.

Many times Fred would have me quote the following lines by John G. Neihardt:

Let me live out my years in heat of blood.
Let me die drunken with the dreamer's wine.
Let me not see this soul-house built of mud
Go toppling to the dust—a vacant shrine.

Let me go quickly like a candlelight
Snuffed out just at the heyday of its glow.
Give me high noon—and let it then be night.
Thus would I go.

And grant me, when I face the grisly thing,
One haughty cry to pierce the gray, perhaps.
Oh, let me be a tune-swept fiddle string,
That feels the master melody—and snaps.

FRED BRADLEY died "in heat of blood" and went "quickly like a candlelight snapped out just at the heyday of its glow." He had felt the "master melody" and snapped like a "tune-swept fiddle string." He would not change it.

At last FRED BRADLEY has gained rest and peace from his trying and exacting labors and has gone to his reward for having served God and country well.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, it was not my privilege to know Congressman FRED BRADLEY until I came to Congress this last January. About the first contact I had with him was one day when he called me up and told me the subcommittees to which he had appointed me, stating that I was to be chairman of the Subcommittee on Conservation of Wildlife Resources. This was entirely unexpected but was an opportunity for which I shall always be grateful to him.

I learned to know FRED BRADLEY as a tremenously hard worker, very conscientious, and under a brusque manner, a geniality and cordiality of spirit that was delightful. I liked him very much. He thought of others more than he did for himself. He was a great chairman of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, and I regret tremendously that he could not be spared to go on and develop this work, as I know he wished to do.

I am sure the Members of the House and of the great committee of which he was chairman will miss his presence. For myself, I feel that I have lost a real new-found friend, and extend my deep sympathy to Mrs. Bradley and other members of his family.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay my humble tribute to a great leader and esteemed friend the Honorable FRED BRADLEY, of Michigan, whose sudden passing has come as a great shock to all of us.

In the death of FRED BRADLEY, Mr. Speaker, the Nation has lost an able, conscientious, and aggressive leader who never wavered in the defense of his high, patriotic principles. He was hard hitting and hard driving in carrying out his work as a Member of Congress, but he was admired and respected at all times by all who knew him.

He died as he lived, serving his people. His record in Congress should serve as an inspiration and challenge to all of us.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution today adopted by the Michigan delegation:

Whereas the Michigan delegation in the United States House of Representatives has learned with profound sorrow of the untimely passing of our friend and colleague, Hon. FRED BRADLEY; and

Whereas for more than 8 years we have had the wise counsel and inspiration of our colleague, whose every moment gleamed with love of friends and every hour studded thick with jewels of loyalty and service to his State and to his Nation; and

Whereas our Maker has seen fit to call our colleague from our midst, though many milestones were left unpassed on the road of life and ere the setting sun cast its shadows to the east: Therefore be it

Resolved, That in the passing of Hon. FRED BRADLEY the State of Michigan and its Eleventh Congressional District and the Nation itself have lost a true statesman and a faithful servant, and the Michigan delegation in Congress has been deprived of the judgment and ability of a great American and an able legislator; and be it further

Resolved, That we, the Michigan congressional delegation in the Eightieth Congress, do by this means express our deep regret that his career has been brought to a close at a time when his highest ambitions and ideals were being realized; and be it further

Resolved, That, while we feel the ineffectiveness of any act of ours to in any way assuage the grief of his widow, we extend to her our deepest sympathy in this her hour of bereavement.

ROY O. WOODRUFF, EARL C. MICHENER, JESSE P. WOLCOTT, GEORGE A. DONDERO, FRED L. CRAWFORD, ALBERT J. ENGEL, CLARE E. HOFFMAN, PAUL W. SHAFER, WILLIAM W. BLACKNEY, BARTEL J. JONKMAN, JOHN B. BENNETT, HOWARD A. COFFIN, HAROLD F. YOUNGBLOOD, JOHN D. DINGELL, JOHN LESINSKI, GEORGE G. SADOWSKI.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 217), which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 217

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. FRED BRADLEY, a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as members of the funeral committee Messrs. HOFFMAN, SHAFER, GRANT of Indiana, and DINGELL.

The Clerk will report the remainder of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect, the House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 27, 1947, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MAY 27, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, April 21, 1947)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Edward T. Wiatrak, S. J., Jesuit Missions, New York City, N. Y., offered the following prayer:

Take, O Lord, and receive all my liberty, my memory, my understanding, and my whole will. Thou hast given me all that I have and all that I possess; I restore it all to Thee and surrender it, that Thou mayest dispose of it according to Thy will. Give me only Thy love and Thy grace, and I am rich enough and desire nothing more. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, May 26, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 3029) to provide for the acquisition of a site and for preparation of plans and specifications for a courthouse to accommodate the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia and the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate Joint Resolution 15

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing Congress to enact H. R. 881 and H. R. 1199, granting tax exemptions to those held prisoners by the Japanese

"Whereas many citizens of the State of California, civilians and members of our armed forces, were taken and held in Japanese prisons and suffered untold hardships; and

"Whereas it is fitting and proper that the former prisoners of war receive the benefits granted by two bills now pending before the Congress of the United States, H. R. 881 and H. R. 1199, which bills give them certain tax benefits under section 251 of the Internal Revenue Code of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California respectfully memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to enact H. R. 881 and H. R. 1199; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President, the President pro tempore of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Senate Joint Resolution 22

"Joint resolution relative to Federal operation of air-traffic-control towers

"Whereas the House Appropriations Committee has eliminated from the bill providing funds for the support of the Department of Commerce the item appropriating funds for the operation of the air-traffic-control towers at San Francisco and other municipal airports; and

"Whereas in the interests of public safety these air-traffic-control towers should be operated by personnel employed, instructed, and controlled by one agency, so that air traffic at all airports may have the benefit of standardized uniform control, without which national and international air commerce and the lives of air-line pilots and thousands of passengers will be placed in jeopardy; and

"Whereas, however willing municipalities or other local organizations might be to bear the expense of operating the control towers, they could by no amount of cooperation within their legal powers provide the uniformity essential to such controls, serving as they do on air commerce so extensive that only an agency national in scope can provide the centralization of control and supervision essential to safety; and

"Whereas many cities are now spending millions of dollars in modernizing airports for safety and convenience, the Federal Government should not defeat these programs by withdrawing from them the essential service of a standardized and uniform operation of air-traffic-control towers at these airports: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and petitioned to appropriate moneys which will insure the continued Federal operation of air-control towers at municipal airports; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is directed to transmit immediately copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President pro tempore of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

The memorial of Mrs. W. H. Rogers, of Fallbrook, Calif., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to provide universal military training; to the Committee on Armed Services.

A petition of the members of the Safety Harbor (Fla.) Townsend Club, No. 1, praying for the enactment of the so-called Townsend plan to provide old-age assistance; to the Committee on Finance.

The petition of John J. Spriggs, of Lander, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation to reduce the court costs on appeal in both the circuit court of appeals and the Supreme Court of the United States to the point where citizens of limited financial means can exercise the right of appeal to such courts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition signed by 75 citizens of Concordia, Kans., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 265, to prohibit the transportation of alcoholic-beverage advertising in interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McCLELLAN:

A resolution adopted by the Bar Association of Arkansas in annual meeting at Little Rock, Ark., favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 1639) to amend the Employers' Liability Act so as to limit venue in actions brought in United States district courts or in State courts under such act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PROHIBITION AGAINST LIQUOR ADVERTISING

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present a petition signed by 42 citizens of Amherst, Va., and vicinity, praying for the enactment of Senate bill 265, to prohibit the transportation of alcoholic-beverage advertising in interstate commerce. I request that the petition be appropriately referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the petition presented by the Senator from Virginia will be received, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 2237. A bill to correct an error in section 342 (b) (8) of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended; without amendment (Rept. No. 207).

By Mr. ECTON, from the Committee on Public Lands:

S. 753. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to defer the collection of certain irrigation construction charges against lands under the Flathead Indian irrigation project; without amendment (Rept. No. 206).

REPORTS ON DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

Mr. LANGER, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, to which were referred for examination and recommendation two lists of records transmitted to the Senate by the Archivist of the United States that appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted reports thereon pursuant to law.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

The following favorable report of a nomination was submitted:

By Mr. TOBEY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Edmond M. Hanrahan, of New York, to be a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission for the term expiring June 5, 1952. (Reappointment.)

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL EXPENDITURES RELATING TO FEDERAL PERSONNEL

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present an additional report from the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures with respect to the personnel of the Federal Government in April 1947 and request that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES, CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, PURSUANT TO SECTION 601 OF THE REVENUE ACT OF 1941, ON FEDERAL PERSONNEL, MARCH–APRIL 1947

FEDERAL PERSONNEL IN THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH, APRIL 1947, AND COMPARISON WITH MARCH 1947

(All figures compiled from reports submitted by the heads of Federal establishments or their authorized representatives)

According to monthly personnel reports submitted to the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures Federal personnel within the United States during the month of April decreased 16,834 from a total of 1,949,745 in March to 1,932,911 in April. Excluding War and Navy Departments, personnel decreased 792 from the March total of 1,216,993 to the April total of 1,216,201. The War Department within the continental United States decreased 12,809 from the March total of 412,766 to the April total of 399,957. The Navy Department within the United States decreased 3,233 from the March figure of 319,986 to the April figure of 316,753. (See table I.)

Outside the continental United States, Federal personnel decreased 11,059 from the March total of 282,398 to the April total of 271,339. The majority of these were industrial workers. (See tables II and IV.) Exclusive of War and Navy Departments, there was a decrease of 868 from the March figure of 56,486 to the April figure of 55,618.

The consolidated table, presenting data with respect to personnel inside and outside the continental United States, shows a total decrease of 27,893 from the March total of 2,232,143 to the April total of 2,204,250. Excluding War and Navy Departments' reductions of 26,233, there was a decrease of 1,660 employees in the executive branch of the Federal Government from the March figure of 1,273,479 to the April figure of 1,271,819. (See table III.)

Industrial employment during the month of April decreased 7,439 from the March total of 610,503 to the April total of 603,064. The War Department figures for employment outside the United States are unavailable for the month of April. War Department reductions inside the United States totaled 817. The term "industrial employees" as used by the committee refers to unskilled, semiskilled, skilled, and supervisory employees paid by the Federal Government, who are working on construction projects, such as airfields and roads, and in shipyards and arsenals. It does not include maintenance and custodial employees. (See table IV.)

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MURRAY:

S. 1351. A bill to provide that bonds issued under the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946 shall be negotiable, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. WAGNER (for himself and Mr. MORSE):

S. 1352. A bill to declare certain rights of citizens of the United States, and for the better assurance of the protection of such citizens and other persons within the several States from mob violence and lynching, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. AIKEN:

S. 1353. A bill to amend the Surplus Property Act of 1944 with reference to condemnation powers of the Administrator; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. BROOKS:

S. 1354. A bill to amend the act of June 14, 1933, so as to authorize the Cairo Bridge Commission to issue its refunding bonds for the purpose of refunding the outstanding bonds issued by the commission to pay the cost of a certain toll bridge at or near Cairo, Ill.; to the Committee on Public Works.

(Mr. COOPER introduced Senate bill 1355, to amend the Social Security Act to enable States to establish more adequate public-welfare programs, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and appears under a separate heading.)

THE PUBLIC WELFARE ACT OF 1947

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill entitled "The Public Welfare Act of 1947," which would amend the Social Security Act to enable the States to establish more adequate public-welfare programs, and which embodies the principle of variable grants.

An identical bill was introduced in the House today.

The bill represents in the main the recommendations of those who have been charged with the administration of public welfare in States and local subdivisions.

At a later day I intend to make a statement in explanation of the objectives and provisions of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1355) to amend the Social Security Act to enable States to establish more adequate public-welfare programs, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. COOPER, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

REDUCTION OF INCOME TAX—AMENDMENT

Mr. HICKENLOOPER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

NECESSITY FOR SOLVING HOUSING PROBLEM

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, yesterday I made a statement to the press, and I desire to read it here in the Senate. It is as follows:

I desire to record my strong conviction that this Congress should not adjourn for the summer without taking effective action toward solving the housing problem.

There are today thousands of people in Massachusetts alone who lack adequate housing. There are many more in the Nation. I sincerely believe that over a long period of time this imposes a strain on human relations which is more than people should be required to bear.

For government to try to solve this problem is not extravagance. In a democratic country we simply cannot afford to have unhappy people who, through no fault of their own, are existing under conditions which are below the American standard of living, which so many of them a little while ago were fighting to protect against foreign enemies. They ask a chance to earn a home where they can raise a family. They are entitled to that chance.

We shall break faith with those who sent us here if we try to brush this problem aside and to treat it as if it did not exist. We must take prompt and effective action to provide decent housing and at a cost within the reach of those who need it.

JEFFERSON DAY ADDRESS BY HAROLD E. STASSEN

AIR POWER IN THE NAVY—ARTICLE BY ANSEL E. TALBERT

[Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Navy Making Radical Changes by Conversion to Air Power," by Ansel E. Talbert, from the New York Herald Tribune of April 27, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 3, RELATING TO HOUSING—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 270)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on pp. 5868–5869.)

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME-TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. MILLIKIN. May we have the amendment stated, please?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] is detained on public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS DURING SENATE SESSIONS

Mr. MILLIKIN obtained the floor.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. THYE. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], has requested me to ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which is now meeting, may continue to be in session until 12 o'clock noon today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent that a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary may sit this afternoon during the session of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to call attention at this point to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, Monday, May 26, which is before us today. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] just called my attention to the list of committee meetings for today, Tuesday, May 27, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Daily Digest for May 26. Following are the Senate committees meeting today: The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations considering the Interior Department appropriation bill, the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Committee on Civil Service, the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Committee on Foreign Relations, a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, two subcommittees of the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Public Lands, the Committee on Public Works, a subcommittee of the Committee on Rules and Administration, and a subcommittee of the Special Committee To Study Problems of American Small Business.

I think that is only a partial list, because Mr. President, while nearly 30 minutes were being consumed in calling the roll, I have talked with numerous Senators, who said they should be attending committee meetings. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] says he should be attending a meeting of the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] should also be attending the meeting of the Committee on Foreign Relations and, I think, a meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILEY. Meetings of two subcommittees of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Wisconsin calls attention to the fact that he should be present at the meetings of two subcommittees of the Committee on the Judiciary. The Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], whom I see across the Chamber, and myself, are members of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee handling the Interior Department appropriation bill, and should be present at the meeting of that committee.

Again, Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that the majority, which is conducting the procedure in the Senate, must bear the responsibility for having these committee meetings going on while the Senate is in session. I think there will be no more important bill before the Eightieth Congress than the bill to reduce taxes. It is equally true that the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Committee on Appropriations, and all the other committees are attending to very important matters.

We started out under the Reorganization Act with the theory that the Senate would meet on alternate days for the consideration of public business, and that on the other days when the Senate was not in session the committees would be in session. The purpose was to have full sessions of the Senate and full meetings of the respective committees. As a result of the procedure which is now being followed we are having full meetings of neither the committees, nor of the Senate, and the public business is certain to suffer as a result. Sometimes Members of the Senate rush to committee meetings on which they have not previously had the opportunity to be in attendance, because, forsooth, they may have been in attendance upon the sessions of the Senate, and when they come to the committee meetings they have only the faintest notion of the evidence which is being presented to the committees. At the same time Members come from committee meetings to the floor of the Senate when the time comes to vote, and they are necessarily obliged to vote without knowledge of the debate which has previously taken place. I think it is important that there should be revealed to the public the fact that under the procedure which is now being followed the majority party meets in caucus, decides what is to be done, and then blithely sheds the responsibility of listening to the debate. I think the practice of having committees meet during sessions of the Senate is utterly wrong.

Last night the majority leader asked that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock this morning. For what purpose? To expedite the public business, perhaps. It has taken us half an hour to get a quorum. A moment ago the Presiding Officer announced that 49 Senators having answered to their names, a quorum was present. Many of those Senators merely put their faces inside the door, caught the eye of the clerk calling the roll, and then retired to their committee meetings. But when the RECORD is printed tomorrow, the Presiding Officer will not be quoted as stating that 49 Senators are present; he will be quoted as saying that 84 or more Senators are present, because the names of many Senators, whether they are in the Chamber or in committees, will be printed as showing the presence of those Senators in response to the quorum call. I submit that that is not a program which should be followed. In order to emphasize the point, on which I know the majority leader agrees, I am forced at this time to object to the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me to say a brief word?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. With the general principles announced by the Senator from Wyoming I have no controversy whatsoever. But we are facing a condition and not a theory. I do not know what the remedy is.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHITE. Yesterday I suggested that the Senator from Wyoming might with propriety, and possible benefit, suggest a modification of our rules which would help in time to solve the problem we confront. We are up against a mass of work which seemingly requires a duplication of presence of Members of the Senate in two different places at the same time.

Committee work is essential. I agree that the work on the floor of the Senate is of the utmost importance. As the Senator says, under the reorganization bill we undertook to hold sessions on alternate days, reserving Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday for the committees to carry on their work. However, it was found that there was so much delay in bringing legislation to the floor of the Senate that some other course had to be adopted, at least temporarily. I do not like it any more than does the Senator from Wyoming. But we must either continue that practice or adopt an alternative and object to all such requests. If the Senator can make any suggestion which will help the situation, and which is not a scolding of the majority leader, I will welcome the suggestion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I would not scold the majority leader.

Mr. WHITE. I am sorry that the Senator has seen fit to select this particular occasion to object to a request of this character.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a brief statement?

Mr. MILLIKIN. For what purpose?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate a possible way out of the situation in which we now find ourselves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield for that purpose?

Mr. MILLIKIN. How long will the Senator require?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. About 2 minutes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am glad this matter has been brought to the attention of the Senate. Only this morning in my committee, the Committee on Civil Service, we sat for 30 or 40 minutes and did not get a quorum because Senators were in attendance upon other committees—subcommittees as well as joint committees. Now we find difficulty obtaining a quorum in the Senate.

There is one thing we all know, and that is that we cannot have the Senate and the committees meeting at the same time and have a quorum in both places. The calendar of the Committee on the Civil Service contains 75 or 100 bills. Recently we have not been able to obtain a quorum. I do not know why, unless it is because other committees are meeting at the same time.

I suggest that the Senate not meet every day, giving one day to the committees, so that they can report bills in order that they may be placed on the Senate Calendar. They must get to the Senate Calendar if we mean to pass them. If we do not, then under the present rules, which require Senators to be present in committee when a bill is reported, a sufficient number of Senators can remain away from the committee to prevent any bill from being reported, and thereby the bill can be killed. As I see it, committees and the Senate ought not to meet at the same time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me to make a response to the question which was asked me by the majority leader?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Maine asked me what suggestion I had to solve this difficulty. The first suggestion I would make is that the majority leader should not ask the Senate to meet in regular session before noon, so that at least the mornings could be given up to the committees, with the knowledge on the part of committee members that they would not be called to the floor, or that there would not be discussed on the floor matters to which they would be required to give their attention.

My second suggestion is the one which I made 3 or 4 days ago when this question was under discussion, and that is that the Committee on Rules and Administration should recommend a rule with respect to germaneness. Under a rule of germaneness, for example, it would not be possible for me now to be discussing the rules of the Senate rather than the tax bill. I say to the Senater quite frankly that in my judgment such a rule should be adopted.

The fundamental difficulty, however, is that there has been concentrated in Washington so much of the business of the country because there has been concentrated in the hands of great industrial units so much of the economy of the country, that it is utterly impossible for us to do the business we are required to do. The system is breaking down under that burden.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I agree with the diagnosis made by the Senator from Wyoming as to our troubles. Basically our trouble is just what the Senator from Wyoming has said—a mass of work that we are physically unable to do.

I see no solution of the problem until the people of the country stop looking to Washington for guidance and comfort in their social, economic, financial, agricultural, and political life. So long as the people of the country turn to Washington day in and day out, month after month, and year after year, for the solution of all the problems of life, we shall never have a happy situation in the legislative body.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If I may interrupt at that point, the reason why they turn to Washington for the solution of all their problems is that, because of the expanded power of our concentrated economic units, the States and the localities have lost the power to protect the public interest, and only here can it be protected.

Mr. WHITE. I agree with the statement of the Senator from Wyoming.

As a matter of fact, for the purpose of clarity and accuracy in the RECORD, let me say that I did not myself make the request yesterday for a recess until 11 o'clock today. I knew the request was to be made, but I do not assume responsibility for making it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad to be corrected on that point.

Mr. WHITE. I do not like these 11 o'clock sessions of the Senate under all ordinary circumstances. One reason for the motion made last night was the hope that we might conclude the tax bill on either Wednesday or Thursday, and that we might then recess, or adjourn over, as the case might be, until Monday. I will say now, and give notice, that if the pending legislation is disposed of by Thursday night the motion will be made to go over until Monday. I give that notice so that all Members may be advised thereof. If the legislation is not disposed of, that is something else, and we will have to decide later with reference to it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from Maine has graciously acknowledged the existence of this problem and has expressed a general agreement with the point of view which the Senator from Wyoming has expressed, and in the hope that as majority leader he will be able to induce the majority to take some action to correct the situation, I shall be agreeable and shall withdraw my objection to his request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any further objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WHITE. May I express my appreciation to the Senator from Wyoming. He is always generous and always gracious.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have listened with a good deal of interest and profit to the discussion, but I see nothing unusual in the situation as compared with what has obtained in the years that I have been here. I know that when men who want to work are given an opportunity to work, whether it be on the floor of the Senate or in committee, they are the workers who will do the job. That is the situation as we find it at this time.

I heard some reference made to a committee which has before it a hundred bills. My committee has nearly 600 bills. The only thing I can do is to help the committee work at committee meetings.

I now ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that tomorrow afternoon a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations be permitted to hold a session. I do not know whether the rule applies to subcommittees, but I have been told that it might. It certainly applies to committees. So I ask unanimous consent that a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations may hold meetings to consider the matter of the St. Lawrence waterway.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary be permitted to meet this afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFICER. Without objection, the order is made.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, may we have the first committee amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first committee amendment will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 1, after line 4, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. Reduction in normal tax and surtax on individuals.

(a) Reduction in normal tax on individuals: Section 11 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the normal tax on individuals) is hereby amended by striking out "5 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "24 percent", and by adding at the end of such section a new sentence to read as follows: "If aggregate of tentative normal tax and tentative surtax is not more than $279.17, see section 12 (i), and if more than $250,000, see section 12 (g)."

(b) Reduction in surtax on individuals: Section 12 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the rate of surtax on individuals) is hereby amended by striking out "5 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "24 percent."

(c) Tentative tax more than $250,000: Section 12 (g) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to tax on large incomes) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(g) Tentative tax more than $250,000: If the aggregate of the tentative normal tax under section 11 and the tentative surtax under subsection (b) of this section is more than $250,000, the combined normal tax and surtax shall not be less than such aggregate reduced by the sum of (1) 24 percent of the first $250,000 thereof plus (2) 15 percent of the amount thereof in excess of $250,000, but in no event shall the combined normal tax and surtax exceed 76½ percent of the net income of the taxpayer for the taxable year. In the application of this subsection, the combined normal tax and surtax shall be computed without regard to the credits provided in sections 31, 32, and 35."

(d) Tentative tax not more than $279.17: Section 12 of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows:

"(i) Tentative tax not more than $279.17.—

"(1) If the aggregate of the tentative normal tax under section 11 and the tentative surtax under subsection (b) of this section is not more than $200, the combined normal tax and surtax shall not be greater than such aggregate reduced by 33⅓ percent thereof.

"(2) If the aggregate of the tentative normal tax under section 11 and the tentative surtax under subsection (b) of this section is more than $200 but not more than $279.17, the combined normal tax and surtax shall not be greater than such aggregate reduced by $67.

"(3) In the application of this subsection, the combined normal tax and surtax shall be computed without regard to the credits provided in sections 31, 32, and 35."

(e) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendments made by this section shall be applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946. For treatment of taxable years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, see section 6.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 2. Reduction in normal tax and surtax on individuals.

(a) Reduction in normal tax on individuals: Section 11 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the normal tax on individuals) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. Normal tax on individuals.

"There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a normal tax determined by computing a tentative normal tax of 3 percent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits against net income provided in section 25, and by reducing such tentative normal tax as provided in section 12 (g). For alternative tax which may be elected if adjusted gross income is less than $5,000, see Supplement T."

(b) Reduction in surtax on individuals: Section 12 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the rate of surtax on individuals) is hereby amended by striking out "by 5 percent thereof" and inserting in lieu thereof "as provided in subsection (g) of this section."

(c) Reduction of tentative normal tax and tentative surtax: Section 12 (g) of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(g) Reduction of tentative normal tax and tentative surtax.—

"(1) In the case of taxable years beginning after December 31, 1947, the combined normal tax and surtax under section 11 and subsection (b) of this section shall be the aggregate of the tentative normal tax and tentative surtax, reduced as follows:

If the aggregate is:	The reduction shall be:
Not over $200	33⅓ percent of the aggregate.
Over $200 but not over $279.17.	$67.
Over $279.17 but not over $50,000.	24 percent of the aggregate.
Over $50,000 but not over $250,000.	$12,000, plus 19¼ percent of excess over $50,000.
Over $250,000	$50,500, plus 15 percent of excess over $250,000.

In no event shall the combined normal tax and surtax exceed 76½ percent of the net income of the taxpayer for the taxable year.

"(2) In the case of taxable years beginning in 1947, the combined normal tax and surtax under section 11 and subsection (b) of this section shall be the aggregate of the tentative normal tax and tentative surtax, reduced as follows:

If the aggregate is:	The reduction shall be:
Not over $200	19¼ percent of the aggregate.
Over $200 but not over $265.52.	$38.50.
Over $265.52 but not over $50,000.	14½ percent of the aggregate.
Over $50,000 but not over $250,000.	$7,250 plus 12 percent of excess over $50,000.
Over $250,000	$31,250 plus 10 percent of excess over $250,000.

In no event shall the combined normal tax and surtax exceed 81 percent of the net income of the taxpayer for the taxable year.

"(3) Whenever it is necessary to ascertain the normal tax and the surtax separately, the surtax shall be an amount which is the same proportion of the combined normal tax and surtax as the tentative surtax is of the aggregate of the tentative normal tax and tentative surtax; and the normal tax shall be the remainder of such combined normal tax and surtax.

"(4) In the application of this subsection, the combined normal tax and surtax shall be computed without regard to the credits provided in sections 31, 32, and 35."

(d) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendments made by this section shall be applicable with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946. For treatment of taxable years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, or beginning in 1947 and ending in 1948, see section 6.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment to the committee amendment at this point. If the Senator from Colorado wishes to speak now, I shall, of course, withhold my amendment, but I wanted to offer it before the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I believe it would be best, Mr. President, if the Senator were to offer his amendment and proceed with his own remarks on it, and perhaps I could then proceed with the other amendments in the bill and have them disposed of.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am perfectly willing to defer my remarks until the Senator has concluded with other amendments he would like to have agreed to, but I do not want to lose the right to offer the amendment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. On further consideration I believe it would be better for the Senator to offer his amendment and make his explanation, and then the Senate can pass on to the other committee amendments.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I have previously submitted and which is on the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it an amendment to the pending amendment?

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is an amendment to the pending amendment by adding additional language at the end of line 19 on page 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 6, after line 19, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

(b) Reduction in surtax on individuals and establishment of new method for computation of surtax in case of joint returns: So much of section 12 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the rates of surtax) as precedes the table therein is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) Computation of surtax.—

"(1) Separate return: Except in the case of a joint return by husband and wife, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the surtax net income of every individual a surtax determined by computing a tentative surtax under the table set forth in paragraph (3) of this subsection, and by reducing such tentative surtax by 24 percent thereof.

"(2) Joint return: In the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the aggregate surtax net income of the husband and wife a surtax determined—

"(A) by computing a tentative surtax under the table set forth in paragraph (3) of this subsection upon an amount equal to one-half of such aggregate surtax net income;

"(B) by multiplying the tentative surtax ascertained under subparagraph (A) by two; and

"(C) by reducing the amount ascertained under subparagraph (B) by 24 percent thereof.

"(3) Surtax table: The table referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2) is as follows:".

(e) Standard deduction: Section 23 (aa) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the optional standard deduction for individuals) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) Allowance: In the case of an individual, at his election, a standard deduction as follows:

"(A) Separate return with adjusted gross income $5,000 or more: Except in the case of a joint return by husband and wife, if the adjusted gross income is $5,000 or more, the standard deduction shall be $500.

"(B) Joint return with adjusted gross income $5,000 or more: In the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, if the aggregate adjusted gross income of the husband and wife is $5,000 or more, the standard deduction shall be $1,000 or an amount equal to 10 percent of such aggregate adjusted gross income, whichever is the lesser.

"(C) Adjusted gross income less than $5,000: If the adjusted gross income is less than $5,000, the standard deduction shall be an amount equal to 10 percent of the adjusted gross income upon the basis of which the tax applicable to the adjusted gross income of the taxpayer is determined under the tax table provided in section 400."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As I understand, the amendment I have just offered to the committee amendment is the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The understanding of the Senator from Arkansas is correct. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas to the committee amendment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with the other committee amendments, without prejudice to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the first committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, may the next committee amendment be stated now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second committee amendment will be stated.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, has the first committee amendment been agreed to?

Mr. MILLIKIN. No, Mr. President; we are passing over that amendment, without prejudice to the amendment which the Senator from Arkansas has offered to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 7, after line 2, to strike out:

(a) In general: The tax table in section 400 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to optional tax on individuals with adjusted gross incomes of less than $5,000) is hereby amended to read as follows:

["Individuals with adjusted gross incomes of less than $5,000—"]

And in lieu thereof, to insert the following:

(a) In general: Section 400 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to optional tax on individuals with adjusted gross incomes of less than $5,000) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 400. Imposition of Tax.

"In lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 11 and 12, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of each individual whose adjusted gross income for such year is less than $5,000, and who has elected to pay the tax imposed by this supplement for such year, a tax as follows:

"Taxable years beginning after 1947

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the second committee amendment which has just been stated.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, there is an amendment at the top of page 10 which belongs to the amendment which has just been stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado wish to have that amendment read at this time?

Mr. MILLIKIN. It is a part of the section 3 amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state that portion of the amendment appearing in line 3 on page 10.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator from Colorado that the Parliamentarian has informed the Chair that the committee amendment to which the Senator has just referred constitutes a separate and distinct committee amendment from the one which has already been stated.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado wish to have the amendment on page 10 stated as a second or as a third committee amendment?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to have action taken on the committee amendment which has been stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 7, after line 2, known as the second committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises the Senator from Colorado that the Parliamentarian has called the attention of the Chair to the fact that the table appearing on page 9 is also a committee amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is correct, and I should like to have action taken on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment at the top of page 9, comprising the table which appears at that point.

The amendment was agreed to, as follows:

At the top of page 9, insert:

"Taxable years beginning in 1947

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 3, after the numerals "1947", to insert a comma and "or beginning in 1947 and ending in 1948."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there other amendments which the Senator from Colorado wishes to have stated?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to have the committee amendments in section 4 stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 10, line 12, after the words "by adding after", to strike out:

subparagraph (C) a new subparagraph to read as follows:

"(D) If the taxpayer has attained the age of 65—

"(i) an additional exemption of $500;

"(ii) in the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, an exemption in lieu of the exemption provided in clause (i) of this subparagraph, of $500 for each spouse who has attained the age of 65, and whose gross income (computed without regard to section 22 (o)) for the taxable year is $500 or more;

"(iii) for limitation on exclusion from gross income of retirement pay, etc., see section 22 (o)."

And in lieu thereof, to insert:

subparagraph (C) the following:

"(D) an additional exemption of $500 for the taxpayer if he has attained the age of 65 on or before the last day of his taxable year;

"(E) an additional exemption of $500 for the spouse of the taxpayer if—

"(i) a joint return is made by the taxpayer and his spouse under section 51 and the spouse has attained the age of 65 on or before such last day, in which case the aggregate exemption of the spouses under subparagraph (D) and this subparagraph shall not exceed $500 with respect to each spouse who has attained the age of 65 on or before such last day; or

"(ii) a separate return is made by the taxpayer, and his spouse has attained the age of 65 on or before such last day and has no gross income for the calendar year in which the taxable year of the taxpayer begins and is not the dependent of another taxpayer."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment which has just been stated.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should merely like to inquire here—for it may be helpful for the record to have the answer appear—what change, if any, would be required in the case of a taxpayer whose wife is not the owner of a separate estate, and who simply shows that fact in his return. In that case, would the husband and the wife, both being 65 years of age, be entitled to the full $500 exemption for each one of them, as additional exemptions?

Mr. MILLIKIN. If they filed separate returns, they could each claim the additional $500 for being over 65 years of age.

Mr. GEORGE. But suppose they did not file separate returns; suppose the wife has no separate income whatever, and suppose the income-tax return of the husband merely shows that he is married, and states the name of his wife and her age. In that event, will the husband be required to do something more in order to receive the double exemption of $500, which this section provides?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Georgia that if the wife has no income, the wife's exemption goes to the husband as an additional exemption, even when the husband files a separate return. If a joint return is filed, and both are over 65 years of age the additional $1,000 is allowed—$500 for each—regardless of whether the wife has any income.

Mr. GEORGE. And there would be no necessity for a separate return in that case?

Mr. MILLIKIN. There would be no necessity at all for it.

Mr. GEORGE. And that could simply be shown on the husband's return?

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is correct. If the wife has no income it could be shown on the husband's return, and if the wife has income, it could be shown on the joint return.

Mr. GEORGE. That was my understanding, but I wished to be sure of it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Do I correctly understand from the Senator from Colorado that if the wife has no income whatever, the husband will be entitled to claim a total additional exemption of $1,000?

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator from Colorado think that is fair?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I do.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, if a man over 65 years of age is making $10,000 a year and if his wife has no income, that man will receive a total additional exemption of $1,000, whereas a man 30 years of age who is married will receive nothing in the way of an exemption, other than what is included in the first brackets of House bill 1.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would suggest to the distinguished Senator that the point is that this is a provision which is aimed to affect people who reach the age of 65 and who find themselves under the handicaps of that age group. If the wife of such a taxpayer does not have any income at all, that is not an advantage to the family, it is an additional handicap on the single breadwinner of the family. Hence, there is considerable justice and equity in giving him the benefit of the exemption for the wife.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not objecting to the individual over 65 years of age, now drawing an old age pension, or who is on the retirement roll, getting the exemption. I am objecting, and strenuously objecting, to the provision in the bill which permits all people over 65 years of age, regardless of their financial circumstances, to obtain a $500 exemption, and the same individual, over 65 years of age who is making $10,000 a year, let us say, getting, in addition to the $500, another $500 exemtion for his wife, in the event the wife is not working.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senator has raised the question whether the need test should be applied to that particular group of people. Personally, I do not believe it should be, and we have precedents for not applying it in the case of exemptions. The exemptions granted to all taxpayers are not granted or withheld on the basis of need. The richest man in the country gets the benefit of the present exemption, as well as the poorest.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct in that, but certainly the bill is discriminatory, under the Senator's own theory, because the sponsors of the bill are selecting a special class of people over 65 years of age, whether they need the exemption or not, irrespective of their financial situation in life, and granting to this particular group of people the kind of an exemption I have been discussing.

In my judgment, that theory cannot be supported under any sound principle of good taxing law. I said so in the committee; I am saying so now. I think the House provision is absolutely sound. People over 65 years of age, drawing old age pensions and those on retirement, need relief, and the exemption should be applied to them, but certainly when we open the field and spread the exemption out to every individual throughout the United States over 65 years of age, irrespective of his financial station in life, we shall pass tax legislation that is unfair and inequitable. It violates the fundamental rule that taxes should be levied based upon the ability to pay. It is the most unsound theory of tax exemption I have experienced since I have been in Congress.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest to the Senator most respectfully that I regard these particular provisions in the bill as among the most worthy. In our social-security system we have made special provision for aged people, and have given them special advantages. It has been a part of our social and political philosophy, and that is what we are doing here. I think we are doing a very fine, constructive thing for people who find themselves at a point in life when they do not have the vigor to maintain with added wages the position which younger people have in the economic battles of life.

Mr. LUCAS. I agree with the Senator's argument to a point; it is sound as far as it goes. He keeps talking about those in need, and he is correct as to the person over 65 drawing an old-age pension or under the retirement fund. So far as I am concerned, such a person is entitled to the $500 exemption. What I am inveighing against as well as I know how to—and the Senator sees the point, I am sure—is that all people, regardless of their financial condition, who are over 65 years of age, get the $500 exemption, and may even get a $1,000 exemption. In other words, a Senator of the United States over 65 years of age, who is drawing a salary of $15,000 a year, can get a $1,000 exemption if he is married, while the individual who is a clerk in the Senate, with perhaps two or three children, gets no exemption at all for those children or himself. All he gets is the benefit of the reduced rate of tax. If the Senator can square that with any theory of a fair tax bill, he is welcome to do so, but I just cannot do it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I understand the theory of the Senator, and in my opinion it would be very unjust and very unwholesome to start applying the need test in cases of that kind. Secondly, I call the Senator's attention to the unfortunate complexity of administering the need test, if such a test were ever advisable.

Mr. LUCAS. I think it most unfortunate that we do not give all taxpayers an additional $500 exemption if we are going to give it to all taxpayers who are 65 years of age. A rich man should not be entitled to such favoritism. If we are going to start that kind of an exemption, we ought to give every taxpayer equal treatment under the law. If we do not do that, those in the smaller income brackets with children are getting a bad deal at the hands of Congress. They are getting the reduced rate, but so far as exemptions are concerned, we leave them just as they are. We keep everybody on the tax roll, a total of 47,700,000, at the present time, with the exception of those over 65 years of ago, and a million and a half, perhaps, of those may be off because of this provision.

Mr. MILLIKIN. If the Senator's theory prevailed, it would require very drastic changes in our whole tax structure, for we now grant everyone a $500 base exemption, and an exemption for children, regardless of his poverty or wealth.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I think I should make a statement on the point which has been raised. I would question very much the validity of the provision under consideration, and the soundness of it, were it not for two facts which I think should be kept in mind, and considering those facts as they are, it seems to me that the provision might well be retained in the bill.

First of all, Congress itself has exempted payments under the Railroad Retirement Act, although they may amount to as much as $1,440 annually, even before the passage of the Crosser bill. Then by an executive ruling any amount paid out under the Social Security Act is exempt from the income tax. Other examples might be given.

That has created a bad situation in our law, and either we would have to go through all our laws, and give to people who are getting retirement benefits in any form some similar increased exemption, or permit an exclusion of the amounts they receive in the way of those benefits, in order to correct that inequality, or we should increase the exemption. I think the important point here is that our present exemptions are only $500 per capita. Our exemption of $500 is allowed every man, woman, and child who is a taxpayer. That is a very low per capita exemption in fact, it is too low, and we must be moving, as soon as we are able to move, in the direction of a greater statutory exemption for all our taxpayers. When, therefore, one considers that this is simply an increase in the present exemption of $500 for people who have reached the age of 65 years, it seems to me there is some justification for it, and it can be reconciled with sound principles of taxation. I wanted to make my own position on the matter clear. Primarily, it is that sooner or later—and the sooner the better—we must increase the exemptions that are now given to all taxpayers $500 is too low and in the case of the special class where the earning power for the most part has gone, after the age of 65, we are acting now and also ironing out inequalities that exist by virtue of the exclusion from income of pensions paid under the Railroad Retirement Act, social security, and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance to subsection (a) of section 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 20, to strike out:

(b) Determination of age: Section 25 (b) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "For the purposes of paragraph (1) (D) the determination of the age of an individual shall be made as of the last day of the taxable year."

(c) Limitation on exclusion from gross income of retirement pay, etc.: Section 22 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to gross income) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows:

"(o) Retirement pay, etc., of individuals 65 or over: If an individual entitled to the exemption provided in section 25 (b) (1) (D) (relating to individuals who have attained the age of 65) receives during the taxable year any amount (other than a lump-sum benefit) as pension, annuity, retirement pay, old age or survivor's benefit, or similar payment, with respect to services rendered by him or another person, and the whole of such amount would, but for this subsection, be excluded from gross income, then only the excess over $500 of the aggregate of such amounts shall be excluded from gross income, despite any provisions of this title or of any other law. This subsection shall not require the inclusion of any such amount as gross income unless the gross income, computed without regard to this subsection, is $500 or more. This subsection shall not apply—

"(1) to amounts excluded from gross income under section 22 (b) (5); except that this subsection shall apply to amounts received as a pension, annuity, or similar allowance for personal injuries or sickness resulting from active service in the armed forces of any country, unless such amounts are also excluded from gross income by a provision of law other than section 22 (b) (5); or

"(2) to amounts excluded from gross income under section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to safeguard the estates of veterans derived from payments of pension, compensation, emergency officers' retirement pay and insurance, and for other purposes,' approved August 12, 1935, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 38, sec. 454a); or

"(3) to amounts excluded from gross income under section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to establish in the War Department and in the Navy Department, respectively, a roll, designated as "the Army and Navy medal of honor roll," and for other purposes,' approved April 27, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 38, sec. 393)."

(d) Technical amendment: Section 22 (b) (5) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to exclusion from gross income of compensation for injuries or sickness) is hereby amended by striking out "and amounts" and inserting in lieu thereof: "and (except as provided in subsection (o) in the case of individuals 65 or over) amounts."

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(b) Technical amendments—

(1) Section 58 (a) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to requirement of declaration of estimated tax) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(1) his gross income from wages (as defined in sec. 1621) can reasonably be expected to exceed the sum of $4,500 plus $500 with respect to each exemption provided in section 25 (b); or."

(2) Section 1622 (h) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to withholding exemptions) is hereby amended by striking out subparagraphs (A) nad (B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(A) An exemption for himself, and an additional exemption for himself if he has attained the age of 65 or will attain such age before the expiration of the taxable year under chapter 1 in respect of which amounts deducted and withheld under this subchapter in the calendar year in which such day falls are allowed as a credit.

"(B) If the employee is married, any exemption to which his spouse is entitled, or would be entitled if she were an employee receiving wages, under subparagraph (A), but only if such spouse does not have in effect a withholding exemption certificate claiming such exemption."

(3) In the case of an individual entitled to an additional withholding exemption under section 1622 (h) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code by reason of the amendment made thereto by paragraph (2) of this subsection, the term "status determination date" as used in section 1622 (h) (3) (B) of such code includes also the nineteenth day after the date of the enactment of this act.

(4) Section 23 (x) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to deduction of medical, and so forth, expenses) is hereby amended by striking out the second and third sentences thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The maximum deduction for the taxable year shall be $1,250, except that if more than one exemption is allowed under section 25 (b) for the taxable year (exclusive of an exemption under section 25 (b) (1) (D)) the maximum deduction for the taxable year shall be $2,500."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator explain subparagraph (3) of the technical amendments, found on page 15, beginning at line 3?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Paragraph (3) would require employers to give effect to additional exemptions, with respect to the first payment of wages made on or after the ninetieth day after the date of enactment of the bill, if a withholding exemption certificate is filed at least 30 days before such ninetieth day. This will allow employees approximately 60 days from the date of the enactment in which to furnish new exemption certificates, and will allow employers a minimum of 30 days to give effect to such certificates.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 20, before the word "Taxable", to strike out "(e)" and insert "(c)", and in line 21, after the word "applicable", to insert "with respect."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, on page 17, after line 4, to strike out:

(3) 14 percent of whichever of the following is the lesser:

(A) the amount by which the wages exceed the sum of—

(i) the number of withholding exemptions claimed, multiplied by the amount of one such exemption as shown in the table in subsection (b) (1); plus

(ii) the sum of the amounts shown in the second and third columns in the table in subsection (b) (1); or

(B) the amount shown in the last column in the table in subsection (b) (1);

(4) 15 percent of the amount by which the wages exceed the sum of—

(A) the number of withholding exemptions claimed, multiplied by the amount of one such exemption as shown in the table in subsection (b) (1); plus

(B) the sum of the amounts shown in the second, third, and last columns in the table in subsection (b) (1).

(b) (1) The table referred to in subsection (a) is as follows:

Percentage method withholding table

Pay-roll period	Amount of one withholding exemption	Maximum amount subject to 12 percent rate	Maximum amount subject to 18 percent rate	Maximum amount subject to 14 percent rate

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(3) fourteen percent of the amount by which the wages exceed the sum of—

(A) the number of withholding exemptions claimed, multiplied by the amount of one such exemption as shown in the table in subsection (b) (1); plus

(B) the sum of the amounts shown in the second and third columns in the table in subsection (b) (1).

(b) (1) The table referred to in subsection (a) is as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 3, after the word "after", to strike out "June" and insert "July."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, on page 30, in line 2, before the word "Section", to strike out "(a) Income Taxes"; and in line 5, before the word "and", to strike out "(e)" and insert "(f)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 23, to insert:

(e) Taxable years of individuals beginning in 1947 and ending in 1948: In the case of a taxable year of an individual beginning in 1947 and ending in 1948, the tax imposed by sections 11, 12, and 400 shall be an amount equal to the sum of—

(1) that portion of a tentative tax, computed as if the law applicable to taxable years beginning on January 1, 1947, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year prior to January 1, 1948, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year, plus

(2) that portion of a tentative tax, computed as if the law applicable to taxable years beginning on January 1, 1948, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year after December 31, 1947, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments except committee amendment No. 1, to which an amendment was offered earlier today by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN].

Mr. McCLELLAN obtained the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Byrd	Downey
Baldwin	Cain	Dworshak
Ball	Capehart	Eastland

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] are detained on public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, I offer to the first committee amendment the amendment which I submitted earlier today and then withdrew in order that the other committee amendments might be acted upon. The amendment was stated at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas to the first committee amendment. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas to the committee amendment will be again stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 6, after line 19, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

(b) Reduction in surtax on individuals and establishment of new method for computation of surtax in case of joint returns: So much of section 12 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the rates of surtax) as precedes the table therein is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) Computation of surtax.—

"(1) Separate return: Except in the case of a joint return by husband and wife, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the surtax net income of every individual a surtax determined by computing a tentative surtax under the table set forth in paragraph (3) of this subsection, and by reducing such tentative surtax by 24 percent thereof.

"(2) Joint return: In the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the aggregate surtax net income of the husband and wife a surtax determined—

"(A) by computing a tentative surtax under a table set forth in paragraph (3) of this subsection upon an amount equal to one-half of such aggregate surtax net income;

"(B) by multiplying the tentative surtax ascertained under subparagraph (A) by two; and

"(C) by reducing the amount ascertained under subparagraph (B) by 24 percent thereof.

"(3) Surtax table: The table referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2) is as follows:."

(c) Standard deduction: Section 23 (aa) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the optional standard deduction for individuals) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) Allowance: In the case of an individual, at his election, a standard deduction as follows:

"(A) Separate return with adjusted gross income $5,000 or more: Except in the case of a joint return by husband and wife, if the adjusted gross income is $5,000 or more, the standard deduction shall be $500.

"(B) Joint return with adjusted gross income $5,000 or more: In the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, if the aggregate adjusted gross income of the husband and wife is $5,000 or more, the standard deduction shall be $1,000 or an amount equal to 10 percent of such aggregate adjusted gross income, whichever is the lesser.

"(C) Adjusted gross income less than $5,000. If the adjusted gross income is less than $5,000, the standard deduction shall be an amount equal to 10 percent of the adjusted gross income upon the basis of which the tax applicable to the adjusted gross income of the taxpayer is determined under the tax table provided in section 400."

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is one which I gave notice on two previous occasions that I would offer at the proper time during the consideration of this bill. The amendment is technical in its terms, as much of our tax legislation is. If enacted into law, the amendment would simply do justice to the Federal income-tax payers of 38 States of the Nation who are now placed at a disadvantage by the present tax law, in that the citizens of those 38 States are required to pay, on comparative incomes, considerably more Federal taxes, and to bear a heavier share of the burden of supporting this government, than are citizens of 10 of the States of the Union who happen to be residents of States which have community-property laws.

Mr. President, this is not a fight against or a quarrel with States which have community-property laws. No one wants to change their system. No one wants to affect them. This amendment will have no effect whatever, detrimental or otherwise, on the citizens of those 10 States. It will in no way affect the present amount of tax or rate of tax which they are now paying. The amendment would simply place citizens of the other 38 States on a basis of equality with the other 10.

Mr. President, this is not a partisan issue. It is not a sectional problem. The purpose is not to load the bill down with objectionable amendments. Nothing I am doing or undertaking to do is in any sense an obstruction or hindrance to the passage of tax-reduction legislation.

But as we go before the country and promise the people that we are going to reduce their taxes, let us do it equitably. Let us say, "Not only are we going to reduce taxes but along with it we are going to do equity. Simultaneously we are going to remove the injustice and discrimination under which the people of 38 States of the Union have long suffered."

What is wrong with that? Who can object to it? Do Senators from community-property States object? I trust they do not. I do not believe they do. We are not objecting to what they have. I ask my colleagues who live in States like mine, which are penalized, whether they are willing to let this injustice and discrimination continue to operate against the citizens of their State. I am not.

It may be said that this fight should be made later, or that the amendment should not be offered to the pending bill, but should be offered to some other bill. That argument has been made before, but nothing has been done about the situation. There is a time to right the injustice, and that is when the opportunity is present. The time to do it is at the first opportunity; and this is the first opportunity at this session of Congress, because this is the first tax bill we have considered.

Why is not this amendment appropriate in connection with a tax-reduction bill? It will result in a reduction of the tax, the wrongful tax, as it is at present, on literally thousands of taxpayers throughout the Nation. Why is it not right to make a reduction that will do justice and correct the evil that exists in the present tax law? Why is not that a good reduction to make? Why is it not sound legislation in a tax-reduction bill? Why can we not do justice as we give relief to the burdened taxpayers of this Nation? We can do it. We either will do it or we will refuse to do it; but if we refuse to do it now we will perpetuate this rank discrimination.

I do not propose, Mr. President, longer to be a party to delay. I do not propose to sit here idly and silently and not make a fight to bring to the people of my State the same benefits which are granted to the people of other States.

I am asked how much it would amount to. I shall call the roll of the States and ask the Senators to join me in placing all the States and all the taxpayers of the Nation on a basis of equality and fairness. I ask Senators who represent States such as mine, which do not have community-property laws, to join me. I ask them to join me in correcting the mistake today, now, while the opportunity is present. I am fighting for the people of those States as well as for my own. I am fighting for the right. Why longer delay changing the law?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to say to my able colleague from Arkansas, who brought up the matter last week when we were previously discussing the situation, that I think he will agree with me that there is nothing that would prevent any of the other States from coming under the same provisions of the law, providing they adopt the community-property principle. Is not that so?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Of course, the Senator is correct. But the States have a right to have their own tax system and their own property system. The Senator's State chooses one; my State chooses another. But that does not give the Federal Government the right to discriminate; neither does it give to the Senator from California, nor me, the right, as honest legislators sworn to do our duty to our country, to perpetuate that discrimination and injustice. There is no escape from it, Mr. President. There is no challenge. This position cannot be assailed. We either do justice and correct this mistake or we perpetuate it by not supporting an amendment which will correct it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am very happy to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Following the question asked by the distinguished Senator from California, has the distinguished Senator from Arkansas made an examination with reference to what would be required for all the States to come under the provisions of community-property laws which the Senator from California suggested could be done if they elected to do so?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will say to the Senator that a number of States, including my own, have undertaken recently to enact community-property statutes because of the discrimination they have suffered. But when that is done the necessity arises of revising the whole property system, and it cannot be done just as easily as merely saying so.

Mr. WHERRY. The simplest way and the most expeditious way would be for the Congress of the United States to permit for purposes of revenue, at least, the Federal Government to recognize partnerships in the different States of the Union as they are recognized in community-property States throughout the land.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator is correct. Does the Senator know that the Internal Revenue Department recognizes the validity of community-property laws, and in the States having such laws husband and wife are permitted to split their income for Federal tax purposes, just as the law gives half the property to the wife, half to the husband, and half of the income to each? That is respected by the Internal Revenue Bureau. In my State the laws authorize a husband to make his wife a legitimate partner in his business, and by so doing she becomes the owner of half of the business and the owner of half the income derived from it. Is that recognized by the Internal Revenue Bureau? No. I give my wife half of my property, half of my business, half of my income, but the Bureau of Internal Revenue, while recognizing the law that divides property by compulsion, disregards and will not recognize and accept for Federal income-tax purposes the law of my State under which I voluntarily give to my wife, without compulsion of law, half of my property and half of my business, and half of my income.

That is the situation which I am trying to correct. It should not exist; it should not be perpetuated. No one can justify perpetuating it or delaying the correction of it another day.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. As I read the second part of the Senator's amendment it is exactly what I have attempted to do in two sessions prior to this one, but the answer has been made to me that the reason the Internal Revenue Bureau has not done this and cannot do it in the immediate future, unless Congress should authorize it, is that they have begun studies of the community-property provision, and it is now on the agenda in the Committee on Ways and Means of the House. Does the Senator agree that that is true?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have also had those reports. To me it is almost like saying, "I want to study my alphabet, my A B C's again." It is so simple and plain that a ten-year-old child in the third grade can understand what we are talking about. I know every taxpayer can understand it.

Let me again call the Senate's attention to what the situation is. I have not the difference on every level of income, but these figures will illustrate what I mean and how great is the discrimination.

Let us begin with an income of $4,000. On a $4,000 income a citizen of Arkansas or a citizen of Maine pays $18 more a year Federal income tax than does a citizen of a community-property State. The citizens of both States are American citizens, owing no greater obligation to support the Government than do the citizens of a community-property State. Yet, on that small income they will pay $18 more tax.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. How much more income tax does the Senator pay on his salary than does the Senator from California?

Mr. McCLELLAN. On the present salary, as an illustration, assuming the salary is $12,500 a year, or on the basis of a $12,000 income I pay $646 more Federal tax than does the Senator from California. I might say that I need that money for my family just as much as does the Senator need that amount of money for his family. All I am asking is that justice be done.

Let me give the Senate some more figures to illustrate the situation. I have just given the figure on $4,000. On the basis of $6,000 a year income a citizen of my State is penalized $114 a year. On the basis of $8,000 income a citizen, if he is not from a community-property State, has to pay $266 a year more in Federal taxes.

So we can go down the list. I shall not take time to read all of them; but on the basis of a $20,000 income, the citizen of a State which is not a community-property State has to pay $1,881,- or $150-plus a month, more tax than has to be paid by the citizen of a community-property State. Is there a Senator within the sound of my voice who will rise and say there is anything right or just about that, or that he wants to have it perpetuated? Does any Senator want to inflict that penalty, that difference in tax, on the other citizens of this Nation? If Senators do not want that done, then I say to the Senators on the other side of the aisle that today they have the power to correct this glaring inequity. They are in the majority. I am not speaking on a partisan basis; I am talking American justice. I invite all Senators to go along with the amendment and help us adopt it. If Senators believe that the Government cannot stand the loss of revenue which all these amendments will entail, then when the bill goes to conference let conferees do their duty there and remove the parts of the bill which entail losses in revenue which the Treasury cannot stand now, and leave in the bill this amendment which will do this equity and justice which are so long overdue.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to repeat, because there are now present a number of Senators who were not in the Chamber the other day when I spoke, what I said at that time. I fully appreciate that the situation outlined by the Senator from Arkansas constitutes a real problem, and that the able Senator has a considerable amount of merit on his side of the question, but I submit that there is an orderly way to proceed with it. The able Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], the chairman of the Finance Committee, has indicated that this matter will be one of the No. 1 orders to be taken up when the regular tax bill for next year comes up at the latter part of this year; and the other day I pointed out to my able colleague, the Senator from Arkansas, that there are other inequities which should be considered at the same time.

The Senator from Arkansas has been calling attention to the fact that there is a difference between the taxes which may be paid by persons living in one State and the taxes which may be paid by persons living in another State, but I respectfully submit to him that there is also a difference in the nature of the property because in a community-property State one-half of the income belongs to the wife, not in fiction but in fact.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator's statement at this point, let me say that I have simply pointed out to the Senator that, although the statement he has just made is true, yet in my State under the present revenue laws, as interpreted and administered by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, it is not permissible to give the wife half of the property and then receive the same treatment that is received in States where there is a community-property law.

Mr. KNOWLAND. But I submit to the able Senator from Arkansas that his amendment will go further than that; it will not only take care of a situation such as he has just now mentioned but it will apply to cases in other States where there is no provision that the wife will, in fact, have one-half of the income and the accumulations during the marital relationship.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I say to the Senator that, however far the amendment goes, it does not go beyond what is granted to citizens living in the State of California. It simply places all citizens on a basis of equality.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point, once more?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I may state for the RECORD at this point, relative to the alleged inequities relative to the community-property situation, that when a decedent in a community-property State dies, the Federal Government levies an estate tax on the entire community-partnership property, except, first, property received as compensation for personal services rendered by the surviving spouse, and, second, property derived originally from the survivor's separate property.

Suppose a husband and wife in California accumulate a community-partnership estate of $300,000. The husband does not own $300,000 of that partnership property; he owns only half of it. The wife owns the other half. For example, she may will her half as she pleases, free of her husband's control. In the event of a divorce, she is entitled to half the property, as a matter of right. The wife's power of testamentary disposition is not a fiction; it is a fact. The Federal Government cannot tell a divorced husband in California that his wife's community-partnership rights are unreal. He knows better.

Under the 1942 estate-tax law, if the husband dies first, the entire $300,000 is considered as forming a part of his estate. Half of that estate was his wife's, and subject to her right to dispose of it by will; but it falls into the decedent's estate. Thus, in California and other community-partnership States, but only in such States, a deceased husband's estate is taxed on property he did not own and had never owned, property not subject to his testamentary disposition, property not transferred at his death. In the community-partnership States a widow is compelled to pay an estate tax on property that legally belongs to her, has always belonged to her, and is subject to her sole testamentary disposition.

So I call to the attention of my able colleague, the Senator from Arkansas, the fact that the community-property States, where certain rights exist, are also States where certain obligations or liabilities, if we may state the matter in that way, exist, and to extend the same rights to all the States of the Union, without requiring them also to give the same benefits to the wives, would, I think, work an injustice in the other direction.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, what business is it of the Federal Government what benefit a State gives to wives? It recognizes the rights of all of them. But when taxes are collected for the support of the Federal Government, in the Senator's State a wife is treated in one way, and in my State a wife is treated in another way. Regardless of which State treats the wife in the best way, the obligation to the Federal Government is not lessened or increased; and there should be no discrimination.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to make a brief observation. What the distinguished Senator from Arkansas says I believe to be true, and I think his contention is unanswerable. I know of a partnership in my State that is not fictitious, that is recognized as a partnership between husband and wife for every legal purpose which exists in the State of Nebraska, and yet the Bureau of Internal Revenue will not recognize it for purposes of revenue, for the very reasons outlined by the Senator from Arkansas. Senators may attempt to defend that situation, but it is indefensible. The argument of the Senator from Arkansas on that proposition simply cannot be answered.

I think the time has come when if we are going to recognize family partnerships in the community-property States, it is only fair that they be recognized in all the States of the Union.

Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Colorado, for whom I have the highest regard, whether he can assure those of us who believe in the principle of this amendment to the committee amendment relative to family partnerships, that this matter is on the agenda and that the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House really mean that they will take up this subject matter in the proposed new legislation relative to the tax structure, and will at least afford an opportunity to make a study relative to the amendment, so that it will be possible to write into the statute the very principles about which the Senator from Arkansas is speaking.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I am very glad to answer the question of the Senator from Nebraska. This subject of split income and family partnerships—and they are closely related—is one of immediate interest both to the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee. The House Ways and Means Committee has already commenced its studies in preparation of a general revision of the tax laws, and a bill for that purpose will be introduced at the next session of the Congress. The two related matters are at the top of the list of those to be considered. The Secretary of the Treasury recognizes the importance of taking a good look at the situation and possibly having amendments made to the existing law.

I can assure the Senator that in connection with that effort the two committees which have to do with the subject will give the most careful attention to the problem, and with much sympathy.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield for a further question? I do not desire to impose upon his time, for he is making a wonderful argument.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is quite all right; I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Colorado, this question: How much is involved in this split-income provision, or what would be the effect this year, in millions of dollars, on the revenue income we are considering in connection with the tax bill?

Mr. MILLIKIN. It would add to the cost of the bill, if we were to put it in the bill, about $800,000,000. It would make the cost of the bill about $4,000,000,000, instead of $3,200,000,000, and thus would stultify all the representations which have been made as to what the cost of the bill would be.

Mr. WHERRY. I am speaking now only of the family partnership.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Oh, of the family partnership.

Mr. WHERRY. Is that the figure—$800,000,000?

Mr. MILLIKIN. There is no figure on that, because to determine under the present law what should be exempt from taxation and what should be taxed requires the consideration of every partnership case, and that is probably the reason why accurate figures are not available.

Mr. WHERRY. If I referred to the joint returns between husband and wife, would the Senator have the figure?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. What is that figure?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Eight hundred million dollars.

Mr. WHERRY. So that, in reality, it would mean a cost in revenue of $800,000,000?

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield a moment more?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I am grateful for the comments by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, because I do not want to stand in the way of the enactment of a piece of legislation which will carry out a tax-reduction program that will be beneficial to the class to whom we pledged our support. On the other hand, I wish to emphasize that I have introduced a bill which, so far as the joint returns are concerned, is identical with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas. I introduced that bill in two sessions of Congress. I believe in it. I think it is absolutely right in every particular. I cannot see any objection to it. I cannot understand how the Internal Revenue Bureau, when a legal partnership, legal for all practical purposes, is set up in a State, should take the position that it is a fictitious partnership, and should not be recognized as a partnership for tax purposes. So I am caught between two fires. I want to see tax reduction, it is true, but I should like to hear the distinguished Senator from Colorado repeat what he has said by way of assurance. I do not want any promises which are out of reach, and I do not want an indication that we might do so and so, but if the distinguished and respected Senator from Colorado will assure me that the legislation I have proposed is on the agenda for the second session of this Congress, that we will have an opportunity to present the proposal and consider it, that the Department is serious about it and is not misleading in its promises, I shall be tempted to go along with the distinguished Senator in connection with the pending bill, providing I can get assurance that this matter will be brought to a head within a few months, and that the proposed legislation which the Senator from Arkansas is asking to have enacted will be considered.

Mr. TOBEY and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I shall yield in a moment; I am not yielding now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas declines to yield at the moment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I wish to comment on the point the Senator from Nebraska has made, that if he can get assurance that something will be done at the next session of Congress he may be willing to forego action on this matter at this time. That would mean another year of unfair burden. That is the point I am making. There is no sense in postponing and delaying and deferring and procrastinating about an injustice that is as plain as the first three letters of the alphabet, by saying, "Well, perhaps we will get to it next year, or the next, or at some other time." I have just as much confidence in the able chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance as has any other Member of this body. I know he is sincere when he expresses the hope that something will be done about the matter. But, Mr. President, if nothing is done about it, the people in the States affected will have to continue to pay.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I promised to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I wish to say, first, that I share the zeal and desire expressed by the Senator from Arkansas for the adoption of the amendment he has proposed, and I should like to see it incorporated in the bill. I listened to his colloquy with the distinguished Senator from Colorado, and to the answer made. The Senator from Colorado said very frankly, "I give you my assurance that we and the members of the Ways and Means Committee will consider this matter with the greatest of sympathy."

Mr. President, that is a little bit of progress. But sympathy is reserved for cases where there are dead ones, those who have passed on. What we want is not sympathy. We do not want flowers; we want an affirmation that our friends think this is a good piece of legislation, that they will approach it with zeal and great expectation. I suggest the slogan from the Senator's State, "Eventually, why not now?" I pass that on to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. What the Senator wants and what I want is a reduction in taxes, not sympathy.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. On the point raised by the Senator from Nebraska, about the matter being considered at another time, there are two reasons why I think that is a vain hope. I should like to point out to the Senator from Nebraska, concerning the hope and prospect of the consideration of this matter at the next session, in the first place, the only chance for us to get effective action, as a practical matter, is when taxes are being substantially reduced, and reduction of taxes is the purpose of the pending bill. If we do not do now what is here proposed, I do not think there is much hope in the expression of sympathy of the chairman of the committee, because it would be very unlikely that the committee would come in next year with a bill substantially reducing taxes.

Secondly, I wish to call attention to the fact that the delaying tactics have been in evidence since 1921. I have a letter signed by Colin F. Stam, the chief expert of the joint committee, in which he says that since 1921 there have been several attempts in Congress to eliminate the tax discrimination enjoyed by those living in community-property States, and each time it has been proposed and defeated it has always been made a subject of further study. That means 26 years of the same tactics, and there is a very faint hope of getting action if the matter is postponed at this time, an occasion which seldom comes to us, that is, when there is opportunity for substantial reduction of taxes.

I submit that the way to accomplish what is desired would be to adopt the pending amendment, and couple with it a slight differential in the reduction of exemptions. In that way there will be achieved exactly the same purpose the committee bill achieves in the distribution of the benefits .

It is true that the pending amendment by itself, without any other reduction, gives a greater advantage, I think, to those in the higher brackets than any of us desire. But coupled with some adjustment in the lower brackets, we would reach a result just as equitable as that accomplished by the committee bill.

I also point out that on February 5 I submitted a resolution concerning this subject; but the committee gave no study to it whatever, in fact, paid no attention to it at all. While I know the chairman of the committee is very sincere in his offer to consider the matter next year, I think it is entirely beyond his capacity to give any serious consideration to it, because it is unlikely that there will be any effort to reduce taxes next year.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I merely wish to implement what my able colleague has said by adding that once we reduce taxes, and say that this is as far as we can go, all we will get from here on will be sympathy. If we can reduce them next year an additional $800,000,000, we can reduce them $800,000,000 now.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I wish to make it clear that interest, active interest, in this matter is not something for the future. I may say that personally I have been in touch with the Treasury rather frequently within the last few weeks on the family income matter. I have had personal conversations with the officials. The House Ways and Means Committee is not going to start next year, it has already started, the consideration of this matter. It has had the Secretary of the Treasury before it. We propose to reduce taxes again next year. This is not a mere buck-passing affair. We have an earnest intent to clear up inequities in our tax system early next year.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I hope so. The record shows the earnest intent has persisted for 26 years.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senator surely knows that during the war was not a proper time to go into a general revision bill. We had to confine ourselves to raising taxes, not reducing them. The first moment that an appropriate occasion presented itself to lower taxes we moved; and we are moving. It is not a matter of theory; it is not something we are going to do next year. We are under way right now.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do not mean the Senator himself; but, beginning in 1921 and continuing throughout the twenties, when taxes were to be reduced, the matter was always postponed. I do not refer to the distinguished Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for one brief statement?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKIN. As I recall, Arkansas at one time was a community-property State.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I do not recall that.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I have the complete history of it here.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It was before my time. I know that the taxpayers of my State have never had the benefit of it during the time I have been paying taxes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. To me, it seems a matter of small moment whether it was ever a community-property State or not. I think there is a gross inequity, and I think the arguments advanced by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas are unanswerable.

Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Arkansas permit me to ask the distinguished Senator from Colorado another question?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not we shall have reasonably prompt consideration of the legislation? Is the Senator in a position to state now whether or not it is on the agenda of the Committee on Finance of the Senate?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I may say to the Senator, without question, it is on the agenda of the Committee on Finance for consideration in connection with the next revenue bill, without any ifs, buts, or maybes. I necessarily must exercise a decent restraint in talking about what the Ways and Means Committee of the House is going to do, but I know it is on the agenda of that committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it being studied now, in preparation for the tax bill, revising the entire tax structure, which we expect to take up in the second session of the Eightieth Congress?

Mr. MILLIKIN. This specific subject has already been raised before the House Committee on Ways and Means by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator will yield for one more question, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Colorado whether or not the Treasury Department looks with favor upon the pending amendment?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am inclined to believe——

Mr. WHERRY. I am asking the Senator whether or not he knows.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I know that Mr. Surrey, of the House legislative counsel, is actively in favor of an amendment of this kind, and I know that the Secretary of the Treasury has said nothing adverse to it, but has urged that the matter receive prompt study in connection with the general revision bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to point out one thing in connection with the argument that is proceeding. We are talking about a reduction of taxes next year. No doubt it is the intention of the majority party to do exactly what the able Senator from Colorado says. But I point out that no one can foretell the conditions of this country and of the world a year from now, when it is planned to start the tax reduction program. If Senators are really interested in the community-property tax amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, it would be better for them not to put off until tomorrow what they can do today.

I repeat, it is thought we are going to have a tax bill next year; but we may and we may not have a reduction of taxes next year. Looking at the matter from that standpoint, I shall support the Senator's amendment. However, I should like to indicate to the Senator what his amendment to H. R. 1 does.

House bill 1 in my judgment is designed primarily to assist taxpayers in the higher income-tax brackets and in the middle income-tax brackets. Certainly, as originally proposed, H. R. 1 was designed primarily to assist those in the higher brackets. With all due deference to the House, the Senate, by its amendments, has improved the measure. But the moment the Senator's amendment is attached to H. R. 1, further aid will be given to those in the higher income-tax brackets and in the middle income-tax brackets, a further benefit will be conferred upon taxpayers in the middle and higher income-tax brackets, to which they are not entitled. The only danger in the Senator's amendment is that a further advantage is given to those not entitled to receive it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator says they are not entitled to it. Does the Senator mean "not entitled"?

Mr. LUCAS. No; I do not mean that.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator means it will be given to persons who do not need it so much?

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is, to persons who need it less?

Mr. LUCAS. They are entitled to it, but it does not square, so far as equity is concerned, with H. R. 1, when it is amended, because it gives too much. That is why I offered in committee a substitute for the bill, increasing the exemptions, splitting of family income doing the very same thing that the Senator wants done; and in addition, taking two points off each and every one of the surtax brackets. In that way there is a leveling-off process which gives the taxpayers equitable treatment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the Senator from Illinois, and I want to say to him that I intend to support his substitute, in the event certain other amendments are not adopted. The one thing I dislike about the Senator's substitute is that it does not go quite far enough in raising personal exemptions. I appreciate his position. I should like the exemptions to go even higher than is provided by the amendment which I intend to propose, but I realize it cuts into the revenue to such an extent that it is inadvisable to go higher at this time.

Mr. LUCAS. That is exactly the point. What I have tried to do in the substitute I intend to offer is to keep the total amount taken from the Treasury at a level comparable to that which H. R. 1 would establish.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In other words, the purpose would be to achieve about the same reduction?

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct. My bill would level it off, rather than to give benefits to taxpayers within certain brackets that I do not think they should have. At the same time, it would give the family the advantage of paying taxes on the basis of a split income as between husband and wife, as they are now permitted to do, if living in a community-property State.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I may remind the distinguished Senator of certain observations which have been made to the effects that this matter has been up for consideration a number of times, but that nothing has happened. My attention is invited to the fact that it has been up, but, in the form in which it was proposed, it was designed to equalize conditions by imposing a tax on the community-property States, instead of accomplishing the same purpose by granting a benefit to the non-community-property States, and that landed us in a lot of trouble.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am not so familiar with the history of it; such attempts may have been made. My thought in weighing this matter was that we have no quarrel after all with community-property States. I do not want to put any more taxes on the community-property States, but I do not want this disadvantage perpetuated against the people who do not live in community-property States.

Mr. President, the arguments are again heard about postponement. I can appreciate the sincerity and the interest of the able Senator from Colorado, and the hope that the bill in its present form may be passed, now, in order to avoid creating a greater loss of revenue to the Treasury Department; but, Mr. President, if there is to be one dollar of tax reduction now, the best way, the proper way, and the way which has the strongest appeal from the standpoint of justice and honest legislation, is to correct inequities first, putting everybody on an equality, and then to enact further reductions in accordance with justice and ability to pay. Let all people share this tax burden alike. Let us not keep the payment of Federal taxes out of balance. In carrying the heavy burden of Federal taxes let us not place one man on the short end of the log stick and another on the long end. We sometimes hear the expression "log-rolling" in connection with legislation. From practical experience I know what log-rolling really is. I refer to the old log stick by means of which men used to carry logs and on which they would roll them when piling them for burning in the new ground clearing. The stronger man was given the shorter end of the stick, while the one on the other end of the stick, if he was a weaker man, was given the longer end. But in respect to tax legislation men should be placed on an equality. Two men with the same equal income should undertake to carry the burden of government equally. But today the log stick of taxation has a long end and a short end. In tax matters men of equal strength and ability should carry the log of government with equal length of the tax stick. Inequalities in that respect should not be longer tolerated.

Mr. President, I was reading a table showing how much more tax was paid in the non-community-property States. I now want to call attention to the percentagewise differences. On a $5,000 income an individual living in a non-community-property State pays 3.33 percent more tax than a person with similar income in a community-property State. On a $10,000 income an individual in a non-community-property State pays 18.56 percent more tax than an individual with a $10,000 income in a community-property State. On a $15,000 income, Mr. President, an individual in a non-community-property State pays 28.31 percent more tax than is paid by an individual receiving the same income in community-property States. On a $25,000 income an individual in a non-community-property State pays 40.59 percent more Federal tax than an individual receiving $25,000 in a community-property State. Such differences in income-tax payment cannot be defended, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I shall call the roll of the States. I want to appeal to Senators from non-community-property States who want their people relieved from the tax injustice under which they suffer, and Senators from the community-property States who are willing to say with me today that this tax burden ought to be equal and that justice ought to be done, to vote for my amendment.

Mr. President, it is said that adoption of my amendment will result in a greater loss of revenue than the Government can stand. If that should be found to be true, all that is necessary to be done when the bill goes to conference is to make other reductions so as to provide for this loss which is necessary to do equity and justice. That can be done, and it ought to be done, Mr. President.

The first State alphabetically is Alabama. Alabama is a non-community-property State. Therefore, the taxpayers of Alabama are suffering the discrimination of which I have been speaking.

The next State is Arizona. Arizona is a community-property State. It ought not to complain about my proposal. It ought to be willing that we not increase the tax paid by its citizens, that we not increase their burden. The people of Arizona should agree with us that we ought not to carry a greater part of the burden than is our share.

The next State is my own, Mr. President. Last year the taxpayers of my State paid $5,000,000 more Federal income tax than did the people of a community-property State, for the same number of individuals in the same income category. The taxpayers of my State were penalized $5,000,000 last year. Mr. President, I will not vote to perpetuate such a condition on my people. If I did I would hardly feel worthy of continuing to represent them. They are entitled to representation here, and they are entitled to that quality of representation which will protect their interests. I will try to see to it that they are not discriminated against, and that they are not compelled to carry a burden greater than the burden carried by other American citizens. I shall try to protect Arkansas today, try to do justice to her citizenship and to my constituents, and I am calling on the Senators of other States to join with me in bringing about this reform of our tax law.

The next State is California. California is a community-property State. I do not think the citizenship of California wants to deny to Arkansas and other States equal justice under the law. I am asking the Senators from the State of California to join me today in the vote on my amendment. If they vote in favor of the amendment they can go back home and face their constituents knowing that they have done the right thing. Senators from California will not hurt their own citizens by voting for my amendment. But if Senators perpetuate this injustice, then, in my judgment, they will have done wrong toward the people of all the 48 States. It is not doing the right thing to perpetuate this injustice, Mr. President.

I continue the roll of the States. Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia. Those States do not have the community-property law. In proportion, they are penalized just as the people of my State are. I call upon the Senators from those States to help me this day, this hour, to take that unjust tax burden off the taxpayers of their people. I believe this is the time for action, this is the place, and this is the opportunity. I do not know whether some tomorrow will bring another opportunity. There are many slips between the cup and the lip, Mr. President, world conditions being what they are today. Who knows whether there can be a tax-reduction bill passed again next year. I am not willing to take the risk of delay. I know action can be taken now, and it ought to be taken now.

Mr. President, the next State on the list is Idaho. Idaho has a community-property law. I invite the Senators from Idaho to join me in this effort to do justice to the people of other States who do not have a community-property law. After the Senators from Idaho have voted for the amendment which would equalize the tax burden, could they not go home and face their people without need for apologizing to them? Not only can they do it without apologizing, but they can do it with a sense of pride in having helped to correct a grievous wrong. New legislation is constantly being offered and passed when we find weaknesses and injustices in existing law, or when we find it necessary in order to correct an unjust situation. We have a bill before us now to which my amendment is germane. My amendment is in harmony with the whole spirit, purpose, and objectives of the bill, which are to equalize the tax burden, and to give some tax reduction.

The next State is Illinois. I am happy to know that at least one Member of the Senate, one of the Senators from Illinois, is joining with me in this fight. I am happy to know that he is not willing to perpetuate the existing injustice, or remain silent or inactive. He wants to take care of the people of his State.

The next State is Indiana. Then comes Iowa, and then comes Kansas—States in the Middle West. Oh, Mr. President, this is not a question of partisanship. It affects Republicans and Democrats alike. It does not matter whether the State went Republican or Democratic in the last election. The tax injustice still exists.

The next State on the list is Kansas, followed by Kentucky. I certainly hope that I shall have the support of both Senators from the State of Kentucky on this nonpartisan issue. One of them sits on the side of the minority, and the other on the side of the majority. Let them join hands on this nonpartisan issue and cast their votes as representatives of the citizens of the great State of Kentucky to right a wrong against their people. I could cite a number of other like illustrations, but I mention this example because the minority leader comes from the State of Kentucky.

The next State is Louisiana. By the way, Arkansas is almost surrounded. To use a slang phrase, we are in a "heck of a fix." We have south of us the great State of Louisiana, which is a community-property State. West of us is the great State of Texas, which has a community-property law. To the north and west is the great State of Oklahoma. A number of the citizens of my State have their businesses in Arkansas and live across the line in the State of Texas. I cannot blame them, although I would not want to leave Arkansas. By doing so, every 4 years they save enough in Federal taxes to pay an entire year's Federal tax on their income. Can we blame them? That is the result of the present discriminatory situation. We are almost hemmed in. The situation can be corrected, and it ought to be corrected now. It is not a sectional question.

The next State is Maine. I certainly hope that the majority leader [Mr. WHITE] and his colleague [Mr. BREWSTER], both of whom sit on the other side of the aisle, will be willing to correct this injustice against the people of Maine. Why not? It is said, "We will try to do it next year." As my able colleague [Mr. FULBRIGHT] has indicated, according to the record this condition has been in existence since 1921. We are always going to do something about it, but we never get to it. Now the war is over. Of course, during the war we had to suffer many inconveniences. But, now, we are in the process of trying to get back to as nearly normal a peacetime basis of taxation and cost of government as conditions will permit. I hope that the able majority leader, representing the State of Maine, and occupying the position which he occupies in this body, will join with me in the fight to adopt this amendment, and treat the wives and husbands of the State of Maine as wives and husbands are treated in other States.

The next State is Maryland. I hope I shall have the support of both Senators from Maryland.

The next States in order are Massachusetts and Michigan. The condition of which I complain exists from East to West, from Midwest to South and North. It is not sectional. I am not pleading only for Arkansas or the South. The condition of injustice reaches from the tip of Maine to the other extreme of the country.

Let us correct the situation now. I remember the old hymn, Why not? Oh, why not tonight? Why not? Oh, why not today? I cannot sing. I cannot carry a tune. However, I should like to have my colleagues, immediately following the quorum call, hold a protracted meeting and sing, "Why not? Oh, why not today?" "If thou wilt be saved, then why, oh, why not tonight." If my colleagues will correct this wrong, then "why, oh, why not today?" There is no answer to the argument.

I proceed with the roll call. The next State in order is Minnesota, followed by Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, and Nebraska. I hope that I may have the support of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], who has indicated a deep concern for the welfare of the people of his State. I can remember that during the singing of the hymn, Why not? Oh, why not tonight? at the revival meetings there would be a call for mourners. I say to my able friend the Senator from Nebraska, "Why not? Oh, why not today?" If he feels penitent for the penalty which is imposed on the taxpayers of his State and he wants to correct the situation, he has the opportunity. Let us do it today.

I continue to call the roll. Nevada has a community-property law. New Hampshire has not. I was glad when the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] evinced his interest a while ago. He said that he did not want promises or flowers in the future, or sympathy. What he wanted was relief, and he wanted it now. I hope he will join with me.

Next we come to the State of New Jersey. New Jersey is not a community-property State.

New Mexico is a community-property State.

Then we come to the great State of New York. I have not checked, but I wonder how much taxes the citizens of New York pay in excess of what they would have to pay if they were treated as citizens of community-property States are treated. Both Senators from New York should be concerned and interested and desirous of helping to rectify this condition.

Next comes North Carolina, followed by North Dakota and Ohio. I wonder if the two Senators from Ohio would not like to help in this effort. Why not?

The next State is Oklahoma, which is a community-property State. Oregon is a community-property State.

The citizens of Pennsylvania pay an enormous amount in taxes. They are under this burden and cloud. Let the Senators from Pennsylvania join with me in obtaining justice for the citizens of that great State.

The next States in order are South Carolina, South Dakota, and Tennessee. Every one of them ought to be in this fight. If Senators from those States will join hands with me, in a few hours we shall have this legislation on the way to enactment. If the bill finally becomes law, justice will have been done.

Next is the great State of Texas, a community-property State. Utah, Vermont, and Virginia are not community-property States.

The State of Washington is a community-property State. West Virginia is not. Wisconsin is not. Wyoming is not.

Mr. President, I have called the roll of the States. I do not think there should be one dissenting vote. The vote should be unanimous, Mr. President, because the Senators from community-property States should not be willing by their votes to continue this condition. Certainly every Member of this body whose people are discriminated against and are suffering because of the discrimination should take advantage of this drive to reduce taxes, this first opportunity to have a tax-reduction bill at a time when taxes are at the highest peak ever known in the history of the Nation. Here is the opportunity. I should think everyone would be willing and anxious, Mr. President, to join in this fight and make certain that there shall be no slip; that the cup shall reach the lip before the contents of it may be spilled and there be no room left for the incorporation of this provision in some other bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. When I entered the Chamber the Senator from Arkansas was making the statement that Arkansas paid more tax than did the community-property States. Did the Senator previously mention the amount of income taxes Arkansas paid?

Mr. McCLELLAN. In 1946 I believe the personal income taxes amounted to $65,000,000.

Mr. MAYBANK. I am heartily in favor of the Senator's amendment, and I was trying to see how it might affect South Carolina in proportion.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It would make an average of approximately one-thirteenth more taxes paid across the board.

Mr. MAYBANK. Outside of the excess profit taxes, the amount would be approximately $65,000,000?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Mr. MAYBANK. South Carolina paid in the neighborhood of $100,000,000.

Mr. McCLELLAN. South Carolina would probably be penalized to the extent of approximately seven and one-half million dollars.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Senator. I am very much interested in his argument and I am heartily in favor of his amendment. I merely wanted to calculate in my own mind the savings that would be effected.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I shall not speak longer. The Senate will either adopt or reject my amendment. I do not want to take up more time. I have no purpose to delay the expeditious passage of the measure which is now before the Senate. I shall have another amendment to offer when the time is right, and I shall make some remarks on it, after this amendment is disposed of and I have an opportunity to present the other one. I talked about both of them briefly at the time I gave notice that I would present them. The other amendment has to do with the raising of personal exemptions up to $750 for single persons and up to $1,500 for married persons. I have stated many times that there is just one reason for that, and that is that the husband and wife who are earning only $1,500 cannot pay income taxes except by denying themselves of some of the actual necessities of life. I think the proper approach to tax reduction would be by a combination of these two proposals, first, to correct the injustices which now exist by letting the reduction inure to persons who are now discriminated against, and then by raising the personal exemptions of those persons in the low-income brackets who are most in need of tax relief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas to the first amendment of the committee.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Arkansas if he knows whether any other Senator wants to speak on his amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I think most of the Senators are out for lunch at the moment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hatch	O'Daniel
Baldwin	Hawkes	O'Mahoney
Ball	Hayden	Pepper
Barkley	Hickenlooper	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DONNELL in the chair). Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the first committee amendment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, may I ask the distinguished Senator from Arkansas whether any Senator is prepared to go forward in behalf of his amendment?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I understand my colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] wishes to discuss the amendment, but at the moment he is at lunch.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, there is great interest in the amendment which the distinguished Senator has offered. There is an obvious discrimination, of a type, between the income taxes paid in community-property States and those paid in other States. It has been a subject of interest in the Congress for many years.

The first approach was to aim the remedy directly at the community-property States. That approach never succeeded. I have been told that the last time it came up in the Senate it encountered a filibuster. But the fact remains that there is a strong claim of discrimination between the two types of States.

During the recent hearings of the Senate Committee on Finance we had the honor of listening to the distinguished senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], the distinguished junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the distinguished junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], and others, in behalf of an amendment similar to that offered by the senior Senator from Arkansas, which is now pending.

The Senate Committee on Finance did not take a light view of the subject. But we were driving toward a single objective, namely, an income-tax-reduction bill. It was perfectly apparent, or so it seemed to us, that we could not achieve that objective and at the same time enact a general revision revenue bill.

There are numerous group inequities in our taxation structure. I believe that the Secretary of the Treasury outlined perhaps 20 of them to the House Ways and Means Committee during the hearings on House bill 1.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Did the inequities to which the Senator refer all involve substantial reductions in tax collections?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Many of them involved reductions, many of them involved plugging loopholes, many of them involved achieving greater symmetry in our tax structure.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It was my impression that mainly they involved the stopping of loopholes, and that there is not involved in any of them a reduction in taxes comparable to that contemplated in curing the inequity which the pending amendment proposes to cure.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I shall be very glad to give the Senator a specific answer to his question. The Secretary of the Treasury, when he recently appeared before the House Ways and Means Committee, in the hearings dealing with the next tax-revision measure, the hearings having already commenced, touched on the following subjects:

He touched on double taxation of corporate dividends. That obviously might involve a reduction in taxes.

He touched on the whole structure of corporate taxes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The taxing principle applies equally to all citizens, does it not?

Mr. MILLIKIN. The Senator's point was whether these suggestions touched reduction of taxes, and I am now in process of giving him a specific answer.

The double taxation of dividends definitely involves a reduction of taxes, and to a very large extent.

The Secretary of the Treasury discussed the problems of small business, with the end in view of possibly giving additional exemptions to small business. That would involve a very substantial reduction in taxes.

The Secretary discussed tax-exempt corporations. That might be in the nature, if anything were done about it, of loophole plugging.

The Secretary discussed business-loss offsets.

He discussed the subject of depreciation. Obviously, if greater depreciation were allowed there might be a reduction in revenue.

He discussed discrimination against American business abroad, which, if anything were done about it, would distinctly involve reduction of taxes.

He discussed family incomes, and I wish to read now exactly what he said on that subject. I quote:

> Under present law there are inequalities in taxation of families arising out of the fact that couples in community-property States are permitted to divide their community-earned and investment income for Federal income-tax purposes, thereby reducing their taxes under the progressive rate schedule. There are also inequalities arising out of the fact that in all States recipients of investment income have opportunities for splitting that income among members of the family, whereas in non-community-property States earned income is taxed to the earner. The tax value of income splitting varies with size of income. Couples with not more than $2,000 of net income, after exemptions, can realize no tax benefit from income splitting, whereas under the graduated rates couples with large incomes may realize substantial benefits. These tax savings have created difficult administrative problems and endless litigation in the field of family trusts, family partnerships, and various other types of property assignments.
> Over a period of years the Congress and the Treasury have both considered means of eliminating or reducing the resulting tax inequalities among similarly situated families, but no adequate solution of the problem has been adopted. One limited approach that has been considered in the past would be to eliminate the tax advantages of the community-property system by taxing earned income to the earner and other community-property income to the spouse who exercises management and control. A more comprehensive approach to the problem, which has also received congressional attention in the past, would be to require joint tax returns by husbands and wives. Still another approach, which has only recently been given widespread attention, would be to eliminate tax differences resulting from income splitting between husbands and wives by granting couples in all States the option to divide their combined incomes for tax purposes.
> The existing inequalities in taxes on family incomes are significant and call for careful consideration of this problem. It must be recognized that the various solutions that have been suggested would have different but important effects on the revenue yield of the income tax and on the distribution of taxes among different income groups between married and single persons. It is, therefore, desirable to consider the family income problem in connection with any comprehensive revision of the individual tax.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask the Senator whether the assumption of the committee that there can be a reduction of $3,200,000,000 in taxes this year, and also a reduction in the national debt, is predicated on a reduction in appropriations of not less than four and a half billion dollars below the budget estimate.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to say to the distinguished Senator that we cast our bill on a budgetary plan with a view to the Senate's reduction goal of four and a half billion. But, as was pointed out yesterday, and as has been pointed out throughout the whole debate, we can allow a very substantial failure to reach the goal and still have a sound budgetary background.

As to the particular amendment now pending, it would add $800,000,000 to the cost of the bill. It seems to me that is a conclusive reason for not adopting the amendment at this time, because yesterday we decided that we wanted a $3,200,000,000 bill. The whole argument turned around that. The whole debate yesterday was budgetary, and the conclusion was budgetary, and if we increased by $800,000,000 the result we arrived at yesterday, then everything that has been done would have a new aspect, and require a whole new reargument, and an argument which I should not care to make.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator for the explanation.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Answering the Senator's question further, among other matters which the Secretary of the Treasury discussed with the House Ways and Means Committee were pensions and annuities. I do not know how it is possible to get into those subjects without detracting from the revenues. There was a question of credit for earned income. That is a revenue-reduction matter. There were allowances for life-insurance premiums and other savings. Those are revenue-reduction measures. There were suggestions regarding capital gains and losses, which would be revenue-reduction measures. There were suggestions as to revision of excise taxes, which most definitely would involve reductions of revenues. There were questions as to the revision of our structure on estate and gift taxes. I do not know just what structural revisions might be contemplated, but I doubt whether anyone would want to increase those taxes, and it might result in reductions. There were questions of social-security taxes, and numerous other technical matters.

I go into all that detail for three reasons: First, to answer the Senator's question specifically; second, to show exactly what the Secretary of the Treasury recommended, so far as the instant matter is concerned; and, third, to doubly emphasize that the House Ways and Means Committee is now at work on all these problems. It is no longer an abstraction, it is no longer something that may be put off until some indefinite future time. It is something which is now occupying the attention of the House Ways and Means Committee; and, as I have said before, Senators may be assured it will receive the very intense consideration of the Senate Committee on Finance.

I should like to repeat what was said in connection with the remarks of the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont. We are talking here about adding $800,000,000 to the cost of the bill. The Senate Committee on Finance went to infinite pains to reduce the cost of the House bill, to bring it down to $3,200,000,000, because we wanted to reach a reduction figure that would coincide with the most conservative viewpoint, which I think we did. We considered that issue yesterday, and, I submit, we decided that issue yesterday. I do not mean this in an offensive sense to those who in such good faith and with such earnestness are urging this amendment, but I suggest there would be a degree of irresponsibility were we at this stage, after the proceedings which we have had, to reverse everything we have done and start adding cost to the bill.

The community-property States have an advantage at the present time. If I may ask the Senator from Arkansas, am I far off when I say it is $150,000,000?

Mr. McCLELLAN. For 1945 it was $175,000,000. I think it was a little more in 1946.

Mr. MILLIKIN. To eliminate that advantage of $175,000,000, we must suffer a loss of national revenue of $800,000,000, and I believe that ultimately we shall, because I do not believe that a discrimination of that kind can be allowed to exist. It will have to be viewed as a tax-reduction measure, but I emphasize that we tailored this bill to give advantage to 49,000,000 income taxpayers, the largest group of taxpayers in the country. It includes every man and every woman who makes an income-tax return. We concentrated on that exclusive objective, because we felt that they have borne, all of them, a grossly inequitable and unfair tax burden, which should be relieved at the first possible moment. We concluded that the moment had come.

When we get away from that general benefit, when we commence to try to solve in connection with this bill all the group inequities which I have listed, yes, when we commence to rectify one of those in connection with the pending bill, then the same considerations of equity require that we undertake to rectify them all. If one of them were to be accepted, there would no longer be an income-tax-reduction bill; there would be an overweighted bill of mixed objectives carrying too much reduction in in Federal revenue. But I repeat that if equity requires consideration of the instant amendment, it requires consideration now of all the others. We should, in that event, wind up here with an ill-considered general-revenue revision bill, instead of the pending bill, which is focused on relief for 49,000,000 American citizens. This is not the place to consider the group problems. They ramify widely. The amendment before us ramifies into family partnerships. These in turn ramify into estate and gift-tax matters. It is not something which can be sifted here on the floor of the Senate. I suggest that we should repel that kind of action.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Gladly.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is hardly fair to say this is not the right way to do it, and that we should repel that sort of action. Certainly the committee had the opportunity to consider these matters. The committee has not been bypassed.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Oh, no. Mr. President, I was not for a moment suggesting that the matter had not been presented to the committee. In fact, at the opening of my statement I said that the distinguished senior Senator from Arkansas appeared and made a very impressive presentation; that we were glad to have him appear; and that we were instructed as a result of his appearance. We were very much interested. But as I said before, we decided to have a bill which confined itself to the principal objective of income-tax reduction. This precluded making a general revision bill out of it. That was the principal reason why we did not approve the Senator's amendment, and that is one of the principal reasons why I suggest it should not be approved here.

I want to point out what is involved in the group aspect of the amendment. Considering those who would benefit and those who would not benefit under the proposed amendment, I invite the attention of the Senate that in all the States 5,400,000 people would benefit. All the same people would benefit from the pending income-tax reduction bill, although, of course, not so much as if both proposals were to become law. In all the community-property States only 200,000 people would benefit, and in the non-community-property States 5,200,000 people would benefit, in contrast, I repeat, to the aim of the pending bill to benefit 49,000,000 people. If those 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 people are suffering from an inequity, that inequity should be corrected. I am not arguing against the correction of it. I am simply saying that this is not the time to correct it, and that the time to correct it and the consideration of the correction of it is not indefinitely postponed, but is under way at the present time.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I point out that 5,400,000 people would benefit by the adoption of my amendment, whereas the Senator says the committee bill grants a benefit to some 49,000,000. My amendment takes no benefit from the 49,000,000 whom the bill sponsored by the Senator is proposed to relieve. It only adds to the Senator's bill the removal of an injustice, and that injustice will be perpetuated if my amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I am emphasizing now not an argument against the ultimate acceptance of the Senator's amendment, but I am emphasizing the fact that we are dealing here with a group problem, and by agreeing to the Senator's amendment we would be opening the door for the conversion of the bill into a general revision bill. Under the Senator's amendment a single person living alone would not benefit, and there are many such people. Widows with children would not benefit. Widowers with children would not benefit. Children with dependent parents or other close relatives would not benefit. Couples whose income is now being received by husband and wife in approximately equal proportions would not benefit.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Gladly.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator says those whom he just mentioned would not benefit by the adoption of my amendment. They would not be harmed by the adoption of my amendment, and the pending bill does grant benefits to them.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I will say to the distinguished Senator that I concede they would not be harmed except that when we grant a particular group a benefit the other members of the whole group must bear the cost of it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I maintain that the bill perpetuates a group benefit which now accrues, and I am trying to quit perpetuating this group benefit to the community-property States.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I understand the Senator's objective, and I hope he will understand that my objective at the present time is to emphasize that this is a limited group benefit, although it may be considered a highly desirable one.

Mr. TYDINGS and Mr. FULBRIGHT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield first to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I appreciate the thought expressed by the Senator from Colorado that if the amendment is adopted the pending measure will take on the nature of a tax bill far more general in scope than was originally contemplated; but, for the record, I should like to ask the Senator a question. He has indicated what his answer most likely will be; but is it not a fact that a man and his wife, or a wife and her husband in a community-property State are now paying less taxes in toto than a man and his wife, or a wife and her husband would pay on a similar income in a non-community-property State?

Mr. MILLIKIN. The answer clearly is "Yes."

I yield now to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, in reply to the last question I asked, the Senator from Colorado spoke of a number of group problems, but I do not doubt that the Senator realizes that there is quite a difference between the problem we are now considering and one of those he mentioned, dealing with small business, or exemptions for corporation, or double taxation. Those problems apply uniformly to all the States. There is a great distinction between them and discrimination against a group based upon a geographical distribution of the persons, in other words, picking out certain States and saying, "If you live in one of those States, you can have this particular privilege, and if you do not, you cannot have the privilege." So the particular group problem we are now considering is on an entirely different basis from all the others the Senator mentioned, which relate only to practices or particular conditions with regard to doing business, all of which are uniform in every State. That is to say, when it comes, for instance, to the double taxation of corporate dividends, that provision of law applies to all the States. So I do not think it is an admissible premise to treat this particular discrimination as being part and parcel of or just like other group problems. It is very different from them.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I suggest to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas that the heart and core of the argument made upon this amendment is one resting on inequity, on discrimination.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The discrimination is between citizens of States. That is not the case in any of the other problems.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest to the distinguished Senator that if there is an inequity in our tax structure, it is no less and is no more an inequity because it follows geographical lines or exists over the whole country. What is the difference, so far as the moving point of the argument is concerned?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think there is a great difference. I do not think we have ever at any time in any place in our law, criminal or civil, or in any regulations, made any distinctions based upon citizenship in any of the States within the United States, but in connection with the Federal income tax we have always made distinctions. We make distinctions in the pending tax bill itself. We graduate the tax. We make a man who has a large income pay a higher percentage than a man with a small income. That is one example. We have always admitted that. It is a discrimination, but it is not inequitable, at least we do not consider it to be so. It is acceptable. I cannot think of any case except where community-property laws apply where we discriminate between individuals because one person happens to live in California and another happens to live in Arkansas or in Colorado. Can the Senator cite any other case where we make a distinction and a difference in the burden because of citizenship in a particular State or States?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I regard the distinction as utterly irrelevant. If a citizen of the United States has suffered an inequity, what difference does it make whether he suffers it by reason of State lines or whether he suffers it for any other reason? What is the difference?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It is not quite clear that the other things the Senator mentioned are inequities. They certainly are not so clear to my mind as being inequities, as that the situation covered by the pending amendment is discrimination because of citizenship. When I suggest such a matter as double taxation of dividends I am not at all sure that that is a case of an inequity in the sense that the matter under discussion is. Double taxation is a matter of policy just the same as is graduation of taxes. We make one who receives more money pay a higher percentage than one who receives less. Is that an inequity? I do not know. I do not think we can bring great moral questions into the type of thing which is a matter of fiscal policy. But that certainly is not true of the matter under consideration.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that so far as double taxation of dividends, or the 15 or 20 other things which I mentioned awhile ago are concerned, the person who suffers those impositions cannot escape suffering them by moving into another State. No matter where he is, he suffers those impositions, whereas there is some relief from community-property discrimination, first by not remaining in States not having such a law, which I do not recommend, and second, by the States themselves taking corrective action, which the State of Arkansas did at one time, and then abandoned.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Then the Senator thinks that this matter is not so serious because we could all move to Texas or any other State, if we wanted to? That would be a form of relief, but I do not see that would be appropriate.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am not going to adopt the Senator's geographical argument and commence to discriminate on the basis of where it is most desirable to live. I invite all Senators to come and live in Colorado.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. If Colorado had a community property law, perhaps more of us could afford to go to Colorado.

I do not believe the Senator has recognized my point. In the double taxation case mentioned by the Senator, all the persons involved, wherever they live, are treated the same. There is no inequity as between them, whereas in this case a man with exactly the same income, living a hundred yards across the State line, must pay a great deal more, under exactly the same circumstances. That is not a principle that has ever been admissible in any case of which I have ever heard.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wish to point out to the Senator from Arkansas that the alleged discrimination to which he refers does not arise by virtue of a State line. The discrimination arises by virtue of a system of ownership of property. Taxes have always been related to the ownership of property. I think the Senator from Arkansas is quite unfair in saying that it is merely a question of crossing State lines. It is not. It is a question of where the title and ownership of property or the title and ownership of income is vested. That is the question.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I disagree with the Senator. A moment ago there was cited the case of taxation in my State on partnerships. There have been a number of cases in which the husband gave the property to the wife. He paid a gift tax on it and went through all the formalities of transfering the property; and yet, because it is in Arkansas, even after going through that procedure the Bureau of Internal Revenue will not recognize the partnership as valid. The ownership is just as valid under the State law of Arkansas as it would be under the laws of Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, or any of the other community-property States. In other words, after going through all that trouble and paying a gift tax, we cannot achieve in Arkansas the same result which is automatic in a community-property State. I submit that the differential mentioned by the Senator does not hold.

An illustration relating to estate taxes was given by the Senator from California. According to the Senator from California, in the case of the estate tax the principle is not recognized. To me that indicates that the Bureau of Internal Revenue realizes that the principle is a fiction and a fraud. It is a fraud in the sense that it distinguishes between citizens of the country, and therefore the Bureau will not go quite so far as to recognize the principle in the case of an estate tax.

Mr. HATCH. The illustration which the Senator from Arkansas has just cited does not relate to a discrimination as between States. The vice which he points out lies in the ruling which has been made by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. What the Senator from Arkansas should do if he wishes to correct that error is to introduce and sponsor a simple measure providing that any partnership in the State of Arkansas between husband and wife which is valid and legitimate under the laws of his State shall be treated in exactly the same way, for purposes of taxation, as are valid and legitimate partnerships in the community-property States.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is exactly what this amendment would accomplish.

Mr. HATCH. I do not understand that that is what the amendment would accomplish. If I correctly understand the amendment—and I should like to have some light on that question—the amendment does not relate to the formation of marital partnerships. Am I correct?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The amendment would have the same effect as though the partnership existed in the Senator's State under the community property law. But if this amendment fails, then the only recourse I have to help those who have formed partnerships is to offer an amendment, which I have prepared, to compel the Bureau of Internal Revenue to recognize legal partnerships between husband and wife in my State. However, if this amendment should be adopted—and it ought to be agreed to, so as to treat everyone alike—the need for the other amendment would no longer exist.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me so that I may make an inquiry with a view to gaining a correct understanding of the amendment?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Am I to understand that the pending amendment would permit husband and wife to divide their income, each paying a tax upon their separate income, without regard to any partnership or ownership of property or ownership of income?

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is what it would permit. It would permit the splitting of income, just as it is permitted in the Senator's State.

Mr. HATCH. The point I am trying to make clear is this: When the Senator proposes, by this amendment, to permit a husband and wife to divide income without relationship to ownership of property, he is basing taxes upon a theory never before applied in the history of taxation.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Let me ask a question about the situation in community-property States. Suppose a man earns $10,000 a year from his profession, without any investment in property. Is his wife entitled to half that income?

Mr. HATCH. She is the legal owner of half the income.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is not property. That is income. That is what we are trying to reach by this amendment.

Mr. HATCH. She is the legal owner of it. However, as I understand, the amendment does not make that distinction. Under the terms of the amendment, the wife would not be the legal owner. The husband would still be the owner, and he would arbitrarily divide the income, without relation to ownership.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The amendment would make her the owner for tax purposes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me to enable me to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico whether his relationship to his monthly salary is any different from my relationship to my salary. Does he really feel that there is any difference? Does he go through any particular formality because he comes from a community-property State? Does he have to hand over half his salary to his wife every month in order to comply with the law? Just what is the difference, in a substantive way? The Senator comes from a community-property State.

Mr. HATCH. Yes. Under the community-property law, my wife is the absolute owner of one-half of my salary.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. What is the practical significance?

Mr. HATCH. In a community-property State the husband is the manager of the community. In the West we have mining partnerships in which one member of the partnership is designated as the manager. That is the best illustration I can give.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. As a practical matter——

Mr. HATCH. I am coming to that. I have encountered many practical cases. When I was a judge on the bench in New Mexico I tried many cases involving a division of income or a division of property as between husband and wife. I have awarded separations when there was no divorce. I have divided the income and the property in half. I have awarded a divorce when the wife was at fault, and she took complete ownership of one-half the property. As a judge I had no power to give it to the husband.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do not wish to delay action on the bill too long——

Mr. HATCH. The Senator asked me about practical applications.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I asked about the Senator's own experience. Does he go through any different dealings with his monthly salary than I do? I doubt it. The Senator pays his bills. He writes the checks. Does his wife have to countersign the checks?

Mr. HATCH. After the family expenses are paid, there is nothing left to divide between husband and wife. That has been the situation for many years. [Laughter.]

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Therefore there is no difference.

Mr. HATCH. Neither one has any ownership.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. As I understand it, there is no difference between what the Senator does and what I do, except that the Senator finishes the year with approximately $650 more than I have, because he happens to come from New Mexico. That is the main difference. Other than that, there is no practical difference.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate unnecessarily. The mind of the Senator from Arkansas is made up. I tried to point out to him a simple way by which the thing he desires can be done. The husband and wife, by a simple contract, can establish a community of property for the payment of taxes and the ownership of income, if they so desire. That would place them upon exactly the same basis as citizens of community-property States. I do not have any preference whatever over other States because I come from a community-property State. I am perfectly willing to accord to every State the same right possessed by those who live in community-property States, providing only that the payment of taxes is based upon the fundamental provision of ownership of property. If we have that, we are equal. But if we adopt a course which has no relation whatever to ownership there is a vast preference over those who have to comply with the community-property law. It is not a voluntary thing, whether we like it or not.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator made the point a moment ago that the amendment would add $800,000,000 to the cost of the bill. May I suggest to the Senator, since we are committed to tax reduction—the chairman of the committee certainly is—that it is a very simple thing to cure. All we need to do, if this amendment be adopted, is to reduce the percentage of the reduction in the medium and higher brackets commensurately. That would in no way raise the over-all amount of the tax reduction. Is not that correct?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am sorry. I was engaged in another matter and did not hear the Senator's question.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I thought the Senator was engaged in this debate.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Will the Senator be good enough to ask his question again?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator made the point that, if the amendment were agreed to, there would be an increase in the cost of the bill to the Federal Treasury of approximately $800,000,000. If this amendment were agreed to, would it not be a very simple matter—I am sure it can be figured in a very few minutes—to calculate the amount needed to reduce the percentage of reduction in the medium and higher brackets? It would then be a complete bill. There is nothing very difficult about adjusting or absorbing this amount. I think the Senator knows very well that a large reduction is required, and the only time we will get it is when we are making a substantial reduction. If it is put off until next year there is no hope that it will be effected. While we are setting out to reduce taxes by $3,200,000,000 it is very easy to absorb $800,000,000, simply by a change in the percentage of reduction in the higher brackets.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, there are several parts to the Senator's question. The first "barrel" of his question involves ease of operation. I should like to suggest to the Senator that it would probably take a week or more for the technical staff to make the necessary readjustments of the tables of rates and to do everything necessary to bring about what the Senator suggests.

Second, the Senator asks whether it would be possible. I assume that just as we can add we can also subtract. The main question is that we have set out to accomplish an income-tax-reduction bill. We have not set out to accomplish a general revenue revision bill at this time. As has been repeatedly pointed out, it is a limited group that will benefit. Although the amendment may have all the merit in the world, its benefits are limited to a particular class; and it was not our intention to get into group benefits, but to take them up in the prospective general revision bill on which we have started working.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator said that it was not the purpose of the committee to go into group benefits. I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that in the bill the committee has singled out a particular group and has given them a special benefit by increasing the exemption for persons over 65 years of age, and if the committee did not take that into account while this other benefit was not taken into account?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I accept the Senator's correction. I may say that the cost of the additional exemption in behalf of those over 65 years of age is about $150,000,000. That raises another very practical point. This bill will have to go to conference. We have already taken out the retroactive feature of it. We have interfered with the rate of progression of tax reduction. We have made a number of technical amendments. When the bill is in conference I feel quite confident that the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, if it were adopted, would not be accepted by the House. Much time would be wasted in a deadlock and we would have difficulty in achieving our goal of getting the bill into operation in ample time prior to July 1.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do not understand why the Senator thinks it would not be accepted by the House. Community-property States have more influence in the House than they have in the Senate.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I presume they have influence. I do know that the House wants an income-tax-reduction bill, but I can do no more than ask the Senator to accept my judgment that it would not accept a serious deviation from that objective.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It is my understanding that in the other House the bill was considered under a rule which provided that no amendment could be offered. I do not think there is any evidence to point to the conclusion that the Senator draws that the House would not accept it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am simply saying that this amendment did not find its way to the bill in the House, and I am suggesting that it would not be acceptable to the House.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, we have had an interesting discussion today, and I wish to say again to my able colleague from Arkansas that if the proper amendment is presented at the time when a general tax revision bill is under consideration I shall certainly be glad to join with him in trying to cure the inequities which exist. He has pointed out one inequity. I pointed out another inequity in the matter of estate taxes that apply against community property States. The able Senator from Colorado has pointed out that under the Railroad Retirement Act certain pensions are free from taxation, whereas the pensions of certain other people in public service, such as school teachers and others, are not free from taxation. There are a number of inequities which should be considered by the Finance Committee when the matter is taken up at the beginning of the next session of the Eightieth Congress.

I wish to point out, however, Mr. President, that States which are endeavoring to get the advantages possessed by the so-called community property States should not get them without accepting the responsibilities that accompany them.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I will yield to my colleague from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator was speaking about a number of inequities that should be adjusted. The Senator referred to the liability of the community-property States. That is exactly what we are complaining about and what we are trying to rectify. The liability to the Federal Government for the cost of government is not so high as is the liability of those of us who do not live in community-property States under the practical administration and operation of the present system and law.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Of course, we have a little different view of the situation than has my able colleague from Arkansas. The community-property system was not established or designed to avoid taxes. The community partnership is an ancient practice and a civilized way of recognizing the wife's interest as a partner and co-owner with her husband. It is based on the enlightened social and ethical principle that husband and wife work together as equal partners to maintain their home, and the wife should have, in her sphere, no less than the husband in his, whatever is acquired or gained through the marriage that is due to the efforts, industry, and sacrifice of both, and belongs, therefore, to the marital partnership. Community partnership is older than Federal-income taxation and older than the Nation itself. The original community-property States got their system of property from the Mexican laws. It is, in our opinion, at least, more in keeping with the American way of life than the common-law system of marital property rights which originated in the Norman-English feudal concept that a wife had no legal existence apart from her husband.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. If the Senator will permit me to complete my remarks, I shall be glad to yield to him.

I say again to the Senator from Arkansas that if at the next session of Congress, after proper consideration, legislation is reported which will in fact accord to the families and the wives in the non-community-property States the treatment which is accorded to those in the community-property States, I shall be most happy to join with him in seeing to it, insofar as we can do so, that the Bureau of Internal Revenue recognizes that situation.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. One thing which I cannot understand on the part of those who oppose this amendment is that they say they will do it next year; but if the Government can stand a $800,000,000 reduction in taxes next year, it can stand it now. So why postpone it?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I respectfully submit to the able Senator from Arkansas that I think the chairman of the Finance Committee has put his finger on the situation, which is that if we open up the bill at this point, then in all fairness we must open it up with respect to discriminations against the community-property States relative to 1942 estate taxes; and if we open it up that far, then we shall enter another field of discrimination, and we shall have a bill which will be much wider than the able chairman of the Finance Committee feels that the bill at this session of Congress should be.

I now yield to the able Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to remind the Senator that the bill is not what the proponents claim, for, as has been pointed out over and over again, the bill grants special exemptions to a special class—viz, taxpayers over 65 years of age—giving them a special exemption of $500. So complicated is that particular exemption that in order to meet that situation and to do something for those in dire need over 65 years of age, it was necessary to place all citizens over 65 in the same category, regardless of their financial position. That is one of the inequities the Senator from Colorado pointed out a moment ago. Such a provision is now in the bill. No one has told me thus far why it is in the bill, from the standpoint of equity or inequity; but it is there.

If that is an inequity which should be taken care of, certainly the inequity that is involved in the case of the non-community-property States is much more important, because the people in the non-community-property States have been suffering for a long time from downright discriminatory treatment in the payment of taxes.

I am glad the Senator says that some time, some day, somewhere, in some way, he will be willing to go along and provide for uniform treatment throughout the United States so far as that matter is concerned. But I observe that Senators from the community-property States are always putting off the day when they will take such steps; they are always saying they will wait until tomorrow, whereas they should act now, if they wish to place all the States on a basis of receiving uniform treatment.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I should like to ask a question with respect to the Finance Committee, on which I had the pleasure of serving until the present session: Was there any proposal with respect to dividing into two groups the persons in the 65-year-age group, with one group comprising those of that age who live in the community-property States, and the other group comprising those of that age who live in the non-community-property States?

Mr. LUCAS. Of course there was not. So far as inequities are concerned, Mr. President, if we are going to deal with inequities, the one we are now discussing is the most glaring of all inequities. I refer to the failure of the Congress for 26 years to do anything about the splitting of this Nation on the basis of community-property and non-community-property States.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I have offered two amendments to the pending bill, House bill 1, which I intend to propose at the proper time. It is not my purpose to discuss these amendments at length today, but I do wish to call them to the attention of the Senate and of the people of the Nation, and I hope every Senator may find an opportunity to familiarize himself with them before he is called upon to vote on them.

The first of my two amendments has been offered because of my firm conviction that our present system of application of income taxes to corporate dividends is double taxation.

My proposed amendment would deal with this problem of double taxation by allowing each stockholder credit for his pro rata share of taxes paid by the corporation on its earnings. This would not involve any complex formula or any substantial amount of bookkeeping. So far as the taxpayer is concerned, the bookkeeping involved would be negligible; and all that would be required of a corporation would be to report, to all of its stockholders, the amount of taxes paid and the proportion of the total corporate stock, issued and outstanding, which is represented by one share of stock. The taxpayer could then multiply that percentage by the number of shares he held, and he would know exactly how much of the corporate tax he was allowed to take credit for.

I have heard it argued, Mr. President, that in some cases the taxpayer might find that the credit thus allowed him was greater than the tax which he was required to pay, and that he would, therefore, be entitled to a refund; and that the making of such refunds would be a terribly complicated process. I cannot believe that, Mr. President. The making of such refunds would be in no way any more complicated than the making of refunds on withholding taxes. If the Government has collected from any citizen taxes in excess of the taxes to which the Government is entitled, there should be a refund; and it is not even plausible to argue that the refund to which the taxpayer is entitled should be withheld because it will cost the Government a certain amount of effort to make the refund.

I have also heard it argued, Mr. President, that in seeking to do something about this double taxation feature with respect to corporate dividends, those of us who will support my amendment are only trying to help the rich men of the Nation. That simply is not so. More than half of all the dividends received in the United States are received by people whose total incomes are less than $5,000 a year. Many of these people live wholly, or almost entirely, on dividends. With the dollar shrunken in buying power, as it is today, many of these people are having great trouble making ends meet. My amendment would give them immediate and effective relief, and relief to which, in equity, they clearly are entitled.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the text of my proposed amendment to deal with this problem of double taxation be printed in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, and that the amendment also be printed and ordered to lie on the table.

There being no objection, the amendment was received, ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill, insert the following:

"SEC. —. Section 23 (d) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, is further amended by renumbering the matter now contained therein as clause (1) and by adding thereto a new paragraph as follows:

"(2) The deduction for taxes allowed by subsection (c) shall be allowed to a stockholder of a corporation in the case of taxes imposed upon the earnings of the corporation and paid by the corporation: Provided, That such allowance in no case shall exceed that proportion of such taxes bearing the same ratio to the total taxes so imposed and paid as the shares of stock owned by the stockholder bear to the total corporate stock issued and outstanding."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the second amendment which I have proposed to the pending tax bill is designed to permit, and to encourage, the plowing back of business profits into increased production, through the expansion, improvement, and modernization of plant facilities. I ask unanimous consent that the text of this amendment be inserted in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, and that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be printed as a part of the Senator's remarks, and will also be printed for the information of the Senate, and will lie on the table.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. McCARRAN is as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"SEC. —. Section 23 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to deductions from gross income) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows:

"'(bb) Capital expenditures for trade or business: At the election of a taxpayer, all expenditures (subject to limitations prescribed below) paid or incurred during the taxable year for the acquisition, construction, or improvement of any real or personal property to be used in a trade or business. Total deductions under this subsection in any 1 year shall not exceed $125,000 or 50 percent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefits of this subsection, whichever is the lesser. If in any year expenditures deductible under this subsection are less than the total of such expenditures, the balance may be added to the expenditures of the immediately succeeding year and be considered for the purposes of this subsection as having been made in such immediately succeeding year. Such expenditures shall be allowable as deductions only under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary.'

"SEC. —. Section 24 (a) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to items not deductible from gross income) is hereby amended to read as follows: 'Any amount paid out for new buildings or for permanent improvements or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate, except as provided in section 23 (bb);'.

"SEC. —. Section 113 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to adjusted basis for property) is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (H), and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and by adding after subparagraph (H) a new subparagraph to read as follows:

"'(I) for expenditures deducted under the provisions of section 23 (bb).'

"SEC. —. The amendments made by sections , , and of this act shall be applicable only with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the centralization of industrial power in the United States is growing yearly. One of the factors working toward a constantly greater and greater centralization is the inability of small business to grow in the traditional American fashion.

In a capitalistic democracy such as ours, it is vitally important to have a constant infusion of new blood at the bottom of the business ladder, in all fields of endeavor; and to give those who start new enterprises every reasonable opportunity and inducement to grow.

Our present tax structure does not provide such opportunity and such inducement. The profits from a business which the proprietor invests in new plant, machinery, or equipment, to increase his production, are taxed just as are any other profits. Such expenditures are not deductible expenses in the year in which made. They have to be capitalized, and then the capital expenditure must be amortized over a period of years.

The amendment which I have proposed would permit capital expenditures, within certain limitations, to be allowed as a deduction in computing taxable income. In other words, this proposal amounts to 100 percent depreciation on capital expenditures, within certain limits.

The amendment suggests a limitation of not exceeding $125,000, or 50 percent of the taxpayer's net income, whichever is the lesser, in any given year.

Perhaps this figure is too high, though I have heard many contend that it is too low. I am particularly interested in helping small business; and if it should be the judgment of the Senate that this dollar limitation should be reduced, I would be content. I do not believe it should go, in any case, below $50,000 as the maximum limit; but even that would be of some aid to small business, since many small businesses would be greatly helped by the opportunity to make even that much of an expenditure, on a tax deductible basis. However, let me speak a word of warning. If the Congress adopted this principle, it should not, in an excess of caution, set the maximum limitation too low. With costs in all lines as high as they are today, the maximum limitation should be set high enough to provide a real relief and a real benefit.

There is in this country today an excessive demand over supply in many fields, particularly in the field of consumer goods. General tax relief will only increase that demand, without doing anything to increase the supply. The amendment which I have proposed would do something about increasing the supply, since it would provide incentive for expanded production.

This proposal would afford particularly effective relief to the small, unincorporated businessman. The present corporation tax rate ranges from 21 percent to 38 percent, with profits below $50,000, and rests at 38 percent where profits are larger. The small businessman who is unincorporated runs head-on into an even greater tax barrier, because under the present law a small businessman with an income of $50,000 pays out more than 50 percent of his income in taxes. Under those conditions, it is almost impossible for a man to build a business.

Big business has the financial contacts—the contacts with banks, with underwriters, with large investors—which enable it to borrow the money it needs for expansion. In many cases, a small businessman has only one source of money, namely, the profits on his business.

This country needs small business. It needs small business that has a chance to grow and play a real part in our economy. But small business cannot grow unless it has the money with which to finance the expansion. And even if a small businessman is able to get the capital he needs from outside his business, he often runs the risk, in getting it, of losing control of his business to outsiders; or, more particularly, to his big-business competitors. My proposed amendment would give him an opportunity to plow back into the expansion of his business some of the profits from that business.

To the precise extent that taxes reduce the funds available for plowing back into a small business, they handicap the growth of small business in general, and continue to assist big business in retaining its superior position.

In considering my proposed amendment, the question immediately arises: What will it cost the Federal Government? Obviously, there will be a reduction in tax revenues, in proportion to the increase of capital investments, for expansion and increased production, which the enactment of this measure would bring about. However, this is simply a taking of depreciation all at once, and therefore no further deductions for depreciation will be allowed in future years. Thus, tax collections will tend to even out, and it is extremely doubtful if in the long run the Government would lose any money. In fact, I anticipate that the gains in taxable production, through the stimulation of business which this measure would bring about, would yield a substantially increased revenue in future years.

The nearest thing to an estimate of the cost of this proposal which I have been able to secure from the Treasury Department—and I secured it only most informally—is that if every corporation in the United States took maximum advantage of this proposal, the estimated revenue collections for the year 1947 might be reduced by approximately $1,000,000,000.

That sounds like a staggering sum. Bear in mind these facts: The present estimate of revenue for the year 1947 is between thirty-nine and forty billion dollars, so that the maximum anticipated reduction is less than 5 percent. Secondly, it is unthinkable that all the corporations in the United States would take advantage of this proposal to its maximum, since it is a well-known fact that American businessmen do not spend money for expansion of production, for new plant, equipment, machinery, and the like, unless they need it.

However, I have just this to say: The argument that this proposal would cost the Government a billion dollars in anticipated tax revenue presupposes that the amendment would, if enacted, result in increasing by several billions of dollars the capital expenditures for expansion of business and for increased production. I count that one of the strongest possible arguments in favor of the proposal.

I have received many letters about this proposal, from all over the country, since I presented the proposed amendment less than 3 weeks ago.

One of those letters was from Mr. Bernard M. Baruch. In his letter, Mr. Baruch said:

> I just want to say that the general purpose of your plan is good. I would rather do something of this kind than to reduce taxes in any other form.

Referring to the text of a statement which I made on the floor with respect to this proposed amendment, Mr. Baruch indicated that he endorses wholeheartedly what I had to say about the effect of the present tax situation on unincorporated small business. Let me quote again from Mr. Baruch's letter:

> No unincorporated business can get ahead. It is bad enough for a small incorporated business. That is the quarrel I had as regards the previous tax reduction—that the corporations got the benefit, placing the individual at a greater disadvantage than ever.

Mr. Baruch wrote me that he does not favor any tax reduction at this time; he favors reducing expenditures first and then getting some of our debt canceled. But he adds that—and again I quote from his letter:

> Such a plan as yours will stimulate business, thus stimulating volume and bringing our economy more into balance.

I have quoted Mr. Baruch at such length because he is a man whose counsel is always worth listening to.

Mr. President, in addition to Mr. Baruch's letter, I hold in my hand a number of other letters from businessmen in different parts of the country. I have here letters from Cleveland, Ohio; Gold Hill, Oreg.; Reno, Nev.; Washington, D. C.; Wichita Falls, Tex.; St. Louis, Mo.; Las Vegas, Nev.; Chicago, Ill.; Salt Lake City, Utah; New York, N. Y.; San Francisco, Calif.; Kellogg, Idaho; Baltimore, Md.; Nashville, Tenn.; Childress, Tex.; Glendora, Calif.; Keokuk, Iowa; Chelsea, Mass.; and from other places.

I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Baruch's letter and the other letters to which I have referred be inserted in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN FINISH & CHEMICAL CO.,
Chelsea, Mass., April 14, 1947.

Senator MCCARRAN,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: According to a news article I just read, you are planning to end the so-called double taxation on certain corporate dividends. I'm writing to commend you on your stand in this matter and to give you a little encouragement if you need it.

We are one of those so-called small businesses who are very seriously affected by this double taxation. This is a closed corporation which was started with nothing, and the owners have never been able to take a cent of dividends out of this company, having plowed back all of their earnings. So all we've had are our modest salaries. Meanwhile, we've paid enormous corporation taxes (that is, enormous for us) and now we'd like to take a little out in the form of a dividend, but having been taxed so heavily on our earnings (as high as 80 percent) we hate like the devil to pay an additional 25 percent.

We feel that our corporation, although very small, does make a decided contribution to the general welfare. We employ about 30 people, all of whom are guaranteed an annual wage, which is higher than corresponding industries pay, and we give our employees annual holidays and pay for all other holidays during the year. There must be thousands of other small firms doing the same thing; that is, closed corporations who are entitled to a little profit as a result of extremely strenuous labors to keep the ball rolling.

I hope that you'll be able to make the other Senators see the light.

Very truly yours,

H. M. DAVIS.

THE HOERNER CORP.,
Keokuk, Iowa, April 16, 1947.

Senator PATRICK MCCARRAN,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: Below is a copy of an article which appeared in the Chicago Tribune day before yesterday:

"SEEKS TO END DOUBLE TAXES

"WASHINGTON, D. C.—Senator PATRICK MCCARRAN (Democrat, of Nevada) Saturday announced he will try to end what he called double taxation upon certain corporate dividends through an amendment to the House-approved bill reducing income taxes.

"MCCARRAN said he will offer an amendment to 'give shareholders credit, on their individual income-tax returns, for taxes paid by a corporation in which such stockholders hold stock.'

"The Senate Finance Committee is to begin public hearings April 22 on the House bill, which would reduce individual income taxes by 10 to 30 percent."

You can be sure that you will have the support of the right-thinking people in this effort.

As of even date I have written a letter to both of our Senators, HICKENLOOPER and WILSON, and our Congressman from the First District in Iowa, THOMAS E. MARTIN, attaching a carbon copy of this letter so they will know our feelings in this connection. If there is anything that you think of that we can do out here in the Middle West, please call on us.

Yours very truly,

KARL E. MADDEN,
Vice President.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Childress, Tex., April 16, 1947.

Senator MCCARRAN,
Democrat, from Nevada, in care of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I read with much interest an article in the press that you were going to try to end double taxation on certain corporative dividends, and I sincerely hope you can get something done on that.

I happen to be a stockholder in a number of corporations, and, of course, the corporations all pay the tax, and when I get the dividend I have to pay it again, and I never have seen the justice in this.

Yours very truly,

J. M. CREWS.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: In the Reno Evening Gazette of April 12, I noticed an article regarding a tax amendment submitted by Senator P. A. MCCARRAN, of Nevada, which would exempt from taxation money received by stockholders from corporate earnings on which a tax has been paid by the corporation. This is similar to the English form of taxation that has been in effect for some years past. I think your amendment is a splendid one because the investor is doubly taxed under the present form of taxation: first, through corporation; second, through his dividends.

Trusting your amendment will be accepted and hoping to have the pleasure of seeing you in Reno this year.

With warmest personal regards.

Sincerely yours,

A. K. BOURNE.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I have noted your proposed amendment, H. R. 1, which would permit the plowing back into expansion and production a portion of the profits on the taxable basis. I am heartily in favor of your proposal and I think it is a really constructive proposal.

As far as our mining industry is concerned I have noted the various proposals for continued production subsidies and the mining industry is somewhat divided in respect to the merits of continued production subsidies. I want you to know that in principle I am opposed to continued production subsidies as I do not think it fits in with our true American way of doing things. On the other hand, I am looking with some favor on proposals for assistance in exploration and it occurs to me that your proposed amendment is something along that line.

I have not had the opportunity to come to Washington for quite some time. I have been pretty well tied down on the job here and I have little time to spare. Whenever I do come east I will be certain to try and get in touch with you and I do hope that I will have an opportunity to have a little chat with you again.

With kindest personal regards.

DEAR SENATOR: It was certainly a pleasant surprise to read the paper last night with the article regarding your amendment relative to credit of 50 percent of profits for expansion of plant etc. As I have stated to you before, this is the real answer to the expansion of small business, and the only thing that will give rise to full employment during tough times. My only suggestion regarding your amendment is that it might be difficult for a business to complete the actual expansion within the tax year that the profits are made. It appears a provision for "carrying forward" the tax credit to the year following the high profit year would solve this objection, and give the businessman a chance to see his actual profits before embarking on an expansion program. This would also tend to level out construction during slack years.

I would appreciate hearing from you regarding the possibilities of passage for this amendment, and if it can be passed, when we could expect to be able to operate under it.

With kindest regards to yourself and staff, we are,

Sincerely yours,

DEAR PAT: The announcement of your legislation aiding small business was hailed here today with much enthusiasm.

Permitting credit for improvements and new equipment is the answer to most of the problems of small business when plant and equipment need repairs and replacements due to the war and which are almost out of the question with taxes taking the lion's share of current profits.

You are to be commended for the most helpful legislation that has been presented since the end of the war.

We are requesting the support of Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. MALONE in this important amendment.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: Thanks so much for your good letter of the 21st, forwarding to me a copy of the amendment to the pending tax bill, as well as the statement which you issued to the press concerning it.

More power to you and it is good Democrats like you who make some of us Republicans sit up and take notice.

It is my plan to be in Washington for the annual Chamber of Commerce meeting April 28 to May 1 and if I have a free moment and can catch you in I certainly would like to meet you personally.

Senator PAT MCCARRAN,

Washington, D. C.,

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of the 19th enclosing two amendments proposed by you to the pending tax bill received. These amendments are very interesting, particularly in the light of practices that are now being permitted with reference to nontaxable cooperatives that are in direct competition with small business.

We have always felt that there was no justification for the system of double taxation which applies in the taxing of corporate profits. It is certainly double taxation for the corporation to be taxed and then for the individual stockholders to be taxed on the dividends received by him.

Of course your suggested amendment with reference to permitting a portion of each year's profit to be turned back into expansion is exactly what the cooperative forms of business are doing. There is one feature, of course, that should be kept in mind, and that is the possibility of granting too many exemptions and thereby reducing the tax returns below necessary requirements. For this reason the Council has taken the attitude that taxes should be levied on the basis of equality in all competitive situations, leaving to the Congress the matter of determining just what the tax requirements may be.

Thanking you again for your letter and the interest you are showing in these matters.

Sincerely yours,

C. C. GILBERT,

DEAR MR. MCCARRAN: I have read with interest your proposal to give tax relief to small business through exhilarated depreciation on assets purchased for expansion. Frankly, it sounds too good to be true.

I have been in business for over 40 years and today have one of the largest sulphuric acid plants in the world, but must say that what was achieved over these years could not happen today. I have seen the American small business slowly but surely strangled and deprived of initiative. I have heard young men ask why should they make money when they could do nothing with it but pay taxes. This is to me a very serious matter, particularly when you recall that this great Nation was started by a group of young men who did not believe in excessive taxation.

Lower taxes on individuals also will bring us back to real hard work with a reason for working hard instead of so many wanting to get on the band wagon of tax collecting and tax spending.

With best personal wishes for your success in this matter, I am,

Yours very faithfully,

R. 1 to reduce individual income tax payments by amounts expended for capital expenditures up to $125,000, or 50 percent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefits of this subsection, whichever is the lesser.

It so happens I attended a luncheon meeting today of a small group of important business people, and the consensus of opinion of this group was that the proposal should result in a stimulus for the improvement of most every kind of plant and equipment, and I am sure that most of the associations I represent will support your bill in every possible manner.

DEAR SENATOR: I appreciate immensely your sending me copy of amendments to H. R. 1, which you propose to sponsor.

After reading your statement with reference to these amendments which you were also kind enough to send me, I wish to state that it is one of the most sensible (it is the only word I can think of that really expresses my opinion) bits of legislation which I have ever seen.

It is a fact that present taxation is strangling small businesses such as ours. Take for instance last year with us. We did better than we have ever done before, but we had to make very heavy investments in maintenance and in new machinery. We also have had to think of moving to larger quarters which will mean a terrific expense, and, what probably is most important, when paper production catches up with consumption we are going to take a nice beating on inventory, and there is no way that we can avoid it either. Yet, despite all of this we can make no provisions whatsoever for any of these things except to take a 10-percent depreciation annually on any new equipment which we buy. It hardly makes sense. The Government, of course, wants theirs in cash and when we're through we'll probably have to go to the bank and borrow to keep going.

From reading my history books and from my own personal experience in life, I feel quite certain that this country can only continue the tremendous progress which it has shown in the past if its hard-working citizens, especially those who take upon themselves the hardships of running businesses, especially small ones, are given the opportunity to do things. Present taxation stifles initiative. If you think it advisable I am going to write to other Senators and Congressmen regarding this matter. As a fairly good Republican, who now and then casts a Democratic vote, I wish to compliment you on your efforts in this matter, and wish you the very best of success.

Very truly yours,

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I wish to acknowledge your press release of April 16 with copies of two amendments to H. R. 1.

The proposed amendment dealing with double taxation certainly needs no comment. It is highly desirable especially to the mining industry to prevent the indefensible practice of double taxation at exorbitant rates. The second amendment having to do with capital expenditures is also highly desirable.

I do have one suggestion to make which would be of particular advantage in clarifying the situation as far as the mining industry is concerned. At the present time exploration and development prior to actual operation of a mining property has to be capitalized at the insistence of the Internal Revenue department. To the larger corporations who always have a net profit such capitalization of an unsuccessful venture makes little difference since when that unsuccessful venture is written off it can be charged against the profits of the year in which it is written off. To the smaller company it is manifestly unfair since they have little control as to when an unsuccessful venture must be written off and in many cases they are forced to write it off in a year in which there is no profit and consequently receive no tax deduction for this unsuccessful development work.

If in line 10 on the first page of this amendment after the word "business" the following words were inserted it would be of considerable assistance to the small and moderate-size operators: "including exploration or development of new mines or the extension of old mines."

I expect to be in Washington on May 6 as a member of the newly formed Nonferrous Metals Advisory Board of the Army and Navy Munitions Board and if I may I will drop by your office and discuss this with you.

Sincerely yours,

S. H. WILLISTON.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 29, 1947.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: The release issued by you on Wednesday, April 16, is a masterpiece in stating your position.

There is no doubt about paragraph 3 on the first page. The worst thing I have seen in the form of a tax bill was the one which, under Vinson, reduced taxes about $6,000,000,000 of which the corporations got the full advantage, leaving the private citizen at a distinct disadvantage. I do not know how anyone could have voted for that bill. Apparently those who did, did so thinking it would stimulate business. That seemed ridiculous to me as the demand was greater than supply, and still is, and why stimulate demand more.

The worst feature of it was that we reduced the receipts of the Government about 15 percent when we had not the least idea of what our expenditures were going to be. At that time, I took the position that no taxes should be reduced until we knew what our assets and obligations were, and until we took an inventory. But I do not want to go into that. I just want to say that the general purpose of your plan is good. I would rather do something of this kind than to reduce taxes in any other form.

On page 4, the second and third paragraphs are so true. The third paragraph is the one to which I referred above. No unincorporated business can get ahead. It is bad enough for a small incorporated business. That is the quarrel I had as regards the previous tax reduction—that the corporations got the benefit, placing the individual at a greater disadvantage than ever.

At present I am not in favor of reducing taxes but would prefer to follow HARRY BYRD, first in reducing expenditures and then getting some of the debt canceled. Canceling part of the debt and putting it in trade and commerce with such a plan as yours, will stimulate business, thus stimulating volume and bringing our economy more into balance.

We want to help ourselves and we want to help everybody else, but I do not see how we can do it unless we all get down to work. And by work I mean continuous effort, without any strikes or lay-offs. The increase in wages is not going to be any good to anybody unless it is worth more and it will not be worth more, but rather less, unless people work and produce more than they receive for their labors. That applies to everybody in every walk of life.

This is my first impression on reading your letter and I hasten to give it to you.

Sincerely yours,

BERNARD M. BARUCH.

Hon PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate Building,

DEAR SENATOR: A few days ago I received a letter from you enclosing an amendment to H. R. 1 in which you proposed to allow deduction for taxes to the individual where the corporation taxes have been paid on the dividends, and also a second amendment in which you propose to allow a deduction for capital expenditures in trade or business. The copies of these amendments were accompanied by a statement of what you propose to do, and why.

In your letter you say you would welcome comment and criticism. I want to thank you very much for this splendid and constructive effort to correct one of the most gross inequities in the entire tax situation. In a statement which accompanied these amendments you correctly state that under the present law a small businessman with an income of $50,000 pays out $25,137 or 50 percent of his profits, and a man with a $100,000 income pays out $63,541 or 64 percent, and so on. And you also point out that the corporation tax is 38 percent. I think you should have pointed out in addition what the effect would have been if the corporation earned a certain amount and then paid the corporation tax of 38 percent, and then in addition the individual paid the tax on the dividends after being paid, and also what the top-bracket rate was on the individual, and what percentage he would have to pay if he had earned any additional income. This information is, I believe, very enlightening, and I will give the figures below of what the total tax would have been under these two circumstances.

If a small businessman was incorporated and earned $80,500 he would then pay 38 percent tax, leaving him $50,000, and assuming that he receives a dividend of all this amount he would pay income taxes of $25,137 or slightly over 50 percent of the remainder, and he would have left slightly less than $25,000, or less than 31 percent of what had been earned, and the Government would have taken 69 percent of the earnings and left 31 percent with the individual who carried on the business. If another corporation earned $161,000 approximately, that would have left $100,000 after payment of corporation taxes, and assuming that all these were distributed as dividends, the tax would take $63,541, as you state, and that would leave the man who earned the money and took all the risk $36,459 net income out of $161,000 earnings, which is approximately 22½ percent. That is, the Government takes 77½ percent and leaves the businessman 22½ percent. Perhaps the worst feature of either of these instances is the fact that in the case of the man whose corporation earned $80,000, if the corporation earned any additional money and declared them as dividends, as stated above, he would have been in the 75 percent less 5 percent bracket, or about 71⅓ percent. The additional earnings would have been subject to this rate, which would leave him only 17.8 percent of the money that he earned over this figure, and the 82.2 percent would go to the Government. In the case of the individual whose corporation earned $161,000, and assuming again that all earnings were paid out in dividends, he would be in the 89 percent less 5 percent bracket, or about 84½ percent, so that if any additional dividends were declared he would have to pay 84½ percent to the Government and would be able to keep only 15½ percent.

I think any right-thinking man will agree that if an individual must pay from 80 to 85 percent of his total earnings to the Government in form of taxes, that there is absolutely no incentive left for any businessman to carry on a business, because the hope of gain is entirely gone. The businessman, of course, takes all the risk, does all the work, and if he earns anything from this enterprise, not only must he pay out all the taxes mentioned above, but when he dies estate taxes would take a large share of the remainder.

If we are to make a free-enterprise system work and have this Government continue as a democracy, we must of necessity enact tax laws that will at least give a reasonable incentive to the individual to produce the goods which make a prosperous democracy. You have probably already read in the papers where in the past year 1,800 small businesses have been absorbed by mergers and combined with large business. This is the only out for most small business, and unless tax laws are changed practically all small business will be forced to combine with big business in order to survive and retain even a portion of what the businessman has accumuated.

As you well know, the bulwark of democracy is small business, and when this has been eliminated and all business made into big business, then it will be but a small job for Communist- and Socialist-minded people to change our form of government from a democracy to a form of government similar to that of Russia or equally obnoxious. I heartily commend you for your effort to enact laws of this kind, and particularly the two that you have sent me, but frankly I am skeptical of the ability of right-thinking Congressmen and Senators like yourself to enact such good legislation, at least at this time.

Again thanking you for sending me copies of this legislation.

Very truly yours,

JOHN H. WILSON.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your recent note, enclosing the two proposed amendments to H. R. 1. I think that the plan for giving a stockholder the benefit by way of credit for taxes paid by the corporation is the best solution of avoiding double taxation on corporations and the stockholders, and I am in favor of it.

I also feel very strongly that a corporation should have an opportunity to accumulate a surplus with which to grow without being punished for so doing. In our history the corporations which have been successful and have survived were those that accumulated a surplus with which to expand, which surplus served as a protection in times of depression.

Respectfully,

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I have read with a good deal of interest the copies which you sent me wherein you are proposing two amendments to pending tax legislation. I was equally interested in perusing the attached explanatory statement in which you outline the workings as well as the advantages that would accrue to your second amendment if adopted.

I have no criticism whatsoever to offer in connection with these amendments. Both of your proposals would serve a very worthy purpose and could not fail to stimulate industry, expand invested capital, and ultimately increase tax receipts by the Government.

I take pleasure in expressing my hearty approval of your constructive efforts which would be mutually beneficial to the Government as well as to the taxpayer.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of May 3 is much appreciated. We believe with you that the making and adjusting of tariffs is a function belonging to Congress and that the minimum requirement should be that the Senate have the right to ratify or reject each reciprocal trade treaty.

You ask for our reaction to your amendment of H. R. 1 tax bill. It appears to be for the following purposes:

A. To stimulate commercial construction. This might be adverse to our veterans' housing priority.

B. To aid small business to grow by plowing back earnings. Corporations with ample finances can fully recover the cost of buildings and machinery through depreciation deductions over a period of years.

It seems to us that profits should be taxed once. We would be in favor of the English idea that corporate profits should not be taxed as such, provided they were promptly made taxable in the hands of the stockholders.

We realize your amendment is not limited to corporations, but our connection leads us to view all legislation from the corporation standpoint. We are happy that you and other clear-thinking old-timers are in the legislative branch of Government. It is typical of you to ask for opinions. We are confident that after you have received a good cross section of opinion, you will act for the best interests of the people.

These taxes are excessive, for anyone trying to build a business and liquidate his obligations, of which there are always too many. If you are successful it will be a great help to all such struggling concerns and I believe in the long run, to the country. These small firms, of which mine is one, are the ones that hold the line against depression if they can earn enough to keep going or create depression if they fail or are taxed to death.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I appreciate your letter of April 28, 1947, and will be glad to reaffirm, in any way that you suggest, my favorable impression of the amendment which you have proposed.

I suggested to Mr. Sourwine that from the standpoint of the Treasury it may not work out satisfactorily, as a large amount of otherwise taxable funds would be exempt in 1 year and there may also be opposition to the proposal from certain groups which might feel that small business was being given preferential consideration. However, I still feel that by allowing the proposed reduction in 1 year, instead of spreading it over a period of years by way of depreciation or amortization, small business would be given a much-needed help and encouragement desirable as a matter of broad public policy.

You may consider it advisable to clear this amendment with the Treasury Department before it goes before the Finance Committee.

Assuring you of my interest, and with kind personal regards,

Faithfully yours,

DEAR MR. MCCARRAN: I wish to thank you for your letter of April 17 in reference to amendments, H. R. 1, in two sections, in re taxation expenditures. It appears that you had a very good understanding of these situations, and in your statement of April 16 you have nicely clarified the reasons and needs for such amendments as proposed.

The project I handled in Nevada during the war was so badly handicapped that our effort was stymied to assist our Government in its war efforts.

Our Senators and Representatives should see to it that business is set free to carry on and accomplish, or else where are the taxes coming from to support Government activities? This idea of killing the goose that lays the golden egg is idiotic.

Some of the large corporations, who had attractive contracts at cost plus, no doubt made some money during the war period. However, it appears that we need these concerns as well as small ones.

Thanking you for your courtesy, and very kind regards,

Yours truly,

The Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This is in response to your letter enclosing copies of two amendments which you propose to the pending tax bill. They are both important and constructive.

Double taxation is obviously unfair, and acts as a deterrent to attracting equity capital to industry.

With respect to the amendment exempting a limited amount of capital expenditures from taxation, I believe you are on one that is extremely important. It may be difficult for Congress to appreciate, but industry, under present tax laws, actually is unable to accumulate capital fast enough to exploit new and useful products that have developed, or to tool for lowest cost production. Studies have been made which show that much of the machinery now in use should be replaced with modern equipment. Many plants should be rebuilt for streamline low-cost production. Rarely is a company able to satisfy the demands for capital expenditures recommended by its operating management. This is particularly true today, as a result of high building and tooling costs.

The capital expenditures of today make the jobs of tomorrow. A very high percentage of the people at work today are producing goods not known 47 years ago. Not only are jobs involved, but high wages as well. The more capital at the command of a worker, the greater his productivity, and the higher his wage can be. The Chinese coolie with a stick on his back gets a few cents a day because he can deliver but a few pounds a few miles. Compare his wage with that of the locomotive engineer who has great capital at his command.

I think it is particularly good that small industry be enocuraged by some such exemption. My feeling is that it should be at least $500,000. If our tax laws were such as to encourage industry, both large and small, to plow back a greater portion of earnings to improve plant and equipment and develop new products, it would be much in the interests of the American workingman.

Very truly yours,

J. H. COOLIDGE,
Vice President and Treasurer.

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I should like to address a few remarks to the pending amendment, which has been studied under the procedure that is followed in the Senate, in an effort to remove alleged discriminations resulting from the fact that certain States have a system of community-property rights, the States being commonly known as community-property States. So far as I know, the efforts heretofore made along this line have been directed to requiring taxpayers in community-property States to make single returns, and to taxing the incomes of husband and wife as though there were no difference in the ownership of property or income.

Naturally, those of us from the community-property States have resisted such efforts, because they were destructive of the system of property rights long established in our different States, which we believe to be within the authority of the several States to establish.

The pending amendment approaches the question from a different angle; it attempts to give husband and wife in non-community-property States the privilege of filing separate returns, to be taxed upon such separate returns the same as are those of us within the community-property States. When it was first suggested to me, I was inclined to support the amendment because, as I have frequently said, there has been no desire on my part, and so far as I know, no desire on the part of any other person from a community-property State, to secure advantage or preference over the citizens of other States. We believe in our system of property rights; we think it a good one; we think it ought to be adopted by other States. We resist any attempt to invade the right of our State to divide property between husband and wife according to the laws of the State. But, Mr. President, after considering the amendment and discovering that it has no relationship whatever to the ownership of property, but merely establishes a new rule by which husband and wife may have separate incomes and make separate income-tax returns without regard to ownership, it seems to me, that it proposes a new and, to me, unheard of principle of taxation. The fundamental principle of taxation is that it should be based upon the ownership of property and the ownership of income. Under the proposed amendment, no consideration whatever is given to ownership. Under it, the non-community-property State would be given every so-called advantage now enjoyed by the community-property States, and would place upon the non-community-property States none of the burdens whatever that rest upon citizens of the community-property States. It would therefore give them all the benefits, without imposing upon them any of the burdens.

I am quite sure that those who sponsor the amendment and who argue for it do not want to secure a preference or an advantage over the community-property States; but, undoubtedly, that would be the result.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator contend that community-property States do not now possess some advantage in the way of taxation over non-community-property States?

Mr. HATCH. I have not said that, Mr. President, and I would not say that, because there is an advantage to the extent that those of us residing in community-property States pay less taxes, because incomes are divided and separate returns are made. But that is based upon the ownership of property; and that is what I am saying. I do not mean to say that every other State in the Union should amend its laws to conform exactly to ours; not at all. I think an amendment to reach the preference or advantage held by those in the community-property States can be worded so that other States will have all the advantages which we enjoy, based upon the ownership of property and income, as in community-property States.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator, of course, knows that in the pending bill an exemption of $1,000 is allowed for husband and wife over 65 years of age. The question of property is not involved in such a proposal.

Mr. HATCH. That is an exemption from taxation.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. I have said that the basis of all taxation, practically from the beginning, has been the ownership of property and the ownership of income.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct, but many an individual who is granted a tremendous exemption, and whose exemption involves no property whatever, is taxed.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, that is in large part a personal exemption, as in the case of a single man.

Mr. LUCAS. That is exactly what is being attempted here.

Mr. HATCH. If it were put on the basis of granting an exemption, that would raise another question.

Mr. LUCAS. That is practically the effect.

Mr. HATCH. That is not the thought. Under the amendment, husband and wife can divide their income, without regard to the ownership of the money, without any of the corresponding burdens that go with it. I have prepared a bill, which I shall not introduce now, but which I hope may be considered by the committee at the proper time, which would do away with the advantage possessed by the community-property States, and which would give to the non-community-property States the same rights as those which we possess, by permitting the division of ownership and income, as authorized by the law in the community-property States. That might be done by simple contract. It could be provided that the contract would have to be recognized by the taxing authorities of the Federal Government, provided only that it was valid and legal according to the laws of the State in which it was made. Taxation would then be based upon ownership of income, just as in community-property States. In addition to putting us all on an equal basis, I have in mind that the proposed bill would get rid of another inequity, which I think is the worst of all and which is suffered by us who live in the community-property States. Under our laws, as I have frequently said, and as everyone knows, the property acquired by husband and wife during marriage is owned by both husband and wife in equal parts. The wife is the absolute owner of one-half of the property that is acquired by their joint efforts during marriage. But although the property, which the wife would take upon the death of her husband, is her own property, and does not pass by inheritance, but is set apart for her because it is her separate estate, notwithstanding that the title has been in her and is in her, the Federal Government, under a law passed in 1942, requires her to pay an inheritance tax upon her own property, and that, Mr. President, I submit, was never before conceived in the history of taxation.

We want that inequity removed. We would like to have the whole question considered by the Finance Committee at one time and all these inequities corrected as fully and as nearly as possible, so that we may all be placed on as equal and fair a basis as possible.

That is all I have to say on this proposal. I shall not discuss the bill which, as I said, has been drawn, but I do not want Senators from the non-community-property States to feel that we from the community-property States desire any advantage whatever. We are perfectly willing to join them in writing a law based upon ownership of income and ownership of property which will give them every right we have, but we would also ask at the same time that the inequities which we suffer under existing laws be removed.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question of the Senator from New Mexico, because I understand the Senator's State is what might be called a community-property State.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. My State is not a community-property State; we do not have community-property laws in Iowa. The question I wish to ask the Senator is this: Under the community-property law and under the tax approach of the Internal Revenue Bureau to taxation of property accruing to a family, why does the Internal Revenue Bureau permit division of income?

Mr. HATCH. Because the property is owned, as I have said, in equal parts by the husband and wife, and that is a requirement of our State law. I think the Internal Revenue Bureau has gone too far in that it has frowned upon and has stopped the making of contracts between husband and wife which were voluntarily entered into, because the Bureau said they were fraudulent, and entered into in order to avoid the tax laws.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, the Senator is coming to the heart of the point I wanted to ask him about. The Internal Revenue Bureau says that the law of the Senator's State recognizes the community ownership of property which, roughly, might mean a 50–50 division of the property.

Mr. HATCH. It is not roughly. That is the way it is. That statement of 50–50 is accurate.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. And the State taxes on the basis of the ownership of half by the wife and half by the husband. The Bureau recognizes the law of the State of New Mexico on that point. Is that not true?

Mr. HATCH. That is true.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. And the Bureau says that the title and ownership of that 50 percent in each stems from the law of New Mexico?

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. In my State, I will say to the Senator, we do not have specific community-property laws, but, since the State was established, and even in its Territorial days, and coming from ancient law, partnerships have been recognized. The statutes of our State recognize the right to partnership ownership, they recognize the right, if you please, of gifts, and recognize the validity of gifts. They recognize the vesting of title as the result of a gift just the same as the result of a purchase for intrinsic value of some kind. Yet the Bureau of Internal Revenue refuses absolutely to recognize the validity of the transfer of property rights by gift within a family when a partnership is set up by a device which is completely legal and completely proper under our State law.

Now I ask the Senator whether or not he can reconcile the two positions taken by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, the one, when it accedes or agrees to the State law provisions, and the other when it refuses to recognize completely valid and sound State laws?

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that he probably did not hear all I had to say previously.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I am sorry I was not present during the whole of the Senator's discussion.

Mr. HATCH. I discussed a proposal which would completely do away with the objection the Senator from Iowa has raised. No, I shall not at all attempt to reconcile the positions taken by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. I think any partnership between a husband and wife which is valid within the laws of the State in which it is made, and which is not manifestly simply a fraudulent scheme to avoid taxation, is perfectly proper and legal. I think the Internal Revenue Bureau should recognize such a partnership and give it just as much sanctity as is given to it under our law in New Mexico.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Providing such an arrangement is legally sound and proper within the jurisdiction in which it is entered into.

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I am willing to join him in the writing of a proper law which would bring such a condition about.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I may say to the Senator from New Mexico that I have an amendment at the desk which I may call up, dealing with that very point.

Mr. HATCH. I think, however, as I have previously said, and as the Senator from Colorado has been arguing constantly, that we should all leave these matters to the committees of the House and the Senate. The Senator from Colorado has steadfastly and forthrightly stated here that his committee desires to correct these so-called inequities. They do not want to do so in the pending bill, and I shall support the Senator from Colorado in that position. But I would certainly have no objection to the proposal which the Senator from Iowa has suggested when it is finally perfected.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I want to agree heartily with the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Colorado, in the position he takes that the matter under discussion cannot be properly handled at this time under the pressure which is being exerted and in view of the tremendous loss of revenue which the pending amendment would entail, a loss $800,000,000 greater than under the bill without the amendment.

I realize that sooner or later we are going to have to face the issue of community property, which is raised from time to time; but, Mr. President, I become a little irritated and annoyed at times by some of the representatives from non-community-property States who point to community-property States as if we were not contributing our fair share, and as if we were using the community-property law as a device to avoid the payment of taxes. My State and other community-property States adopted the community-property system at a time when we were under no pressure to avoid income taxes, when we had no threat of income taxes. We adopted it in my State more than 100 years ago, before income taxes were levied by the Federal Government, before we ever dreamed of income taxes, long before the Senator from Illinois was under pressure from back home to bring his State within the blessings of the community-property laws without adopting the community-property system.

Much has been said about changing the laws. There is not a State in the Union which, if it willed so to do, could not adopt community-property laws; and if it did it would receive the same advantages which the people of Texas and of the other community-property States enjoy. I think that is a complete answer to the charge that we are benefiting by this law and are not paying our share.

This principle came down to us from Spain. It is based upon the conception that a man and his wife are in fact partners—not partners on paper, not theoretical partners only when they pay their taxes. There is no real partnership involved in the so-called tax partnership arrangement.

In the old common-law States, if it were not for a change in the law, husbands could still beat their wives, provided the switch was no bigger than a man's thumb. That was a part of the common law of England in years past. Women still occupy a subordinate position when it comes to property, just as they did in the olden days. We believe that women are entitled to equality in property and earnings. Under our law, every dollar of income which either a man or his wife possesses, whether from separate property owned by either of them before they were married, or from earnings after they were married, is community property, and the wife owns half of it—not because the husband gives her $5 on Saturday night to pay the grocery bill for the next week, as is the case in some of the States which are complaining. In my State she owns it in her own right. It is hers. The income-tax collector says, "Where did you get this income?" The husband and wife reply, "We got it from our accumulated property."

Mr. President, why does the law of Texas and other community-property States recognize the right of the wife? Because we place the wife upon an equality—not a social equality only, not a Saturday-night equality for the payment of next week's grocery bill, but an equality to share in the joint earnings of the husband and wife. That is the only kind of real, substantial equality that exists in a world like this.

Why should not the wife have a share in the joint earnings of husband and wife? She marries a man at the altar, and they pledge fidelity and loyalty. She bears his children. She presides over his home. Many wives do the washing and cooking and slaving in the kitchen. The husband is out making money, or supposedly trying to make money. They accumulate a little money. Is not the wife entitled to half of it? Does not she make a contribution to the union? Ought not she to be entitled to something more than her board and clothes?

We are members of the United Nations. We pass resolutions about giving the Hottentots equal rights. We want the natives of the Pacific islands to have equality of rights. We want them all to have the "four freedoms"; but here at home, in many of the States we do not treat women on the basis of equality with men. I cannot understand why the women of this country, with all their clubs and other women's organizations which are so concerned about the right to vote, and which are interested in the equal-rights amendment, have not made a drive in the non-community-property States for the right to share in the earnings of marriage. Women share in the raising of children. Both husband and wife cooperate to raise a family, but they do not share equally in the property accumulated as a result of the marriage. A man and his wife may have six children. They each have a half interest in each child, but they do not have a half interest in the income or in the money which goes to support the children.

In most of the non-community-property States when the husband dies the wife gets a third interest in the personal property. I do not know that that is true in all the States. In some States she gets a third interest in the real estate for life. I am not familiar with the laws of all the non-community-property States. However, she does not get equality. She does not get half.

In the committee the other day someone said, "If the wife earns any money it is hers." Yes; if she can make any money cooking hot biscuits for the old man, she gets the benefit of it. It is hers. Whatever profits come in, the old man puts them in his pocket and they stay there until he dies. Then the wife gets a third of the real estate for life, and a third of the personal property outright. So the only way she can win is for the old man to die.

Under our law, Mr. President, one-half of his earnings belongs to the wife—not as a gift, not as a charity, but as an absolute legal right. It is hers. Consequently, when the income-tax law was enacted the Internal Revenue Department undertook to tax community-property States, just as it undertook to tax non-community-property States, and I paid taxes under that construction of the law. Later on—I do not know how it arose, whether by court decision or by consultation with their counsel—the Treasury arrived at the conclusion that it was wrong; that when they undertake to ascertain income from property the title to the property is what governs. Under this law, if they want to assess taxes on the Senator from Oklahoma, for instance, they would not assess him taxes on the property of his neighbor, John Jones, on the same street. They would assess taxes only on the basis of income from property owned by the Senator from Oklahoma, and no one else. Suppose they undertake to assess income on a son of the family who owns a house and lot, and they say, "Whose property is this? Where did you get this income?" He says, "It came from a house and lot that I own. It is mine. The old man has nothing to say about it; it is not his. You cannot tax my father on income from property which I own in my own right." Is not that sound?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THYE in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The situation which the Senator has cited is exactly what is happening in my State. The Internal Revenue Bureau is taxing income from property which is legitimately and legally owned by others than the taxpayers, and, of course, complaint is being made about it. They are refusing to recognize the legality of laws of my State and in other States and they elect to charge the head of the family, regardless of whether he has the ownership of the property or whether the wife has title to the property. They refuse to recognize our law, although it is completely sound——

Mr. CONNALLY. I heard with a great deal of interest the statement of the Senator before the committee, and I marvel if that is the case, why the State does not adopt a community-property system. Why not give the wife half the property? She is entitled to half the earnings.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The matter which I was discussing before the committee went a little further than purely community property. It went to the question of the law of contract, the law of gift, and the transfer of title, which has been recognized indefinitely as perfectly proper.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that the Treasury raised a question as to the good faith of a great many cases. I think they recognize in Iowa, do they not, some partnerships which consist of the husband and wife? If they are both active in the business or have any direction of the business the Treasury recognize them, do they not?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. They recognize some of them if the wife works from 8 to 10 hours a day in the partnership.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think they set any particular hours, but the partnership status is recognized if the partners are active in the business.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I find myself in agreement with the Senator's argument of a few moments ago in which he stated that the wife cooks for the family, takes care of the baby, runs the home, and certainly is morally entitled to a share of the earnings. Why in the world should the Internal Revenue Bureau arrogate to itself the right to say that because a wife does not spend all her time, or a substantial part of her time, behind the counter selling dress goods, or keeping books in the office, she cannot receive any benefits from ownership of property which has been vested in her? I am unable to draw a distinction.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not here to defend the Treasury in all their rulings. I very frequently disagree with them, but I still must submit to the Senator that he admits that in his State where the partners participate in the business and take an active part the partnership is recognized. The Treasury contended that the cases in which they were interested were those in which they believed that the wife had nothing to do with the management or direction of the partnership. But I am not defending that position. I realize, as I stated when I started these remarks, that we shall have to face this question sooner or later. I want to face it when we are prepared to go into all the readjustments of all the taxes, because there is a repercussion. If we consider this tax and change that tax, there is a relationship with other taxes which is involved. I want to wait until we are prepared to review the whole tax structure. Leading people in my State have a plan which would help the Senator in connection with the complaint he made, whereby permission would be given a man and wife to make contracts in any State and to divide their income and pay taxes on the same basis that applies to community-property States. I have sense enough to know that this question is one which we cannot avoid and which we will have to meet.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I wanted to emphasize the fact, since we are crying so much about the wives doing the cooking and not getting anything out of it, and that some of our States have passed community-property laws, that we still carry through a discrimination. In my State if a husband wants to give half of his property to his wife, under the laws of the State, she still cannot stay home and look after those tender duties to which the Senator has referred. The Treasury takes the extra dollars from her in spite of the fact that the State law is complied with and that she is a legal owner under the State law. It cannot be justified any way on earth. There is a Federal discrimination against taxpayers who have to bear the burden and the cost of the Federal Government, whatever the property system is. It simply does not measure up to the standards of justice and equity. Where the Federal Government is doing the taxing it ought to tax on an equal basis.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that I do not know of any law of my State that prohibits a husband from giving his wife property.

Mr. McCLELLAN. But in Arkansas, although the gift is made under the law, and husband and wife are half-owners, they still are penalized, because the Revenue Bureau does not recognize their status and refuses to let them pay taxes on the same basis as that upon which the Senator's constituents pay.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator contend that in Arkansas if a wife has separate property which she owned before her marriage——

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is not at issue at the moment.

Mr. CONNALLY. All right. I will not ask it.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator is getting away from the real question.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator introduced the proposition that under the law a husband could not give his wife property, and I said that I knew of no law in my State to that effect.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I said he could give it and did give it, but it was not recognized by the Revenue Bureau.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not familiar with all the Revenue Bureau's rulings.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I made no attack on the community-property States. I am not asking them to change the law; I am only asking that the Congress, by the enactment of a law, make it possible for us to compel the Revenue Department and the Government to do equity and justice between citizens of this Nation.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know of nothing in the internal-revenue laws that discriminates between members of any particular group or class. I am not attacking the non-community-property States. It is their business to have their own laws and have them respected. The question I raised had reference to property belonging to a certain individual on which he pays an income tax on what he derives from that property. I tried to make that clear in the case of the son to whom I referred as John Jones. The old man lives across the street. His son cannot be made to pay a tax on the income of the father, nor the father on the income of the son. They stand upon the basis of title and ownership.

Mr. President, I am not asking any of the non-community-property States to adopt a community-property system. I think it would perhaps be wise if they should; but that is their business. I am not in favor of using the power of the Federal Government to compel them to do that.

In Texas we recognize the equality of women. We are living in modern times; we are living in the twentieth century. We are not living under the conditions of three or four centuries ago. There was a time when women were practically serfs. We have passed that point. Under our laws we want to give them equality in the ownership of property and in the comforts and joys of life. That is all we ask. That is all we do. We do it by giving them title—not the use of it, not the right to touch it but to get nothing from it, but the right to own half the community property. That law has been on our statute books and in our constitution for 100 years; yet people talk about the law as a device to avoid taxes. Santa Anna had hardly gotten out of Texas before we adopted this system of giving the women joint property rights to the earnings after marriage. Of course, what the husband had before the marriage remains the husband's separate property, and what the wife possessed before the marriage remains the wife's separate property.

Mr. President, if we wish to provide equity we have an opportunity to do so now. But we cannot have our cake and eat it, too.

Mr. President, I have nothing further to say on this matter. This is a question which we shall have to face, and I am prepared to face it. But I wish to face it at a time when we are revising the whole tax structure. I do not wish to undertake it now. As has been pointed out heretofore, the Federal Government, largely because it was piqued at the income taxes derived from community-property States, in 1942 passed a law which was manifestly unjust. It provided that in the community-property States if the man and wife had $100,000 worth of community property, each one owning half, if the husband died, the wife would have to pay an inheritance or estate tax on the entire $100,000 worth of property—which is not right and not sound—and, further, that when the wife died thereafter, her estate would have to pay another tax on what she was possessed of at the time of her death. I want that law revised, when we come to revising the entire tax structure. If we are going to express ourselves with respect to the community-property-income feature, I wish to have the community-property inheritance or estate tax also revised or modified.

So, Mr. President, what I have said today has been simply for the purpose of placing in the RECORD a defense of the community-property system. It was a noble system which was conceived in a high spirit and in a spirit of equality before the law and equality before the altar and equality of contribution to the marriage relation, providing that the earnings of the marriage relation should belong as much to the wife as to the husband.

I wished to express our dissent from the view which is expressed now and then by the residents of non-community-property States, namely, that the community-property States are using a device or a pretext to avoid the payment of income taxes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the question of community property and the taxation involved has been before the Congress for many years in various forms. It now comes before us in a slightly different form. It has been a subject of study and concern by those of us who represent the community-property States. If the Senator from Arkansas will consider the history of his State—as undoubtedly he has, although this particular phase may not have been drawn to his attention—he will find that originally his State was also a community-property State; in other words, it was carved out of the territory which was acquired from Mexico, just as Louisiana was carved out of the territory which was acquired from France. The civil law of France applied to Louisiana, and the civil law of Spain prevailed in the territory which was acquired from Spain. My own State and the States of New Mexico, Arizona, Idaho, and California were carved out of the territory which we acquired from Mexico. When the United States acquired that territory, it carried with it the civil law which prevailed in Mexico, which had been given to Mexico by Spain.

Many of the States which were carved out of that territory saw fit to repudiate the civil law. Iowa is one of the States which repudiated the civil law and set up the common law as the basic law, thereby repudiating some of the privileges and many of the conditions which prevailed under the civil law. That fact probably accounts for some of the actions of the Bureau of Internal Revenue in construing certain laws in certain States.

Mr. President, the importance of this matter is such that some of us have spent considerable time, in times past, in looking into the history of these differences which occur among the respective States.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to conclude my remarks, and then I shall yield.

Mr. President, some years ago—to wit, in 1937—at a time when the Honorable Fred Vinson, now Mr. Chief Justice Vinson, was chairman of the Ways and Means Subcommittee of the House of Representatives, and when the subject of community property was uppermost in the minds of Members of Congress, it was my privilege to address to him a letter on this subject, going briefly into the history of community property. That letter dealt with the history of the law, as it came over in the process of territorial acquisition to the several States which now have community-property laws. Texas is one; Mississippi is another; Florida is another. Louisiana retained the community property law from the civil law which came down from the Code Napoleon.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a copy of my letter to the Honorable Fred M. Vinson, now Mr. Chief Justice Vinson, bearing on the subject of the history of community property and why the community-property law exists in several of the States.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., September 15, 1937.

Hon. FRED M. VINSON,
Chairman of Subcommittee,
Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CHAIRMAN VINSON: On some occasions in the past the press has carried expressions indicating that there are those in your committee and elsewhere who might be of the opinion that the citizens of community-property States were chargeable with a so-called loop-hole through which taxes in these States might be escaped. I understand that your subcommittee may investigate the matter of income taxes in community-property States, and I desire to submit to you some of my views on the subject, resisting as I do any change of policy.

First, may I say that Nevada is one of the community-property States, the others being Louisiana, Arizona, California, Texas, Idaho, New Mexico, and Washington.

Under the community-property law either spouse in a martial status has a vested property right in all of the community property including the income therefrom, likewise in the salary or wages of either husband or wife.

The question involved in community property in the United States is both historic and statutory in its origin. The historical side of this question is most interesting and students of the subject who have given us the benefit of their study and writings have thrown much light and clarification on the matter.

A cursory reading of the history would lead one to believe that the community-property law was of Spanish origin, but a more persistent study leads one to the conclusion that the law, as we know it in the Western World, is of Germanic origin and is the result of the evolution of early Germanic customs and forms into laws regulating family relations. These customs and laws, according to our best authorities, were carried into Spain by tribal and Visigothic movements in the early Christian centuries, and were implanted in the Spanish Peninsula on the occasion of the conquest of that part of Europe.

We find the early community-property law emphatically set out in the Code of Euric as the same was made, through conquest of territory, the law of early Spain; and we find this early code followed by the Spanish law or code called Fuero Juzgo. The law itself took on various forms during the Spanish succession but at no time did it lose its original nature nor its original method of operation. For instance, we find the law set out in 1506 in a Spanish codification entitled "Cortes of Toro." Another code promulgated by Philip II in 1567 and another put forth by Charles II of Spain in 1680, each in turn carried the emphatic expression "law of community property" as we now term it, which laws and codes, in general terms, made clear distinction between the property of the husband, the property of the wife, and property acquired or accumulated by the community coverture.

Briefly stated, the law of Spain, as we find it passing down through its history, became the law of the Spanish territory in the Western World. The code called the Cortes of Toro published in 1506, and the code "Nueva Recopilacion" of 1567, and the code of 1680 published by Charles II of Spain and styled "Recopilacion de Indies," all made emphatic pronouncements that in the territories under the Spanish flag the laws of Castile must be observed. It was in this way that the civil law of Spain became a part of the law of Spanish America; and hence the law governing conjugal property or, as we term it, community property, became the law of Mexico and remained so, with varying local changes, until the independence of Mexico was achieved in 1821.

The spirit of the community-property law, as it was recognized in Mexico, is fairly stated in a publication having a date as late as 1888, in which the Mexican commentator expresses himself thus (translation):

"There being common to both consorts the hardships and sufferings which life brings with it, and together equally dividing the sacrifices and efforts necessary to overcome them, it is just and natural that there be likewise common the profits which may come to the consorts, basing itself solely on this, without regard to the greater or less wealth which either of the consorts may bring to the marriage."

I will not attempt to burden you with the distinction that will be found in organic and statutory laws of the respective States of the Union, as for instance the law of Louisiana may differ from the law of California, each being community-property States, the former having both French and Spanish flavor; and in turn the law of Washington may differ from that of other States, but in essentials they take their spirit from the same source. My purpose in dealing primarily with the history of the law of community property is to emphasize to you and to your committee that the States in which community-property law exists, acquired that law from the original sovereignty controlling the territory out of which these States were respectively formed, or from the civil law, as distinguished from the common law. For example, I respectfully draw your attention to the history of the law of the State of Texas, in which we find the rule of community property prevailing, because when Texas became independent from Mexico and came into the United States, that State retained her laws of community property while at the same time she adopted the common law in almost every other respect.

The Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, closing the Mexican War, brought to the United States the territory now embraced within the States of New Mexico, Arizona, California, Idaho, and Nevada, in all of which territory and the States carved out of the same, the law of community property, as it had prevailed under the rule of Mexico, and as the same had been transmitted to Mexico by the parent country, Spain, was retained. In nearly every one of these States, when they became States, the common law was adopted, but notwithstanding the adoption of the common law, the wife's status in respect to matrimonial property was excluded and her rights in such property as they existed under the Spanish and Mexican domination were recognized, retained, and protected. In this respect I would draw your attention to the decisions of the Supreme Court in the case of Botiller v. Dominquez (130 U. S. 238); LaTourette v. LaTourette (15 Ariz. 200); and Blum v. Wardell (270 Fed. 309).

It might be at the hazard of your patience were I to go into the detail of the law applicable to the several States in which the community-property law exists. Suffice it to say that in Louisiana, by reason of its history, the territory first being under French dominance, later under Spanish and still later under French dominance, we find the Code Napoleon, so styled, combined with the Spanish codes and again modified by statutory provision when the State became a part of the Union. Nevertheless, we find the community-property law existent.

In Texas and California, the territory being originally a part of the territory of Mexico, we find the community system of Spain and Mexico carried to a great extent into the organic law and provisions for its operation made by statutory enactment. In the States of New Mexico, Arizona, and Nevada the community-property law exists almost in its purity as it existed under the Mexican sovereignty.

A decision rendered by the Supreme Court of the State of California entitled: "In re Moffitt's Estate," has been almost unanimously repudiated not only by the very court that rendered it, but by other courts and commentators as well (the California courts were in complete disruption due to the catastrophe of fire and earthquake). There the court made the following startling announcement:

"That the interest of the wife in the community property during the lifetime of her husband is only an expectancy, and that on his death she takes it as an heir."

This decision was repudiated by the courts of California in a later case of Stewart v. Stewart (249 Pac. 197). The act of the Legislature of California might also be construed as repudiation.

The Supreme Court of Nevada—the State I represent—refused to follow the Moffitt case when it rendered the decision in the matter of the Estate of Warren Williams, which decision is now the ruling case in that jurisdiction, and to which I hereafter refer.

The States of Florida, Missouri, Arkansas, Iowa, and Mississippi, in which either the Spanish community-property law or the French community-property law originally prevailed, have adopted the common law. Louisiana, however, retains to this day the spirit of the Spanish law modified by the Code Napoleon.

Nevada, like other Western States, retained the spirit of the Spanish law as the same prevailed when the territory was ceded to the United States, and we find in the constitution of Nevada the provision:

"All property, both real and personal, of the wife, owned or claimed by her before marriage, and that acquired afterward by gift, devise, or descent, shall be her separate property; and laws shall be passed more clearly defining the rights of the wife in relation, as well to her separate property, as to that held in common with her husband. Laws shall also be passed providing for the registration of the wife's separate property."

The statutes of Nevada carry out the full spirit and intent of the organic law and the full spirit and intent of the law of community property, as the same existed in the territory embraced within the confines of the State when that territory was a part of the Mexican possessions.

As a member of the court of last resort of the State of Nevada, it was my privilege to make a special study of this subject and to write the opinion and decision of that court in the matter of the Estate of Warren W. Williams, Deceased (40 Nev. 241), and in that opinion the court dwelt at length with the subject of community property, its nature and existence. This opinion took into consideration the history of the law of community property and the constitutional and statutory provisions of the State; and there we took occasion to express:

"From all our statutory enactments bearing upon the subject of the relation of husband and wife, and especially from those having to do with the acquisition, retention, and disposition of community property, we are unable to arrive at a conclusion that the constitution framers and the legislature, in establishing the community system and in promulgating the laws defining the rights of husband and wife as to property thus held, intended other than that the wife should have an interest in the property acquired by the joint efforts of the community, which interest, while it should remain in a sense indistinguishable during the existence of the community, was nevertheless a property interest of which she was, at all times, possessed."

And again we said:

"It may, we think, be asserted, supported by the great weight of authority, that the interest of the wife in the community property and her title thereto, is no less than that held by the husband, and is such a title in the wife as not to be regarded as a mere expectancy."

The Attorney General in response to the inquiry of the Department concluded as to all community-property States, including Arizona, Louisiana, Washington, Idaho, New Mexico, and Nevada, that "The husband and wife domiciled therein, in rendering separate income tax returns, may each report as gross income, one-half of the income which, under the laws of the respective States, becomes simultaneously with its receipt, community property." (Opinion of Attorney General (32 P. 435).)

The Supreme Court of the United States has announced the rule that where the State decisions have interpreted State laws governing property or controlling relations that are essentially of a domestic and State nature, such decisions will be followed if possible. (Warburton v. White (176 U. S. 484).)

It is scarcely necessary for me to draw your attention to the ruling of the Internal Revenue Department which is, as I understand it, in substance that the rule of separate returns by husband and wife as to community-property earnings, is to be applied as the law is construed by the courts of last resort of the respective community-property States.

In the case of Poe v. Seabury (282 U. S. 101), Mr. Justice Roberts, speaking for the Supreme Court as to the right of the husband and wife to make separate returns under the community-property law of Washington, said: "* * * it must suffice to say that it is clear the wife has in Washington a vested property right in the community property, equal with that of her husband, and in the income of the community, including salaries or wages of either husband or wife, or both."

I trust that I will not have taxed your patience in this rather lengthy communication, but that by expressing myself as I have here, I may emphasize the fact that any attempt on the part of Congress to interfere with the present rule permitting husband and wife to make separate tax returns each reflecting one-half of the community income, will be resisted by everything within my power, and I know that in this I will be joined by the other community-property States.

If the community-property States of the Union see fit to extend to married women more definite and certain rights in the earnings and accumulations of the community effort, certainly it is not the part of justice and fair play that these States, while extending these rights to their citizens, shall be punished therefor, or compelled to abandon their laws, the policy of which is even older than the States, themselves, nor that the Federal Government shall construe the law other than as the same has been construed by the Courts of last resort of those respective States and by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In conclusion:

The law of community property came to the States as a part of the law of the land before they were States.

The law of community property was written into the organic law of the States, approved by Congress when the States were admitted into the Union.

The legislatures of the States enacted laws carrying out the spirit of the law as it had existed and as their constitutions pronounced.

The courts of the States have applied and construed the law of community property in keeping with the spirit of its fundamental principle.

The Supreme Court of the United States has recognized the fundamentals and laws of the States and has repronounced the doctrine as it was in the beginning.

Under the community-property law the husband and wife respectively have and hold each a vested right in and to one-half of the property acquired by community effort and the accretions thereof, including wages and salaries—this is a legal fact, not a fiction.

Under the community-property law and in community-property States the husband and the wife may each file returns reflecting as taxable income one-half of the whole income of the community established by their marital status.

Any attempt on the part of Congress to change this condition as crystallized into the laws of the respective States would be a discrimination and otherwise unconstitutional.

Thanking you for your courtesy in this matter, I am,

Sincerely yours,

PAT MCCARRAN,

NOTE.—The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Hoeper v. the Tax Commission (284 U. S. 206) held in no uncertain terms that a tax based on an enforced joint return is illegal, arbitrary, and capricious. In this decision it will be noted that the Court, although dealing with the statute of the State of Wisconsin, did not hesitate to quote the case of Knowland v. Moore (187 U. S. 41), which in turn dealt directly with a Federal statute.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from Iowa, and I apologize for having kept him waiting this long.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I merely wished to ask the Senator whether he draws a distinction between the power of the civil law as a precedent, and the power of the statute law and, also, the power of the common law as a precedent.

Mr. McCARRAN. I draw the distinction in a certain way. Let me say that after having listened to the colloquy between the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] this thought came to my mind, and it may be worthy of attention: The State of Iowa repudiated the civil law when it set up its organic law. It then adopted the common law. Thereafter, whether by statute or otherwise, Iowa set up a means by which separate income returns might be made or by which separate laws might prevail as to the ownership of property by the wife and the ownership of property by the husband. But the founders of the organic law of the State of Iowa thus repudiated the civil law, which was basic to the territory out of which Iowa was carved. That being true, it seems to me that the claim of the State of Iowa for rights which exist under community-property States is not well founded. It may be that that argument is rather theoretical.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. If the Senator will yield, I will say that I have as yet made no claim for any rights under community-property law, nor have I spoken, up to this point, at least, for the same recognition for my State as that accorded other States under the theory of community-property allowances in those States. What I am saying to the Senator is that partnership devices are at least as old as community-property law devices under the civil law. Partnership devices have been recognized as an integral part of the method of doing business, and the passing of a business from father to son, since we have had organized economic business.

Mr. McCARRAN. When the Senator uses the term "devices" he uses the correct term.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I say that a corporation is a device. Any kind of an organization for the transaction of business can be called a device.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I see no reason why the Bureau of Internal Revenue can call one thing fish and another fowl, why the Bureau of Internal Revenue justifies itself by saying, "We will recognize these rights as established by the law of one State, and we will not recognize these devices for doing business, or for handling incomes, as recognized by the law of another State," in other words, a partnership on one side, and a community-property situation on the other.

Mr. McCARRAN. Except for this consideration—and it may be conjectural again, and I think it is—that the Senator's State repudiated the very law that would have given citizens of that State the right to have community property. His State repudiated the civil law, which prevailed in the territory from which the State was carved.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. While the Senator may in theory, and antiquity, have some foundation for saying that we repudiated the civil law——

Mr. McCARRAN. It is history.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I think when Iowa was in the Wisconsin territory and the Michigan territory there were not enough people there to know the distinction between the civil law and the common law, and it was a matter that was handled for them.

Mr. McCARRAN. That may be true.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. It makes little difference, in fact, it makes no difference, as I see it. It is a question of principle, as to whether or not operations which are perfectly legal—and I am assuming the legality; I am not assuming fraud or fraudulent activities, or intention to violate the law—it is a question whether or not activities which are perfectly legal in the operation of a business in one State are refused recognition by the policy determination of a department here, which, I submit, has later been given great aid and comfort by a couple of Supreme Court decisions; while in another State, on the theory that it is the law of that State, and a part of its basic law, the Department recognize that law for tax purposes, with consequent discrimination against the other State. As I have said, up to this point I have not discussed the question whether or not they should treat my State on the same basis on which community-property States are treated, but I am complaining at the moment that the Bureau of Internal Revenue refuses to recognize business operations which are just as completely valid, just as completely legal, just as completely sound, as title to property itself.

Mr. McCARRAN. All I can say to that is, I am sorry.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. If the Senator is sorry for us, what does he think we are for ourselves?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, much has been said about Arkansas having once been a community-property State. I have a report from the Library of Congress from which I wish to read. It says, referring to community property:

> This form of ownership was eliminated in Florida by the treaty of cession in 1819, and in Missouri Territory, out of which the States of Arkansas, Iowa, Mississippi, and Missouri were formed, by the acts of the territorial legislature adopted in 1807 and 1816. Oregon, in 1945, repealed a community property statute adopted in 1943.

So that at least since Arkansas has been a State, it has not had community property laws.

It is true, in accordance with the statement of the Senator from Nevada, that its effect on taxes comes from an ancient principle of law arising from Spanish and French law, but it certainly was not a direct consequence of that law, that is, it was not intended to result, as the Senator from Texas said. It is in the nature of an accidental windfall. This great advantage has grown out of a situation which no one contemplated at the time, and none of us who are supporting the amendment are trying to take it away from those States. That was tried before, as I said a moment ago, as long ago as in 1921. All we are trying to do is to give to the States which do not now enjoy this particular windfall the same privileges, and to put them on an equality, so far as taxation goes.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I wonder if the Senator agrees that the question of whether or not a State has a community property law as a base is completely within the sovereignty of the State and depends not one whit on whether the civil law or the common law controls within the State.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The State of Oklahoma recently has adopted it, and they make no bones about having done so for the purpose of getting an advantage in paying the income tax. They first adopted it, and then it was proved inadequate. I have the history of that, if the Senator is interested.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. That is exactly what I attempted to indicate. What I was asking the Senate was whether or not the Senator agrees with me that the question of whether a State adopts or refuses to adopt a community-property law is a matter completely within the sovereignty of the State.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Absolutely; there is no question about it.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. It does not stem from the fact that the State might have been under the civil law at one time or might never have been under the civil law.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. No; Iowa was in the same situation in which Arkansas once found itself; Iowa was once subject to the old civil law; but, as I just read, it was repealed before Iowa became a State. The whole situation with regard to taxes is an unexpected windfall. What the Senator from Texas and the Senator from New Mexico have said about the status of women, and so on, refers to an entirely different matter. I do not think it would seriously be urged that the women of Texas and New Mexico are treated vastly better than those in Iowa and Arkansas, so far as any difference in the distribution of incomes or earnings of the inhabitants of those States are concerned.

I will say there is this advantage, in addition to the tax exemption, it makes it very difficult for creditors, unless they are very wary, because they have to take into consideration the fact that in levying on property the wife may assert her property right. But in the everyday business of dealing with one's salary, I do not think there is any difference at all.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely rose to say that the question of creditors never enters into the situation. There is never any trouble in the community-property States, for in most of them the property is subject to debts. That is not a factor. I do think that the wives in the community-property States, from a property standpoint, are vastly better treated than in the common-law States.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. As the Senator from Texas indicated, when it comes to divorce or death, there is a difference, but in the average carrying on of day-to-day business I doubt that there is any substantial difference at all.

I think the action of the Government in regard to the taxation of inheritances, to which the Senator from Texas referred, shows that the administrative branch of the Government, the taxing branch, has gradually been putting pressure on in this situation, which it is recognized is wholly unwarranted under our Federal tax system, regardless of what the local tax system may be in regard to distinction between man and wife.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas will yield, does he argue that the inheritance tax law, passed in 1942, to which reference has been made, is a fair and just measure?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think it is about the only way by which, under the existing law, it is possible to make up for the glaring inequities that exist under the income tax law. It does not make up for them completely, but it does so to a degree. The Senator is familiar with the saying that a bad law makes bad decisions. A gross inequity exists here, which I think has created a tendency to adopt other provisions of law in order to equalize the situation. Before I leave the question of creditors, I should like to read briefly to the Senator——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I should like first to read a statement with regard to creditors. It is from the Library of Congress, an impartial source. It is a discussion of the advantages and disadvantages of community property. It says:

> The greatest losses which these practices—

Referring to the community property system—

> entail, as well as other shortcomings attributable to this system, are sustained by third parties, chiefly creditors. Unless they make adequate investigation, examine property rights carefully, and are cognizant of the wife's vested interests in community property, they may discover, in transactions with the husband, that the latter was not legally competent to pledge as assets securing his debts the property which appeared to be his own. All evidences of wealth that are employed in business transactions, such as real estate, bank deposits, securities, and insurance, must be evaluated by the creditor in terms of the wife's interest therein if the assets appropriated in the event of a default are not to prove inadequate. Lack of protection for creditors is declared to be "the most glaring defect of the community-property system."

That gets entirely away from taxes, but I have read that in reply to the Senator's remark about creditors. What I am interested in is not the matter of creditors; that is of no importance to us at all.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. While the Senator is casting that reflection upon the community-property States——

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I did not cast a reflection; I read a statement by an expert in the Library of Congress.

Mr. HATCH. Evidently the Senator endorsed it and approved it, just as the Senator endorses the iniquitous inheritance tax on the wife's property. The Senator has now raised the question of the creditor. Under community-property laws, the husband cannot mortgage or pledge real estate of the wife, or other community property, without the wife's joining in the pledge or mortgage. That is not unknown to creditors; it is a matter of common knowledge. It is in the law, and it has never made my State or other community-property States open to criticism. It is a further protection of the wife's absolute ownership of one-half the community property.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I do not care to pursue the question of ownership of the property. What we are primarily interested in is income. What is involved is the earnings of the husband. The income from property owned by the wife, in any State, is hers regardless of whether it be community property or otherwise. If the wife owns a building and receives income, the income is hers, and she reports it. What we are particularly interested in is the question of the earned income of the husband. That is the big problem, and that is where the great advantage on the one hand or the great disadvantage on the other hand lies.

Reference has been made to the question of partnership. I should like to point out, however, in addition to the income tax, in the case mentioned by the senior Senator from Arkansas, and to which I referred before the committee, that in Arkansas, in order to vest ownership in the wife by gift, a tax must be paid. Senators know that the gift tax has now been increased to the point where it is only slightly less than the inheritance tax. In Texas and New Mexico, the same result is reached without a tax.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. With reference to a legitimate gift by a husband to his wife, upon which the gift tax is paid, the Internal Revenue Bureau refuses to recognize the validity of the transaction.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is exactly correct.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The department overturns such transaction and says they are no good.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is exactly correct. They laid down some kind of rule, on the theory that the wife does not participate in the business. I think that if, in addition to paying a tax and setting up the partnership, the wife then assumed direction of the business, the transaction might be recognized; but in a community-property State the wife certainly does not have to do anything, and yet the partnership is recognized and there is no gift tax in such a State.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, may I call this to the Senator's attention, if he will yield——

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The Department attempts to draw a peculiar distinction, putting a certain odium upon a transaction between members of a family. They draw a distinction in such a case as this: If the Senator has a business, and I happen to have a little money, and I want to put it into the business as a partner, and I elect not to take part in the management of the business, saying I would rather have the Senator manage it, that he knows all about it; in that case they will recognize the partnership. But if the wife does not participate in the business, they say, "There is something vicious about that, and we will not recognize the legality of it." It may be a perfectly proper transfer and a perfectly proper vesting of title under the law of the State where it occurs. I fail to see the soundness of their reasoning in such a case.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct. It is assumed, the Department says, that the transaction was entered into for the purpose of avoiding taxes. That is apparently the assumption. The Senator has stated exactly the way it is done, and I have several cases in my files, showing that that has taken place in Arkansas. I am sure it has occurred elsewhere.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. May I suggest to the Senator that, for the first time, so far as I know, in the administration of the internal-revenue laws no distinction is now being drawn between tax avoidance and tax evasion? Heretofore there has been all the difference between legitimacy and illegality. As I recently pointed out to certain people who are very much interested in this matter officially, tax avoidance, as it has always been considered, is today practiced by the internal-revenue department itself, because every year it sends out broadsides saying, "Do not pay more taxes than you have to—here is where you can claim a deduction—here is what you can do—do not pay on this—you do not need to report that." That is tax avoidance; meaning only that a person avoids the payment of taxes for which he is not legally liable. Tax evasion, as I understand it, is a situation in which persons either conspire or enter into some sort of arrangement in order to avoid paying taxes for which they are legitimately chargeable.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is true.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. But apparently today there is no longer a distinction such as there has been in the past between legitimate tax avoidance, or the avoidance of paying taxes for which one is not legally liable, and tax evasion. In practice those two terms have now been merged.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think it is completely indefensible. For the information of the Senator—I do not think this has even been mentioned—and as showing the conscience of the public in general on this question, a Gallup poll was taken. Only a week ago, I think, the Saturday Evening Post had a very exhaustive article pointing out in great detail the injustice of the situation. If the Senator happened to see it, it was a very excellent article. In a Gallup poll on the subject, taken only a short time ago, the question propounded was:

> For the purpose of income taxes, in 9 States a man and wife can divide their income equally between themselves to reduce their income tax. Should married couples in the other 39 States be allowed to do the same thing?

If a Gallup poll has any political significance at all, I think everybody ought to take notice of the result of the poll. Of the replies, 74 percent were "yes," 10 percent "no," and 16 percent "no opinion." As between Democrats and Republicans, the replies of Democrats were 72 percent "yes," 10 percent "no"; of the Republicans, who in this instance had even a greater sense of justice than the Democrats, 77 percent said "yes," that there should be no such discrimination. I think that ought to be very helpful in giving us an idea of what the public in general thinks about such discrimination.

I have a letter in my hand which has some appropriateness to the statement made by the senior Senator from Texas, who made such a moving appeal a moment ago in regard to the status of women. I may explain that Texarkana, Ark., is on the line between Texas and Arkansas. The State line runs right down the middle of the main street. Recently the town has begun to be lopsided. The letter is from one of the leading attorneys of Texarkana. I read only a part of the letter. He says:

> Here on the Texas-Arkansas line we are losing many valuable citizens because they go across the State line and buy themselves a home on the difference they would pay in income tax. This makes real estate in Texas more valuable than in Arkansas, because the identical house will sell for $1,000 to $5,000 more on the Texas side than it will on the Arkansas side. If all the States which do not have a community-property law will get together something surely can be accomplished.

The writer of that letter, Mr. President, simply cannot understand why 39 other States stupidly sit by and see such things as this going on indefinitely.

I want to repeat that the effort to do something about this matter was started in 1921. This is not the first time the matter has been discussed. It is true the approach before was to take away the privilege of making separate returns, and that failed. But the movement was started in 1921. All during the 1920's, as Senators will recall, under the great Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, taxes were often reduced, and there were plenty of opportunities then to have rectified this inequity, but nothing was done about it. More recently, I think in 1942, an effort was made to rectify the inequity, but it was stymied. Opponents were always able to put off action, just as they are trying to put off action now. I know that if we do not take action now when there is an opportunity to reduce taxes, there will not be anything seriously done next year because it will then be said "Oh, yes; we know it is indefensible, and so on, but we cannot reduce taxes now. It would cost $800,000,000."

Mr. President, it is such a simple matter to take the action we propose under the present situation. Although I may not be in accord with the pending bill, I think everyone agrees and everything indicates that a bill will be passed, and the result will be to reduce taxes somewhere between three and four billion dollars. There is no difficulty whatever in incorporating into the bill the proposed rectification of this inequity. It is a very simple matter to do so.

I think no one can justifiably say that the inclusion of the pending amendment will affect primarily the larger incomes from $5,000 on up to, let us say, $100,000. All that is needed to be done is simply to adjust the rates in the existing bill in those brackets, and the same amount of reduction in taxes will be achieved without any serious upsetting of the situation. I think the adjustment can be made in a very short time. I think one of the substitute bills which will be offered here has already worked out the adjustment between the raising of the exemptions in order to benefit the small incomes and the incorporation of this proposal, in order to give relief to the large incomes. I know there would be no difficulty in making such adjustment. I cannot understand any reason at all why the leadership will not do so except that they believe that because there has been much publicity concerning H. R. 1, and because the committee did not take action, therefore, as a matter of party prestige, the bill must be gone through with as it is. I cannot see any real objection to the inclusion of the proposal, because no one undertakes to justify such an inequity as now exists, except Members from the community-property States, and, of course, there is no reason for us ever to expect them to change their views. After all, what it amounts to is that you and I, Mr. President, and your people and ours, pay higher taxes on account of this situation. Assuming that a certain amount of tax money is necessary in order to operate the Government year after year, the people in the Senator's State of Iowa and mine in the State of Arkansas have been paying the difference. That is all there is to it. They have been doing it ever since there was a Federal income tax.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I want to suggest to the Senator the very sincere observation that the proposal does intrigue me and I cannot fully justify in my own mind why other States do not adopt the community-property law rather than ask for congressional action on the matter. It seems to me that some of the other States—I suggest my own—which do not have a community-property law can take remedial action. There is a place, the legislatures of the various States, where a community-property law can be adopted and put into effect. I have been a little intrigued over why more of them do not do so.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. There are several reasons, I think. The constitution of my own State sets out certain provisions respecting dower rights, and so on, of women. If we were to approach it from the point of view of the ownership of property it would require a constitutional amendment, or so it is thought by the leading lawyers of my State. In addition to that, one reason why it has not become so acute a question, and there has not been great pressure to take action, is that up until recent years the income taxes have not been nearly so high as they are now. It is because we are in the present period when taxes are a great burden and the graduation of taxes is so steep that a real inequity has developed.

The conditions are becoming more serious. If we look at the difference in taxes paid as between community- and non-community-property States, it will be found that there is considerable discrimination in favor of community-property States. I do not want to burden the record but the discrimination runs up as high as 29 percent on an income of $100,000 a year. That is a tremendous differential. It means that about every 5 years an extra year's income is received from such a taxpayer in a non-community-property State. The difference between the income of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from California runs up to almost 1 month's salary every year. The differential is more than $600. The difference comes about by reason of the steep graduation of the taxes. If the tax were at a flat rate, there would be no difference. The tax is so burdensome to the taxpayer in the non-community-property State because of the progressive graduation in the taxes.

The other reason is that the lawyers in my State discussed the subject this year and said that in the first place action by our State would upset the long-established principles of property rights and would entail a great deal of litigation, and it would be some years before everything was tried through the courts. Then they added this significant thought. They said that the situation is so clear, that such a glaring inequity exists, that surely the Congress will do something about it, and they themselves did not want to undertake to do it. I have a letter to that effect. The letter says, "We are sure that this year or next the Congress will straighten out this matter, because we cannot imagine that when 39 States are subject to this disadvantage they would continue to endure it." That was the reasoning of the letter from the president of the Bar Association of Arkansas.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Why do they submit this matter to the speculative action of Congress when it is within the power of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas to take action to correct the situation?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Those who take the position I have referred to have not had the privilege of being Members of the Senate, and they do not appreciate the difficulty incident to remedial legislation of this sort. They think the inequity is so patent and obvious that Congress would naturally take action to remedy the situation.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I am not in violent disagreement with the Senator, but I am frankly expressing some of the questions which have been in my mind, particularly as to why the States themselves do not take action.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Here are 39 States, all with long histories of legislation and interpretation by their courts respecting property. It seems to me that since this inequity arises as an unexpected windfall to a few States, the only proper thing to do is to apply the uniform principle of Federal taxation rather than to make all 39 States, many of which have a much longer history than the community-property States, conform to a principle which, after all, grew out of Spanish and French civil law, whereas most of our laws stem from the common law.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. Does the Senator contend that there is not any inequity in the descent distribution laws which gives the husband two-thirds of the property and the wife one-third?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Is the Senator referring to the common law?

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I was not making any comment about descent and distribution. All I am trying to say is that the impact of the Federal tax law ought to be the same, regardless of the fact that citizens live in different States. A distinction between citizens within the United States is not a recognized and proper basis for discrimination in taxes.

Mr. McFARLAND. But the tax is based upon ownership of property, or is based upon income.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I contend that as a practical matter the earned salary of a man—the Senator from Arizona, for example—does not involve any question of difference of disposition. The disposition of the Senator's salary is not unlike the disposition of my own. As a practical, everyday business matter, the Senator does not go through the formality of turning over half of his salary to his wife. No one else does. It is only in certain contingencies such as divorce, death, and levying on property, that the principle has any significance at all.

Mr. McFARLAND. The Senator from Arkansas would not want the Senator from Arizona to reveal how little of his income he gets, would he? [Laughter.]

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator's situation is no different from mine. There is no distinction between the Senator and myself in that respect. I was not referring to the amount.

Mr. McFARLAND. Nor am I. While my last remark was facetious, I am discussing the laws. Let us get away from the question of individual income. The Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Arizona might have to reveal that they did not get even 50 percent of their salaries. [Laughter.] Let us talk about the laws, which the Senator says have been in existence for so long. The Senator does not contend for one moment, does he, that a law which gives to the husband more of the property at death than is given to the wife is a fair and equitable law?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I am afraid I do not quite follow the Senator. I do not know to which law he is referring.

Mr. McFARLAND. I am referring to the laws of any of the 39 States which do not provide for division of property as community property, and in which the wife does not receive one-half of the property.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Generally speaking, under the law she receives a third.

Mr. McFARLAND. Does the Senator contend that that is an equitable and just law for the wife?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I have not contended one way or the other. That has nothing to do with the question of taxation.

Mr. McFARLAND. I am of the opinion it has everything to do with it.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I am not so sure that it is not all right. At any rate, such laws have an ancient lineage.

Mr. McFARLAND. If the Senator contends that is a just law, that is one thing——

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I do not quite see the relevancy of that question to the question of income tax.

Mr. McFARLAND. It is relevant because the community-property laws are based upon the partnership theory. What the community earns belongs one-half to the husband and one-half to the wife. The courts have held, in the community-property States——

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is a rather strange approach. Does not the Senator have a right to spend his salary as he chooses? Let us assume, for illustration, that he receives $1,000 a month. Cannot the Senator spend that money without his wife's consent?

Mr. McFARLAND. For the benefit of the community.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Does the Senator mean that he could not take a trip without his wife's consent? What would happen to him if he did? I do not wish to be personal. I am simply using the Senator as an illustration. If the Senator prefers, let us take John Jones, who lives in Arizona——

Mr. McFARLAND. What would there be to hinder the wife from taking a trip?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. She would not have the money in her possession. I do not understand the great significance of the argument. Actually the Senator has his salary in his own possession and control, and he can spend it. He does not have to obtain a release from his wife.

Mr. McFARLAND. Under any law someone must handle the money.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. McFARLAND. So far as I am personally concerned, if the Senator wants me to tell him how we handle our affairs——

Mr. FULBRIGHT. No; I do not care about that.

Mr. McFARLAND. My wife and I have a joint bank account.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Is it necessary to have a joint bank account?

Mr. McFARLAND. No; it could all be in the wife's name.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. If the Senator wished to do so, he could spend his salary, just as I spend mine, and there would be no consequences other than personal relations. There would be no legal consequences.

Mr. McFARLAND. There might be legal consequences if the practice were continued for too long, because the wife could do something about it. The law protects her. So far as the management of personal property is concerned, either the husband or the wife must be the manager of such property. That is the only distinction. When it comes to real property, the property is one-half the husband's and one-half the wife's, as is the personal property. However, the signatures of both are required in order to convey real property.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In my State the signatures of both are required to convey real property. The wife must release her dower rights.

Mr. McFARLAND. The difference is this: The courts have held that the wife does not receive her half of the property by inheritance. Her half of the property already belongs to her. She has earned it during her lifetime.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Be that as it may, I still do not think that is relevant or significant in relation to the question of income tax.

Mr. McFARLAND. I see that the Senator does not fully appreciate the effect of the community-property laws. I agree with the Senator from Texas that there is a distinction——

Mr. FULBRIGHT. What is the Senator's objection to permitting the citizens of other States to pay taxes based upon the same division of income?

Mr. McFARLAND. I have no objection to permitting individuals from any State to pay taxes on the basis of the income which belongs to the respective individuals. When it comes to the contract referred to by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], I do not see why anyone could object if the income actually belonged to the individual. But any other basis would not be a proper basis for taxation.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I venture to say that half of my income belongs to my wife in just as real a sense as half of the Senator's salary belongs to his wife.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I think everyone would agree that, regardless of whether one lives in a community-property State or a non-community-property State, the individual who is earning the money, whether it be the husband or the wife, is the one who handles the pocketbook and handles the affairs of the family.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. LUCAS. All we are asking is that we be put on a uniform basis with the community-property States so far as Federal taxation is concerned.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. The income-tax law has now become the chief revenue producer for the Nation. As has been previously stated, there are between 47,000,000 and 49,000,000 persons filing income-tax returns with the Government. All we are seeking, and all we desire, is to be placed on a uniform basis with the citizens of other States so far as Federal taxation is concerned. For the life of me, I cannot understand why individuals in community-property States take the position they take. Sooner or later, of course, the situation will have to be remedied, because it cannot continue indefinitely. An individual in the State of the Senator from Arizona, for example, who makes $20,000 a year, pays an income tax on $10,000, and his wife pays an income tax on $10,000.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. While the individual in Illinois or Arkansas who makes $20,000 a year, and whose wife has no separate income, pays a tax on the total $20,000.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is correct. The rate is approximately 20-percent greater.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct. If there is anything fair and equitable about that, then I do not understand the meaning of equity; and I studied a little of it during my early days in law. I have learned more about it since I have been in the Senate. There is no equity in the position taken by those in the community-property States. Apparently they do not want us placed on the same basis. They want to continue to enjoy that advantage, but they are not willing for us to enjoy the same advantage.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The reason is fairly clear. Year after year a certain amount must be paid in taxes to support the Federal Government. There is no denying the fact that those in community-property States would have to pay their fair share of the taxes, instead of a lesser share.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. They are insisting on keeping an advantage which was derived accidentally, I would say, certainly not unfairly, from the ancient originators of this principle. That is what it amounts to. The strange thing, to me, is that 39 States will stand for it.

Mr. LUCAS. There was no income-tax law at that time.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. No; it was not of sufficient importance before. Up to this point I cannot understand why even the chairman of the great Committee on Finance is so reluctant to rectify this obvious, blatant injustice imposed on 39 States.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. Let us suppose that the $20,000 which the Senator from Illinois mentioned was in existence at the time of the death of the huband, how much of that money would the wife inherit in the State of Arkansas?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Does the Senator mean, without a will?

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The husband could will away all of it.

Mr. McFARLAND. Let us suppose there is no will.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The wife would get one-third, I believe. If there is no will she receives a third.

Mr. McFARLAND. Under the provision which the Senator spoke of, dividing it $10,000 to the husband and $10,000 to the wife, the wife would not get half of the saving would she? She would get only a third of it?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Under the law; yes.

Mr. McFARLAND. Would there be anything equitable about that?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That has no relation to the income tax. I do not see how in the Senator's mind that has anything to do with the amount of taxes they pay on their earnings.

I want to point out one or two other things in connection with the gift tax. A husband makes a gift of community property to his wife who already possesses a vested and undivided half-interest in it. It is in effect a gift tax. Of course there was a very vague theory about ownership that seemed to accrue in the beginning, but the Supreme Court in 1926 ruled that the interest accorded the wife under the California property law as then drafted was not a vested right, but only an expectancy in the marital property; and on that ground it denied California married couples the privilege of splitting their income and of enjoying the savings effected thereby. That was not so long ago. If the Senator wants the citation I will give it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In a moment. That case was U. S. v. Robbins (259, 315). Let me finish this paragraph and I shall yield to the Senator. It was not until California amended its law, effective July 2, 1927, that married taxpayers of that State regained these privileges.

A second instance in which a State community property law failed to meet Federal requirements, with resulting forfeiture of tax economies, was presented when Federal authorities ruled that the Oklahoma community-property law of 1939 was inadequate because of its provisions for voluntary election by married persons to come under its terms. Oklahoma enacted a new community property law in 1945, effective July 26, 1945. The new law omits the former provision for an election, but whether it will be acceptable to the Bureau of Internal Revenue remains to be seen.

It seems to me ridiculous that in order to overcome the obvious discrimination based upon residence in States each State must go through all that rigmarole and the difficulties that obviously are inherent in trying to change their laws.

I now yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator has partially answered the question by continuing his remarks. I merely wanted to point out that so far as the interest of a wife in community property in California is concerned, it is not an expectancy; it is a right which she has at the time the community interest is earned. As the able Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] pointed out, the wife has a right to one-half of the community earnings, and in the case of the death of the wife she can will to anyone she sees fit her half of the community interest. If there is a divorce involved, the wife, not as a matter of getting a judicial determination, but as a matter of right, receives one-half of the community property accumulated during the married period.

I merely wish to point out to the able Senator that the reason for the change in the California law which he has mentioned is not that the State of California from historic times did not give a wife the right to have one-half the community interest, but it grew out of some of the decisions by the Bureau of Internal Revenue which apparently failed to recognize something which was recognized in the State of California.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. All afternoon one Senator after another has been placing the blame on the Bureau of Internal Revenue for the enforcement of some regulation or rule which has been laid down. That is an erroneous conclusion. As I understand, they may have gone a little too far in the construction of Supreme Court decisions, recently handed down, which give the Treasury the apparent right to do what it is doing at the present time.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I think the Senator is referring to partnership cases.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct. That is the case which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] has been discussing this afternoon. Great emphasis was laid upon the fact that the Internal Revenue Bureau was taking the wrong attitude. It may be it has gone too far in attempting to follow the reasoning of the Supreme Court. Nevertheless, there is some justification for it.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I will say to the Senator that what makes it seem so unjust, and what really roils the people in my State is the fact that in three States, Louisiana, Texas, and Oklahoma, a similar operation is going on. In one case a lumberman not far from the Louisiana border sees his competitor, just across the line, enjoying the privilege without having to pay gift taxes, but paying taxes substantially less than he has to pay. That is what makes him mad about the whole business.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, the Senator is correct. The people have a right to be angry. As a result of the Supreme Court decisions in the cases which I have mentioned the time was never so propitious as it is now to adopt the kind of amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, because in my opinion, it will do away with the majority of the cases wherein the Treasury Department is seeking to collect taxes from partnerships involving husband and wife.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Absolutely it will. Referring to the loss in income tax, in the next year's tax bill, taking into consideration the ability and the power to split incomes just as it is done in community-property States, all that needs to be done is to adjust the rates so that they will be on the same basis. If more income is needed they can be readjusted. From then on the inequity will no longer continue.

I should like to say one more word on this subject, and that is with regard to the illustrations about inequities given by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN]. I cannot see that there is any justification for refusing to rectify this inequity unless other inequities such as double taxation of corporate dividends, and the question of whether or not there should be a larger exemption credit for earned income, which, incidentally, is a very important matter, are also rectified. I am in favor of some recognition of earned income and some consideration of small business, but that, it seems to me, has absolutely no connection with a discrimination in taxation based upon residence.

I know of no other instance in the history of this country where the citizens of one State have been treated differently than the citizens of another State in regard to taxation or criminal law or civil law or any other law coming from the Federal Government, simply because they live in one particular State, as opposed to another State. That is not a sound basis for making a distinction. Let me also say that it seems to me to be absolutely indefensible to attempt to classify this inequity along with all the other inequities which have been mentioned and to set all of them aside for study in the future.

On February 5, I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 57, relating to this problem. The senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] followed that with Senate bill 550, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] followed it with Senate bill 626, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] followed it with Senate bill 649, and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB] followed it with Senate bill 776. When the matter was first called to their attention, the immediate reaction was, "Of course, this is a situation which should be remedied."

Mr. President, if it had been given any consideration in the committee, I think the amendment certainly would have been incorporated in the bill. The only reason that I can imagine why it was not incorporated in the bill is simply that the Senators on the other side of the aisle feel that having committed themselves as a party to this bill in the House of Representatives, under the leadership of Representative KNUTSON, they have to go through with it in more or less its original form. I do not think the committee seriously has given this question consideration at this time, as a practical matter.

I only wish to say again that I know that unless the amendment is adopted now, no serious consideration will be given to it next year. This same proposal has been filbustered to death on several occasions in the past, and has been delayed for 26 years. Unless we adopt it now, since we have an opportunity to incorporate it in a general tax-reduction bill, it is my opinion that it never will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] to the first committee amendment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Byrd	Dworshak
Baldwin	Cain	Eastland
Ball	Capehart	Ecton
Barkley	Capper	Ellender
Bricker	Connally	Ferguson
Brooks	Cooper	Flanders
Buck	Cordon	Fulbright
Bushfield	Donnell	George
Butler	Downey	Green
Gurney	McCarthy	Smith
Hatch	McClellan	Sparkman
Hawkes	McFarland	Stewart
Hayden	McMahon	Taft
Hickenlooper	Malone	Taylor
Hill	Maybank	Thomas, Utah
Hoey	Millikin	Thye
Holland	Moore	Umstead
Ives	Morse	Vandenberg
Jenner	Murray	Wagner
Johnson, Colo.	O'Daniel	Watkins
Johnston, S. C.	O'Mahoney	Wherry
Kem	Pepper	White
Knowland	Revercomb	Wiley
Langer	Robertson, Va.	Williams
Lodge	Robertson, Wyo.	Wilson
Lucas	Russell	Young
McCarran	Saltonstall

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the first committee amendment.

Mr. LANGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word before the vote is taken. This amendment would add from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 to the cost of the bill we have before us, under the budgetary facts which were settled by the vote of yesterday. The subject matter of the amendment will come before the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Senate Finance Committee, and have the most serious and friendly consideration.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator speak a little louder?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I was saying that the pending amendment would add from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 to the cost of the bill before us. The subject matter of the amendment will have a top position on the agenda of the House Ways and Means Committee in connection with a general revision statute. The House Ways and Means Committee has started its consideration of these matters already. Secretary Snyder has testified. They will move diligently ahead with it. The Senate Finance Committee will give attention to it at the earliest possible moment. The amendment would transform this simple income-tax reduction bill into a species of general revision bill, and would grant group relief to a very small group, relatively speaking, instead of to 49,000,000 taxpayers, as we intended to do by the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Did the Senator say it would cost $1,000,000,000?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes. I am now informed that because of the retroactive feature, as it now stands, it would cost $1,000,000,00.

Mr. LUCAS. I hope we will finally be able to agree on some definite amount as to what the amendment would cost. We have been told it would cost anywhere from $750,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. The Treasury Department testified definitely, and it is in the record, that it would cost $752,000,000. The Senator in the debate has been talking about a cost of $800,000,000, and now we have another piece of expert advice from the staff saying it is going to cost $1,000,000,000. If we do not vote on the amendment tonight, I am sure it will cost us $1,200,000,000 by tomorrow.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The amendment would have a retroactive effect, and that adds to the cost, making it $1,000,000,000.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I shall not delay the vote, but since a brief explanation has been made by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, I wish to remind the Senate what the vote means.

By rejecting the amendment, Senators from 38 States of the Union would be leaving their people and their citizens in the same category of discrimination in which they have been for the past 25 years. Now we have a chance to correct that. Every time we have tried to do anything about it, we have heard that a little later, at more opportune season, the matter would be given attention. Now we have before us a tax-reduction bill. Let us use this opportunity. Let those of us at least who are not from the community-property States, those of us whose people are having to pay this extra tax, let us at this hour take advantage of the opportunity and remove this discrimination.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does not the Senator believe that if we pass the pending bill reducing taxes generally by $3,400,000,000, without this amendment added, we will probably never have another opportunity to vote for this simple act of justice, but will always be confronted with the argument that this is no time to reduce the taxes?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, just so surely as Senators are misled this evening, just so surely as Senators accept the promise that next year the matter will be attended to at some time in the future, I say that that much longer will they be perpetuating a rank injustice upon the citizens of 38 States. If the relief were not granted next year, the injustice would be perpetrated that much longer.

Let me ask Senators, if the Federal Government cannot now stand a reduction in taxes of from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, what assurance have they that it would be able to stand it 1 year from now? If it cannot stand it now, it cannot stand it a year from now, but sometime it will have to take the chance. This is the time and this is the place.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I gladly yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Will the Senator confirm or correct my understanding about the amount involved? Is it true that H. R. 1, as passed by the House, would have brought about a reduction in revenue estimated at $4,900,000,000 a year?

Mr. McCLELLAN. My understanding is that it is $3,800,000,000.

Mr. HOLLAND. H. R. 1?

Mr. McCLELLAN. H. R. 1 as passed by the House. Am I correct about that, that it is $3,800,000,000?

Mr. LUCAS. I believe the Senator from Ohio estimated it definitely at $4,800,000,000.

Mr. TAFT. The current bill reduces the income, on an annual basis, $3,800,000,000; but because of the lag in the collections, and so on, which I do not quite understand, but which has been explained to me often, the actual loss in receipts in the fiscal year from July 1 this year to July 1, 1948, will be only $3,200,000,000.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator from Ohio speaks about the bill?

Mr. TAFT. The bill, without the amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As I understand, the bill as it passed the House carried with it a reduction of $3,800,000,000. The bill, as now revised by the Senate Finance Committee, carries with it an anticipated reduction of $3,200,000,000. Am I correct about that?

Mr. TAFT. As amended by the Senate committee, the actual losses in receipts during the fiscal year which is coming will be only $3,200,000,000, although I think on an annual basis, on a liability basis, so to speak, it is $3,800,000,000.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, may I ask the experts who are sitting in the Senate behind the majority seats what H. R. 1 as originally passed by the House of Representatives, before it came to the Senate, would have cost the Treasury?

Mr. TAFT. The experts are not allowed to speak on the floor of the Senate. It would cost about $4,800,000,000 because of the retroactive feature of the House bill.

Mr. LUCAS. That is the point I wanted to make. I thought it was $4,800,000,000, and it did pass the House of Representatives, and the House of Representatives said the Government could stand a reduction of $4,800,000,000 now, at this particular time.

Mr. BARKLEY and several other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has the floor. To whom does he yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to say a word on my own time, Mr. President.

I read very carefully the preliminary statement—and it was an able one—made by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN]. I also read very carefully the report of the committee. My recollection of the figures stated both by the distinguished Senator from Colorado and the report of the committee is that House bill 1 would cost the Federal Government in revenue the sum of $4,900,000,000 a year.

From the same sources, the speech of the distinguished Senator from Colorado and the report of his committee, the pending bill as reported by the committee was said to cost the Government in reduced revenue $3,200,000,000 a year. My point is, Mr. President and Senators, that even with the $800,000,000 added to the bill by the pending amendment, the bill as so amended would cost the Federal Government only $4,000,000,000 per year, as against the $4,900,000,000, in which shape the measure came from the House, in the original House bill.

I also want to call to the attention of the Senate that in addition the Senate committee, in its wisdom—and I strongly approve of its wisdom—has changed the effective date so as to cut off a half year of that loss, by making the effective date as proposed in the bill now pending July 1 of this year, or the beginning of the fiscal year 1948, rather than January 1, 1947. It would appear therefore, Mr. President, unless I am absolutely misinformed—and I do not believe I am—that by the addition of this measure, so ably sponsored here by the Senator from Arkansas and argued, I think, and properly so, as being designed to do justice to the people and the taxpayers in 38 of the States, that even with the adoption of the amendment the cost of the bill as so amended would be in the neighborhood of $4,000,000,000 per year, with the effect of it reduced, to begin at July 1 this year, as compared with the loss projected from the House bill of $4,900,000,000, with the effective date January 1 of this year.

Mr. TAFT and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the chair.

Mr. HOLLAND. Let me conclude, please. I shall be glad to yield later.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that if what the distinguished Senator from Colorado wants is talking ground, ground to argue and trade, with the other branch of Congress, he will certainly have plenty of it, even with the adoption of the amendment, because even with that adoption and with the change in the effective date, the Senate bill will mean so much less loss of revenue than the original House measure that there will be ample ground for trading on the two measures in the conference committee.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. In the interest of keeping straight the figures which have been mentioned, the Senator was correct when he said that the House bill, as it came here, would have cost $4,900,000,000.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MILLIKIN. As we have amended it, it would cost $3,200,000,000. That is at the assumed rate of annual income payments of $170,000,000,000 a year. If I may make an observation, of course we took the House figure of $4,900,000,000 and cut it down to $3,200,000,000, because we thought that was sound procedure; and, so far as going into conference is concerned, I would infinitely prefer going in with a $3,200,000,000 figure than with a figure of $4,000,000,000 or higher.

Mr. HOLLAND. I appreciate the candor of the distinguished Senator. I have appreciated the references to the Bible and the hymn book, quoted from liberally, and I think very effectively by the Senator from Arkansas, but it seems to me that it is time to quote, too, that good, old proverb, that one must be just before he is generous, and that, while we are making this reduction to the taxpayers, which I think is long past due, I think we should also be just to the taxpayers in 38 States who are not now being justly treated, and who for 25 or 26 years have not been justly treated, and who do not have the simple expedient of a mere change of a single statute in the State laws, to accept the benefits under the existing Federal law, under which the citizens of 10 community property States are getting material benefits at the present time.

I am able to say this from the experience of the last few weeks, in the legislature of my own State, where we have had a very determined effort to adopt the benefits of the community-property law. It has been found, so I am informed by leading legislators of both houses of the legislature, that there are many other implications not having to do at all with taxation, which have slowed down and may prevent for a long period of time the accomplishment of that purpose; such as, for instance, the involvement of constitutional provisions, having to do with homestead exemptions, or with married women's rights as they are fixed in the constitutions of various States, or having to do with various other constitutional and common-law provisions which cannot be changed overnight.

And so, Mr. President and Senators, it seems to me that while we are accomplishing this very material tax reduction—and I note with sympathy that the committee has named this bill the Individual Tax Reduction Law of 1947—that nothing could be more appropriate than that we effect a tax reduction to those people who have been unjustly taxed, as contrasted with the tax payments imposed upon people like them, just across State lines, for 26 years. I strongly hope that the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas will, in the interest of justice, be adopted.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] to the first committee amendment. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], who would vote "nay" if present. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], who is absent on public business, and who, if present, would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore, being at liberty to vote, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to announce that my colleague the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is unavoidably detained because of illness in his family. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Maine would vote "nay," and the Senator from Pennsylvania, if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who is necessarily absent, is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay" and the Senator from Tennessee would vote "yea."

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN], who is absent by leave of the Senate, is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH]. If present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "nay," and the Senator from Rhode Island, if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who is absent because of illness in his family, is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay," and the Senator from West Virginia, if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR]. If present and voting, the Senator from Kansas would vote "nay," and the Senator from Maryland, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. LUCAS. I announce the following pairs on this vote: The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], who is absent on public business, is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN]. If present, the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea," and the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "nay."

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], who is absent on public business, is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. If present, the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "yea," and the Senator from Maine would vote "nay."

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who is necessarily absent, is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. If present, the Senator from Tennessee would vote "yea," and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], who is absent on public business, is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]. If present, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "yea," and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who is necessarily absent, is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], who is absent by leave of the Senate. If present, the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea," and the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay."

The Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], both of whom are unavoidably detained, would vote "nay" if present.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 51, as follows:

So Mr. MCCLELLAN'S amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, may we have action on the original committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the first committee amendment, beginning on page 1, and continuing to the bottom of page 6.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, I have another amendment at the desk which I call up and ask to have stated.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Does the amendment apply to the committee amendment?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. The amendment I want to call up now is the one which requires the Internal Revenue Bureau to recognize equal partnership.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Is the Senator proposing to attach that amendment to the first committee amendment?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I understood that all the committee amendments had been approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; there is one committee amendment which has not yet been acted upon.

The question now is on agreeing to the first committee amendment beginning on page 1, and continuing to the bottom of page 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, I now offer the amendment which is at the desk, and which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following new section:

SEC. 7. Family partnerships, partners not contributing to partnership funds.

Section 3797 (a) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence as follows: "The fact that he is related to another member, or that his interest in such syndicate, group, pool, joint venture, or organization may have been obtained through gift or loan from another member, or without the contribution by himself of any money or other property, shall not affect a member's status as a partner: Provided, That the amendment made by this section shall be applicable with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1938."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator desire to proceed with the amendment tonight? I think it is perfectly certain that the bill cannot be disposed of this evening, and it was my purpose to move a recess.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. It is not my purpose to proceed any further with the amendment today. I simply wanted to have the amendment pending.

BAD BUSINESS AND BAD POLITICS—EDITORIAL FROM THE MEDFORD (OREG.) MAIL-TRIBUNE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an editorial entitled

"Bad Business and Bad Politics," published in the Medford (Oreg.) Mail-Tribune. I wish to associate myself with the contents of the editorial.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BAD BUSINESS AND BAD POLITICS

Would any sane businessman, head over heels in debt, voluntarily reduce his income?

Hardly.

He would keep his income as high as he could so he could get out of debt as rapidly as possible.

But that is not the program of the Republican majority in Congress.

Because around 1 or 2 percent of the voters of the country have to pay income taxes and of course would like to have them reduced, the GOP proposes to cut income taxes from 10 to 30 percent. That is they would materially and deliberately reduce the national income, when the country is still deeply in debt.

When anyone asks why not wait until the national budget is balanced, and the exact income needed to reduce the national debt has been established, the reply is in substance:

"We can't wait. In 12 months a Presidential campaign will be on."

The truth of the latter statement can't be denied.

But are the GOP strategists—and Senator TAFT—quite sure this action will make more votes than it will lose?

How about the millions of voters who don't pay income taxes at all, and how about the millions of voters who are good businessmen first and good party men thereafter, believing the National Government should follow sound business principles as well as individuals?

We suspect that on this particular issue the GOP majority is not only wrong on the basis of sound business principles but wrong on the basis of mere political expediency.

MEETING OF COMMITTEE ON RULES AND ADMINISTRATION

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules and Administration be permitted to meet at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon while the Senate is in session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

"MERGER DOUBLE TALK"—LETTER FROM REAR ADM. ELLIS M. ZACHARIAS

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, recently in the Washington Post there was published an editorial entitled "Merger Double Talk" dealing with the proposed merger of the armed services. A very excellent reply has been made to that editorial by Rear Adm. Ellis M. Zacharias. I ask unanimous consent to have Admiral Zacharias' communication printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"MERGER DOUBLE TALK"

It is not often that I have to disagree with an editorial of the Post. As a matter of fact, during the war the Post developed a far-sighted and lucid editorial policy to such an extent that during the closing phases of the Pacific war it made a great contribution to the psychological warfare campaign against the Japanese high command, which I was privileged to carry on at that time.

But now the Post, in its issue of Tuesday, May 20, indulges in criticism which borders on petulance. It refers to the merger bill recently introduced by Senator ROBERTSON as "merger double talk" and indulges in wisecracking phrases which are certain to mislead the public. I know that this is not the intention of the Post. But with limited opportunity for intensive study of the subject, the public's conclusions could well be affected. Furthermore, I cannot find a single argument in the editorial which supports Senate bill S. 758, which has been under consideration for so long.

Those who have had the courage to oppose the bill (S. 758) for unification of the armed forces—a bill reportedly a compromise to meet directives from above—have opposed it because they see in it a positive and serious threat to our future national security. If that threat exists, then all considerations of personal desire must be definitely put aside.

My only feeling about the merger, and this feeling has been strengthened by recent contact with the public in various parts of the country through lectures and discussion, is that we must have the right answer. I know that we cannot get the right answer by jumping precipitously into some new and untried set-up when we have just won the greatest war in all history with the military organization known as the Joint Chiefs of Staff. I do not like the manner in which the merger proposal was suddenly thrown into the open without any previous consultation with the Navy. I must say that the Navy was caught completely by surprise by a completed study which seems to have been under consideration by the Air Force and the Army for a period of 3 years. That is not my idea of cooperative procedure and unfortunately it makes me wonder what is behind it.

I am sure that the public has not the slightest idea of the factors involved in the present bill (S. 758) and that is why I propose to bring out those factors which affect them directly as individuals and citizens of this great country.

There is urgent need for the unification of our foreign policy, military policy, and economic policy, but we must decide whether in time of war the country will be run by civilians or by the military. There is no compromise on this. History shows the great danger of civilian control being eliminated, as military dominance grows. That, however, is what will obtain under the present bill in which the proposed Secretary of National Defense will be representing the military instead of being a personal representative of the President.

As a deputy of the President he could make decisions in the name of the President in matters of disagreement and thereby maintain the democratic principles on which this country was founded. The latter procedure could not interfere with decisions on military strategy which would still be made by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and approved by National Security Council.

The proposed bill does not provide participation of the Atomic Energy Commission or important committees of Congress which are charged with making provisions to implement the decisions of the National Security Council. But it does provide for a duplicate and unnecessary War Council, an organization requiring a separate staff for members who sit on all boards.

The proposed bill allows the military to dominate the National Security Resources Board which has the vital function of coordinating military and civilian production needs. This could be extremely dangerous.

The bill also provides a joint staff under the joint chiefs, which becomes in fact a national general staff capable of incorporating all the evils of the German system. They will plan, direct, coordinate, and supervise. The members are to have unlimited tours of duty in this group. Although the group is limited to 100 officers, it is to be noted that former legislation provided for only 44 officers on the General Staff of the Army, but in reality it increased to about 5,000. This is what happened to control in Germany.

Now, coming to specific vital functions which could be curtailed under this bill, the Marine Corps and naval aviation are the two most vitally affected. The Marine Corps' amphibious operations are vital to quick seizure of distant bases necessary for the Navy to carry out its function of control of the sea. The Marine Corps, in spite of opposition, developed this splendid technique, one of the greatest factors in winning the war. This technique was fully employed and made possible the Normandy landings. Yet, under the present bill the Marine Corps could be abolished by an unfavorably disposed Secretary of Defense through the simple method of curtailing the budget.

In the same manner naval aviation could be effectively curtailed. When we recall that it was the Navy (over the opposition of Army high-level bomber advocates) which developed the dive bombers and torpedo planes without which we would have lost the Battle of Midway and would have been fighting yet, we must realize that naval aviation is an integral part of sea power which must not be curtailed or hampered. The experience of England with 20 years of curtailed naval aviation should be a sufficient example. I can say categorically that had England's naval aviation been at a stage comparable to ours at the beginning of World War II, she could have prevented the Scandinavian operations of the Germans and the whole course of the war in Europe would have been changed.

In trying to arrive at the right answer to the question now confronting us, I like to consider the lessons of history. History shows that every nation which has had a merger of its armed forces has gone down to defeat. This includes the Romans, Napoleon, the German Kaiser, and finally Hitler. The reason is that with a merger they invariably begin to think in terms of only one of their branches and usually the ground forces because of the sheer weight of numbers. When they do this they lose all the strategical concepts of sea power.

This is what made it impossible for Hitler to invade England. To anyone who might be interested in this phase of the proposed merger I recommend that he read the full text of a treatise by Fletcher Pratt, a nationally known military scientist, called The Case Against Unification, and published in the December 1945 issue of the magazine Sea Power.

In my own field of specialized experience—intelligence—the bill falls far short in failing to provide specifically for a well integrated and efficient organization. It provides simply for the transfer of the functions of the present Central Intelligence Group to the new Central Intelligence Agency. As presently constituted the organization cannot possibly meet the needs of the Nation which has been suddenly thrust into the position of leadership in world affairs.

Therefore, it is quite probable that Senator ROBERTSON was motivated by considerations contained herein and that a little further inspection will reveal that it was not merger double talk.

ELLIS M. ZACHARIAS,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy (Retired).

WASHINGTON.

RECESS

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 28, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 27, 1947

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, the Shepherd of our souls, we wait at Thy altar, not in the spirit of self-approval, but in humble confession, asking Thy guidance in all our ways. Cleanse our lives to receive Thee, and fill our minds with noble thoughts, graven with the imprint of patient power.

We praise Thee for the heritage of freedom, for the home, the school, the church, and for the open door to manhood and womanhood. Enjoin each of us that they who do their share of labor Thou wilt help to stand fast, to be strong, and to make our labors fruitful in service for our country. Dismiss from us mere prudence and calculation and give us courage to accept willingly difficulties to the full measure of our strength. If any have grown weary of the burden and heat of the day, lead them to the waters of life, and Thou wilt wipe all tears from their eyes. To this end, we pray Thy rich blessings of comfort and rest and peace upon our President as he waits in hourly vigil by the side of his devoted mother. Fill the aching hearts of the family circle, and be unto all a blessed ministry of Christian consolation.

Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on May 26, 1947, the President approved and signed a bill of the House of the following title:

On May 26, 1947:

H. R. 3245. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Laite, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 107. Joint resolution limiting the application of provisions of Federal law to counsel employed under Senate Resolution 46.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution (S. Res. 117):

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. FRED BRADLEY, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The message also announced that, pursuant to the above resolution, the President pro tempore appointed the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 814) entitled "An act to provide support for wool, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. AIKEN, Mr. BUSHFIELD, Mr. YOUNG, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, and Mr. ELLENDER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include excerpts.

SAN FRANCISCO

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, William Howard Taft, while President of the United States, referred to San Francisco as the "city that knows how, a city known and loved around the world."

San Francisco has built two of the largest bridges in the world. The world-renowned redwood forests are at our very door. The redwood trees are the oldest and largest living things in the world. They were full grown trees when Moses was a baby in the bulrushes and when our Saviour carried His cross up Calvary Hill.

Few people realize, however, that San Francisco, the city of seven hills, is one great flower garden, as evidenced by the beautiful flowers sent by the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce to the Speaker, the Members of the House of Representatives, and the United States Senators.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BREHM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject United States Loans Fail To Ease Fears of Greek People.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by the Honorable JOHN DAVIS LODGE in Middletown, N. Y., on May 24.

Mr. MEYER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. TWYMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from Rev. Paul S. Newey.

RULES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKINNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MACKINNON. Mr. Speaker, I feel it is time that the House of Representatives declare its independence from the threats of intimidation that have been so frequently indulged in on the floor of the House in recent months by self-appointed spokesmen who purport to speak for the President. These Members have attempted repeatedly to bring in and make the President's opinion and his veto power a factor for consideration in practically every piece of major legislation that has been before the House this session. I do not consider the action that the President might take with respect to pending measures to be germane to the debate and discussion on the floor of the House. We are an independent body, not a rubber stamp for either the Senate or the President, and I submit that our rules should protect the independence of the House from Presidential intimidation the same as we provide protection from interference by the Senate.

I am accordingly introducing a resolution to amend the permanent rules of the House as follows:

Rule XIV (9): It shall be a breach of order in debate on any pending bill or resolution to make any reference to the opinion of the President of the United States on the same general subject, or to the nature of any future action that the President may take with respect to such bill or resolution, unless such opinion or reference to future action was contained in an official communication or message from the President to the House.

The adoption of this rule will insure that measures will be debated on their merits. It will go a long way toward restoring to Congress that independence of action which was intended when our form of government was established.

The President does have a legitimate role in legislation. The proposed rule makes adequate provision for the function properly assigned to the President, but it will stop gossip, rumor, and ill-founded speculation as to the action of the President from being a factor in the passage of legislation. I consider the enactment of this rule to be long overdue.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the Detroit Sunday Times of May 25, Confusion and Insincerity Peril United States, Says Kennedy.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is a mighty fine article, and it would be well for the Members of the House to read it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain tables prepared by the Department of Agriculture on the subject of feed shortage in dairy districts.

Mrs. LUSK asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an article by the president of the State Welfare Board of New Mexico on Navaho administration.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD with reference to the history of terminal-leave legislation.

Mr. FORAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GRANT of Alabama (at the request of Mr. RAINS) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. COLE of Kansas asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Chicago Journal of Commerce.

EXTENSION OF RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, for 15 years I have struggled for the electrification of the farm homes of America.

This is one program that will pay for itself many, many times. It will not only return the money with interest, but it also increases, if not doubles, the value of every farm home it touches.

I am opposed to cutting down, I am opposed to even permitting the Bureau of the Budget to cut down, the amount of money we shall provide to extend this great service to every farm home in America.

I want to see an electric light in every farmhouse that the tax gatherer can find or that we can reach with the draft.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RICH. You are all right in your proposal to give electricity to all farmers, but unless you change the Rural Electrification Administration's idea about going out and building power plants and competing with private enterprise and putting everybody else out of business, then you are on the wrong track. I have been for you and I want to see you get this electricity to the farmers, but you cannot do it if you are going to build all these power plants.

Mr. RANKIN. As I have pointed out before, the power business is a public business, and should not be monopolized by private interests.

If we had waited for the private power companies to provide rural electrification, the farmers would still be in the dark all over this country.

The farmers have a right to build their own generating plants as well as their own lines and I for one will defend that right to the last breath, if necessary.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 3 (H. DOC. NO. 270)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk and, together with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1947, prepared in accordance with the Reorganization Act of 1945. This plan deals solely with housing. It simplifies, and increases the efficiency of, the administrative organization of permanent housing functions and provides for the administration of certain emergency housing activities pending their liquidation. I have found, after investigation, that each reorganization contained in this plan is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes set forth in section 2 (a) of the Reorganization Act of 1945.

The provision of adequate housing will remain a major national objective throughout the next decade. The primary responsibility for meeting housing needs rests, and must continue to rest, with private industry, as I have stated on other occasions. The Federal Government, however, has an important role to play in stimulating and facilitating home construction.

Over the years, the Congress has provided for a number of permanent housing programs, each involving a special approach to the basic objective of more adequate housing for our citizens. The Congress first enacted a series of measures to facilitate home construction and home ownership by strengthening the savings and loan type of home financing institution. These measures established a credit reserve system for such agencies, authorized the chartering of Federal savings and loan associations to provide more adequate home financing facilities, and provided for the insurance of investments in savings and loan institutions in order to attract savings into this field. The Congress also created a system for the insurance of home loans and mortgages to stimulate the flow of capital into home mortgage lending and thereby facilitate home ownership and improvement and increase home construction. These measures were supplemented by legislation extending financial assistance to local communities for the clearance of slums and the provision of decent housing for families of low income who otherwise would be forced to live in the slums. It is significant that these programs were first established, and have been continued, by the Congress because of their special contributions to home construction and improvement.

In my message of January 6 on the state of the Union, I recommended legislation establishing certain additional programs to help to alleviate the housing shortage and achieve our national objective of a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family. No lesser objective is commensurate with the productive capacity and resources of the country or with the dignity which a true democracy accords the individual citizen. The Congress is now considering measures authorizing these programs. I again recommend the early enactment of this legislation.

But whatever may be the permanent housing functions of the Government, whether they be confined to the existing programs or supplemented as the Congress may determine, they are inevitably interrelated. They require coordination and supervision so that each will render its full contribution without conflict with the performance of other housing functions.

The Government, however, lacks an effective permanent organization to coordinate and supervise the administration of its principal housing programs. These programs and the machinery for their administration were established piecemeal over a period of years. The present consolidation of housing agencies and functions in the National Housing Agency is only temporary. After the termination of title I of the First War Powers Act this Agency will dissolve and the agencies and functions now administered in it will revert to their former locations in the Government. When this occurs, the housing programs of the Government will be scattered among some 13 agencies in 7 departments and independent establishments.

I need hardly point out that such a scattering of these interrelated functions would not only be inefficient and wasteful, but also would seriously impair their usefulness. It would leave the Government without effective machinery for the coordination and supervision of its housing activities and would thrust upon the Chief Executive an impossible burden of administrative supervision.

The grouping of housing functions in one establishment is essential to assure that the housing policies established by the Congress will be carried out with consistency of purpose and a minimum of friction, duplication, and overlapping. A single establishment will unquestionably make for greater efficiency and economy. Moreover, it will simplify the task of the Congress and the Chief Executive by enabling them to deal with one official and hold one person responsible for the general supervision of housing functions, whereas otherwise they will be forced to deal with a number of uncoordinated officers and agencies.

It is vital that a sound permanent organization of housing activities be established at the earliest possible date in order to insure that housing functions will not be scattered among numerous agencies, with consequent confusion and disruption. To avoid this danger and to accomplish the needed changes promptly, it is desirable to employ a reorganization plan under the Reorganization Act of 1945. No other area of Federal activity affords greater opportunity than housing for accomplishing the objectives of the Reorganization Act to group, consolidate, and coordinate functions, reduce the number of agencies, and promote efficiency and economy; and in no other area could the application of the Reorganization Act be more appropriate and necessary.

In brief, this reorganization plan groups nearly all of the permanent housing agencies and functions of the Government, and the remaining emergency housing activities, in a housing and home finance agency with the following constituent operating agencies: (a) A Home Loan Bank Board to administer the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and the functions of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and its members; (b) a Federal Housing Administration with the same functions as now provided by law for that agency; and (c) a Public Housing Administration to take over the functions of the United States Housing Authority and certain remaining emergency housing activities pending the completion of their liquidation. Each constituent agency will possess its individual identity and be responsible for the operation of its program.

By reason of the reorganizations made by the plan, I have found it necessary to include therein provisions for the appointment of (1) an Administrator to head the Housing and Home Finance Agency, (2) the three members of the Home Loan Bank Board, and (3) two Commissioners to head the Federal Housing Administration and the Public Housing Administration, respectively. Each of these officers is to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The plan places in the Housing and Home Finance Administrator the functions heretofore vested in the Federal Loan Administrator and the Federal Works Administrator with respect to the housing agencies and functions formerly administered within the Federal Loan and Federal Works Agencies, together with supervision and direction of certain emergency housing activities for the remainder of their existence.

Under the plan, the Home Loan Bank Board and the Federal Housing Administration will have the same status in, and relation to, the Housing and Home Finance Agency and the Housing and Home Finance Administrator as the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and its related agencies, and the Federal Housing Administration formerly had to the Federal Loan Agency and the Federal Loan Administrator. Similarly, the Public Housing Administration will have the same status in, and relation to, the Housing and Home Finance Agency and the Administrator as the United States Housing Authority formerly had to the Federal Works Agency and the Federal Works Administrator.

Since there are a few housing activities which it is not feasible to place within the Housing and Home Finance Agency because they form integral parts of other broad programs or because of specific limitations in the Reorganization Act of 1945, the plan also creates a National Housing Council on which the Housing and Home Finance Agency and its constituent agencies, and the other departments and agencies having important housing functions, are represented. In this way the plan provides machinery for promoting the most effective use of all the housing functions of the Government, for obtaining consistency between these functions and the general economic and fiscal policies of the Government, and for avoiding duplication and overlapping of activities.

To avoid a hiatus in the administration of housing functions pending the confirmation by the Senate of the new officers provided for by the plan, it permits the designation by the President of appropriate existing housing officials to perform temporarily the functions of these officers. This period should be brief, as I shall promptly submit nominations for the permanent officers.

Under the limitations contained in the Reorganization Act of 1945, the compensation of the Housing and Home Finance Administrator and the other officers provided for by the plan, cannot be fixed at a rate in excess of $10,000 per annum. Both the temporary National Housing Administrator provided for by Executive Order No. 9070 and the Federal Housing Administrator have received salaries of $12,000 a year. I do not consider the salary of $10,000 provided in the plan as compensation commensurate with the responsibilities of the Administrator, the members of the Home Loan Bank Board, and the Commissioners of the other constituent agencies, or consistent with a salary scale which must be paid if the Government is to attract and retain public servants of the requisite caliber. Accordingly, I recommend that the Congress act to increase the salary of the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to $15,000 per annum, and to increase the salaries of the members of the Home Loan Bank Board and the two Commissioners provided for by this plan to $12,000 per annum.

The essential and important difference between the organization established by the plan and the prewar arrangement, to which housing agencies and functions would otherwise automatically revert on the termination of title I of the First War Powers Act, is that under the old arrangement these agencies and functions were scattered among many different establishments primarily dealing with matters other than housing, whereas under the plan the major permanent housing programs are placed in a single establishment concerned exclusively with housing. Thus, the plan effectuates the basic objective enunciated by the Congress in the Reorganization Act of 1945 of grouping agencies and functions by major purpose, and provides the necessary framework for a more effective administration of Federal housing activities in the postwar period.

INTER-AMERICAN MILITARY COOPERATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 271)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I submit herewith for the consideration of the Congress a bill to be entitled "The Inter-American Military Cooperation Act," authorizing a program of military collaboration with other American states, including the training, organization, and equipment of the armed forces of those countries.

I submitted a similar bill to the Seventy-ninth Congress and recommended at that time that the Congress give the bill favorable consideration and enact it. The Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives reported the bill with amendments to the Committee of the Whole House as H. R. 6326. This present draft agrees with H. R. 6326. World developments during the year that has passed give still greater importance to this legislation, and I again ask the Congress to give this bill favorable consideration and enact it.

As stated in my message to the Seventy-ninth Congress, our Army and Navy have maintained cordial relations of collaboration with the armed forces of other American Republics within the framework of the good-neighbor policy. Under authorization of the Congress, military and naval training missions have been sent to various American Republics. During the recent war, even prior to Pearl Harbor, this collaboration was intensively developed on the basis of inter-American undertakings for hemisphere defense. Training activities were expanded, and under the Lend-Lease Act limited amounts of military and naval equipment were made available to the other American Republics as part of the hemisphere-defense program. Forces from two of the American Republics participated in combat overseas, and others joined in the defense of the shores and seas of the Americas at a time when the danger of invasion of our continents was all too great.

The American Republics have assumed new responsibilities, for their mutual defense and for the maintenance of peace, in the Act of Chapultepec and the Charter of the United Nations. The close collaboration of the American Republics provided for in the Act of Chapultepec, the proposed treaty to be based upon that act, and other basic inter-American documents, make it highly desirable to standardize military organization, training methods, and equipment as has been recommended by the Inter-American Defense Board.

I can find no better way to describe the intent and purpose of this bill than to repeat my message to the Congress of May 6, 1946.

Under the bill transmitted herewith, the Army and Navy, acting in conjunction with the Department of State, would be permitted to continue in the future a general program of collaboration with the armed forces of our sister republics with a view to facilitating the adoption of similar technical standards. Certain additional training activities, not covered by existing legislation, would be permitted. The President would also be authorized to transfer military and naval equipment to the governments of other American states by sale or other method.

The collaboration authorized by the bill could be extended also to Canada, whose cooperation with the United States in matters affecting their common defense is of particular importance.

A special responsibility for leadership rests upon the United States in this matter because of the preponderant technical, economic, and military resources of this country. There is a reasonable and limited purpose for which arms and military equipment can rightfully be made available to the other American states. This Government will not, I am sure, in any way approve of, nor will it participate in, the indiscriminate or unrestricted distribution of armaments, which would only contribute to a useless and burdensome armaments race. It does not desire that operations under this bill shall raise unnecessarily the quantitative level of armament in the American Republics. To this end the bill specifies that amounts of nonstandard material shall be sought in exchange for United States equipment.

It is my intention that any operations under this bill, which the Congress may authorize, shall be in every way consistent with the wording and spirit of the United Nations Charter. The bill has been drawn up primarily to enable the American nations t carry out their obligations to cooperate in the maintenance of inter-American peace and security under the Charter and the Act of Chapultepec which is intended to be supplanted by a permanent inter-American treaty.

It is incumbent upon this Government to see that military developments in which we have a part are guided toward the maintenance of peace and security and that military and naval establishments are not encouraged beyond what security considerations require. In this connection the bill provides that operations thereunder are subject to any international agreement for the regulation of armaments to which the United States may become a party. In addition, provision will be made for continuing coordination of the actual operations under the legislation with developing plans and policy in the field of armaments regulation.

In executing this program it will be borne in mind, moreover, that it is the policy of this Government to encourage the establishment of sound economic conditions in the other American Republics which will contribute to the improvement of living standards and the advancement of social and cultural welfare. Such conditions are a prerequisite to international peace and security. Operations under the proposed legislation will be conducted with full and constant awareness that no encouragement should be given to the imposition upon other people of any useless burden of armaments which would handicap the economic improvement which all countries so strongly desire. The execution of the program authorized by the bill will also be guided by a determination to guard against placing weapons of war in the hands of any groups who may use them to oppose the peaceful and democratic principles to which the United States and other American nations have so often subscribed.

In entering into agreements with other American states for the provision of training and equipment as authorized by the bill, the purposes of this program will be made clear to each of the other governments.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 23, 1947.

[Enclosure: Draft of bill.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter and other data.

FOOD SHOULD NOT BE WASTED

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, on May 22, I introduced a bill H. R. 3585. The purpose of the bill is to prevent further destruction of human food. In the first place such waste and destruction is absolutely wrong from every conceivable angle. In the second place nothing can do more or make any greater contribution to a public disapproval of the whole support program. The support program is agriculture's bill of rights. This bill of rights should not be jeopardized by the antics of people that should know better than do things that will kill the program.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the enactment of this act the Department of Agriculture or any officer, employee, or agent thereof shall not destroy or authorize the destruction of any food or fiber which is fit for human consumption or human use and which is now owned or hereafter acquired by the Department of Agriculture or Commodity Credit Corporation.

SEC. 2. In the case of any food or fiber fit for human consumption or use which is now owned or hereafter acquired by the Department of Agriculture or Commodity Credit Corporation and which cannot be disposed of pursuant to any other law, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to donate such food to charitable and public-welfare institutions, needy individuals, and to State, county, and municipal welfare agencies.

It is hoped that this bill will have early consideration and unanimous approval.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on Thursday next to consider bills from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object to the request, may I ask the gentleman if it is the purpose to let the vote on the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill go over into next week, or to finish the bill tomorrow?

Mr. HALLECK. If the gentleman will withdraw his reservation of objection, I had it in mind to ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to explain what is expected in that regard.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

PROGRAM FOR THE REST OF THIS WEEK

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to explain the program for the rest of the week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, as the request just granted indicates, it now will be in order to consider bills from the Committee on the District of Columbia on Thursday of this week if the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill is theretofore disposed of. Of course our first task is to dispose of the appropriation bill. It is my hope that the debate on the bill may proceed for such time as is necessary this afternoon and that we then begin to read the bill for amendment. If there is indication that we cannot finish that bill tomorrow evening, coming in at 12 o'clock tomorrow, it is my idea that we come in at an earlier hour tomorrow in the hope that the appropriation bill can be disposed of tomorrow. It is my hope then that we take up on Thursday the two investigatory resolutions that have been programed for that day and in addition take care of some matters from the Committee on the District of Columbia which I understand are quite important but not particularly controversial.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As the gentleman knows, Memorial Day comes on Friday. A good many of the Members, including myself, have made engagements with the understanding, of course, that the Agriculture appropriation bill would be concluded by tomorrow night. Unfortunately, the death of a very good colleague changed the program, which is the reason I ask if there is a possibility that final action on this bill may be deferred until next week.

Mr. HALLECK. I am quite sure the gentleman would discover in the remarks I have made a recognition of the very situation about which he is speaking. I have announced that there will be no session Friday. It is hoped that we can go over from Thursday to Monday, in view of the fact that many Members have personal obligations and commitments and matters that they want to take care of over Memorial Day, as do people generally in the country. I can see no reason why we cannot carry out the program I have outlined and in that way dispose of this very important measure that is before us by tomorrow night and likewise dispose of other important matters on Thursday, matters necessary to be considered and about which there is urgency but as to which individually there might not be too much interest as far as the Members are concerned.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. How much general debate will we have on this appropriation bill?

Mr. HALLECK. No agreement has been reached on that. That is up to the members of the Committee on Appropriations having the matter in charge. I have spoken to some of them about it. As I understand, it is expected that the general debate will proceed today, and I take it that opportunity will be given to anyone who wants to make a statement in respect to the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. I am merely trying to find out whether general debate is to be concluded this afternoon.

Mr. HALLECK. I would say by all means it should be concluded this afternoon. As I said, I trust that not only can general debate be concluded but also that the reading of the bill may begin because, as the gentleman well knows, it is when the bill is being read that we generally find the greatest desire for time to speak.

Mr. RANKIN. As far as I am concerned, I would be willing to start reading it in the beginning and debate the various amendments as we go along.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mark Sullivan.

Mr. MORRISON (at the request of Mr. LARCADE) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. POAGE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS, 1948

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 218 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3601) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes, all points of order against the bill or any provisions contained therein are hereby waived.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-seven Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 64]

Andrews, N. Y.	Hébert	Norrell
Auchincloss	Heffernan	Peterson
Bender	Jenkins, Pa.	Pfeifer
Bennett, Mich.	Keefe	Phillips, Tenn.
Bland	Kennedy	Ploeser

Gary	Marcantonio	Weichel
Gifford	Merrow	West
Gwinn, N. Y.	Mitchell	Youngblood
Hand	Morrison
Harness, Ind.	Nixon
Hart	Nodar

The SPEAKER. On this roll call, 353 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs may sit this afternoon during general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and to include extraneous matter.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address recently made by him.

Mr. CLASON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GAVIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the annual meeting of the Independent Petroleum Association.

Mr. SPRINGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances in the RECORD and include a newspaper article and a speech.

Mr. JAVITS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. HAGEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by David Lawrence.

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include an article.

Mr. KEFAUVER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. DORN (at the request of Mr. McCORMACK) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a telegram.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial by Walter Lippmann.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by the late Honorable Fred Bradley, of Michigan.

Mr. MURDOCK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech he made in Chicago last Sunday.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS, 1948

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 50 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. Speaker, I now yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution waives points of order which might be made against the annual appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture, H. R. 3601, which is on the calendar for consideration today.

Mr. Speaker, this rule is made necessary because of certain provisions contained in this appropriation bill which are subject to points of order. It is obvious that points of order will be made unless this rule is adopted. There is opposition to the rule because of a clash over jurisdiction between two very important and powerful committees of this House, the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Agriculture. The Committee on Appropriations has seen fit to include in the annual appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture several sections which may be considered legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore subject to points of order. I do not know that all of these items are controversial, but the Committee on Agriculture feels that the bill contains legislation over which it has jurisdiction and is opposed to this rule waiving points of order. The Committee on Appropriations defends itself by stating that these are items which relate to appropriations and the allocation of funds. The committee concedes that several sections of the bill are subject to points of order. However, in line with precedents established in previous years, the Appropriations Committee asked for this rule. I might state that it has been customary to adopt similar rules on these annual agricultural appropriation bills, so there is nothing new in this procedure.

I will not take the time to discuss these items which are subject of this controversy. That will be done by members of the Committee on Agriculture and the members of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHENOWETH. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. HALLECK. I might say to the gentleman that as the membership generally knows, I served on the Rules Committee for a number of years under the chairmanship of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]. No one has been more conscientious than I have been in trying to protect the prerogatives, the responsibilities, and the powers of the legislative committees. However, as the gentleman has pointed out, we very frequently found it desirable to report from the Rules Committee, rules such as this, in order that matters necessary to be taken care of could be taken care of. So certainly, as the gentleman has said, this proposition is nothing new. It follows many, many precedents that have been established. As I understand it, on this particular occasion, it undertakes to deal with matters that are of some consequence, but which are of urgency also. Should it not also be pointed out that any of these items would be subject to amendment to strike them out? Certainly it could be argued, as that point is reached, the prerogatives of the legislative committee had been invoked, and that possibly the matter would be better handled by action by the legislative committee. What I am saying is that I hope this rule is adopted in order that we may proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I appreciate the observations made by the distinguished majority leader. I want to supplement what he has said by saying that if the rule is adopted, the House is not precluded from passing upon these items which are subject to a point of order. In other words, if this rule is adopted, the House will have the opportunity to vote on each of the items involved in this controversy. If the rule is not adopted, then these provisions will no doubt be stricken from the bill on points of order, in which event the House will have no opportunity to consider and pass upon the merits of these proposals. I therefore urge the adoption of the rule so that each Member may have the privilege of voting on these items as they are presented.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 12 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 12 minutes.

MOST RUTHLESS RULE IN 40 YEARS OF SERVICE

Mr. SABATH. This rule which has just been presented by my dear friend and colleague, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CHENOWETH] is in my belief the most ruthless and rigid, yes, the most outrageous, ever reported in the 40 years of my service in Congress.

The bill which this rule makes in order represents a complete and tragic disregard of the best interests of agriculture and of our country, a powerful and important segment of the American economy and American society. The bill intentionally violates organic farm legislation duly passed by the Congress.

The Republican members of the Committee on Appropriations, owing allegiance to none except the economic royalists who are the masters of the Republican party, have constituted themselves a dictatorship, a political and legislative obligarchy determined to rule or ruin.

They are presenting this vicious program without regard to right or to logic, or to the welfare of the farmers of our country. They are trying to jam this program through, without even giving the elected Representatives of the people an opportunity to express an opinion or to amend the bill.

WHAT A DIFFERENCE!

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have brought in rules which waived points of order; nevertheless I have criticized the Committee on Appropriations for presenting legislation in appropriation bills in violation of the standing rules of the House.

But what a difference, Mr. Speaker!

Those rules, Mr. Speaker, made in order the consideration of legislation designed to help American agriculture, not to ruin it. The legislation now before us will deprive the American farmer and American agriculture of the benefits of laws the Democrats passed in their behalf.

That is the difference between those rules I presented and this Republican gag rule. At a time when farmers were losing their farms by foreclosure, and those who had not already lost them were facing ruin under the staggering burden of 6 and 8 percent interest, we passed legislation which made it possible for them to survive. This bill would destroy many of those very laws.

CITY WORKERS PROSPER WHEN FARMERS PROSPER

Although I represent a purely city district, and have for over 40 years, I know that when the farmers are prosperous the city workers are prosperous. When the farmer is making a living he buys the tools for his farm and the clothes for his family the city worker makes, and he creates business and jobs and business is aided and work is made for the laborers.

Therefore, I have supported all progressive legislation to help keep farmers prosperous. This bill will keep farmers poor and eliminate city jobs.

I wish to call attention to some of the things I feel should be taken into consideration.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am amazed by one of the arguments made by the distinguished majority leader in support of the rule, that if the House votes for the rule we then have the privilege of striking the matter out or moving to amend it. I have never heard that argument advanced before. That means that we are permitting organic law to be violated by this report when no emergency exists we then put the House in the position where the Members, who have already passed the organic law, try to strike it out or to have to offer amendments to strike out matter which could then be stricken out on a point of order because of the bill violating organic law. It is the first time I ever heard that argument made on any rule.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman, as is always the case, is right when he makes that statement.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. For a question, not for a speech.

Mr. HALLECK. The distinguished minority whip has referred to me, and the gentleman from Illinois in his usual gracious manner has commended the gentleman from Massachusetts for being right in his observation, but the gentleman from Massachusetts was as wrong as it is possible for anyone to be. All I said was, and I ask him to dispute it if he sees fit, or the gentleman from Illinois who for many years was chairman of the Rules Committee, that if this rule is adopted, when the bill is read, any item in here that will be subject to a point of order if this rule is not adopted would be subject to an amendment offered in the committee to strike it out.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The answer to that is we have never employed that practice. If we do that, then we are making the Appropriations Committee a super-House. All the Appropriations Committee would have to do is to come in at any time and report a rule depriving the Members of the opportunity to make a point of order.

Mr. HALLECK. Let me make this response to what the gentleman from Massachusetts has said. He recognizes by the statement he made that my statement is correct, that an amendment will lie to strike out the item that otherwise would be subject to a point of order. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I have served here under his and other people's leadership when my side was in the minority and I have seen amendments offered to strike out items that otherwise would have been subject to a point of order except for the adoption of a rule in identical terms with this one. That is the reason this is not a precedent and that is the reason this rule should be adopted.

Mr. SABATH. I would like to make this observation. I have criticized the Appropriations Committee for bringing in legislation on an appropriation bill depriving the committees having jurisdiction of their rights and privileges. I have criticized that practice. The difference between those rules that were brought in when I was chairman of the Rules Committee and this rule is that those rules permitted amendments to be offered which would help the farmers, while this rule deprives the farmers of their rights and privileges if this bill should pass and is against their interest.

Now you are attempting to minimize the harm that this bill will do. With this kind of legislation you are going on record that you are against the best interests of the farmers. I have here in my hand a telegram from a gentleman with whom I have frequently disagreed, when he opposed legislation in the interest of labor, or supported legislation designed to do to organized labor what this bill would do to agriculture.

This telegram comes to me from Mr. Edward A. O'Neal, president of the National Farm Bureau. Time will not permit me to read the telegram here on the floor but I am inserting it at this point in my remarks, and when you read it here you must come to the conclusion that the objections he lodges against this bill are logical and true, and I am sure you will recognize the deep resentment felt by the Farm Bureau, for this legislation is condemned in the strongest language they could use:

FARMERS DEEPLY SHOCKED

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 25, 1947.

Hon. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

Farmers deeply shocked at several recommendations of House Appropriations Committee on Agricultural Appropriations. Our organization offered sincere aggressive support for real constructive economy by eliminating unnecessary personnel, excessive expenditures and duplication of services. But we asked committee not to cut heart out of farm program. Instead committee made most of savings at expense of farmers and vital farm program and failed to require reduction in many badly overstaffed agencies. Farmers are especially indignant over cut in 1947 $300,000,000 AAA conservation program specifically approved by Congress last year to $165,000,000, thereby breaking faith with millions of farmers and also complete elimination of program in 1948. Reduction of administrative expenses to fifteen million will make it impossible for State and county PMA offices to carry out this program successfully and to handle commodity loans and other price support functions vital to millions of farmers. Farmers in every section are alarmed over complete elimination of section 32 funds for surplus disposal which Congress has approved as permanent appropriations. Farmers also greatly concerned over failure to provide even first year allotment of research funds approved under Hope-Flannagan Act which passed almost unanimously last year. We favor strict economy but strongly protest foregoing actions as false economy and breaking faith with farmers. These vital programs were adopted by bipartisan votes in Congress. Millions of farmers are looking to you to rectify these injustices and keep faith with farmers above party by providing these vitally needed funds.

EDW. A. O'NEAL,
President, American Farm Bureau Federation.

I have received, and I know that all of you have received, hundreds of other communications condemning this vicious unjustifiable rule which will repeal many laws enacted by the Democrats and condemning the cuts made in the appropriation bills. I do not see why we should seriously consider this effort to save a few dollars when the first page of the financial section of the New York Times for Sunday, May 25, can headline a lead story in these words: "Industrial profit at record level—942 companies in 79 fields earned $3,656,933,912 last year, 34-percent rise over 1945—huge backlogs unbroken."

GREATEST ANNUAL RETURNS

This newspaper article starts out by saying:

Private enterprise in the United States in 1946, first full year of peacetime activity since the war's end, yielded one of the greatest annual returns in the Nation's history.

The writer goes on to discuss the different industrial groups and their profits. Here is a paragraph which means something to the housewife and to you:

Consumer-goods industries that were able to maintain a fairly high level of production made the best showings. Percentage profit increases of some of these reporting groups were: Furniture, 206 percent; home appliances, 98 percent; food, 43 percent; baking 146 percent; liquor, 120 percent; meat packing, 97 percent; silk and rayon, 178 percent; cotton, 378 percent; apparel, 128 percent; and tobacco, 46 percent.

By industries, here are the dividends reported for the 79 fields studied:

	1946	1945
Heavy metals and allied (215 companies)	$533,314,703	$414,773,404

RETAIL SALES UP AGAIN

Here is another paragraph on dividends from the same issue of the New York Times:

Dividend payments in the first 3 months of 1947 were about 23 percent higher than in the corresponding period last year, according to United Business Service. Of 661 New York Stock Exchange issues on which dividends were paid, more than half increased their payments over the same quarter of 1946, the UBS reported.

In all the papers you will find column after column in the financial pages showing how companies are paying dividends, not only current and regular dividends but extra dividends and stock dividends and even back dividends.

Another headline in the Times reads: "1946 Retail Trade 'Best in History'—Net Profits 122.8 percent Over 1945 Far Outstrip Other Years, Times Survey Shows."

Here are just a few paragraphs from the story:

(By Thomas F. Conroy)

That 1946 was the most favorable year in the history of retailing is fully borne out in the complete figures covering last year's operations which now have been issued by leading retail organizations.

Net profits far outstripped those of preceding year, rising 122.8 percent over 1945, while sales were 32 percent higher, according to a compilation of the annual reports of 59 retail companies made yesterday by the New York Times. Sales of these concerns exceeded $9,466,000,000.

The mail order and chain store companies had the largest gains in both profits and sales. The department stores were not far behind. Specialty shops were more affected by the wave of apparel and fur mark-downs which featured the fall season and their increases were not as large as those of the other two classifications.

Comparative figures on sales and profits of the companies included in the survey follow, with the number of companies indicated in parentheses:

MAIL ORDER, CHAIN STORES (22)

	1946	1945	Percent change
Sales	$6,366,950,237	$4,781,269,486	+33.2
Net profit	330,995,586	148,591,093	+122.8

DEPARTMENT STORES (30)

Sales	$2,964,680,814	$2,267,343,484	+30.8
Net profit	143,181,951	66,335,935	+115.8

SPECIALTY SHOPS (7)

Sales	$135,014,305	$117,694,542	+14.7
Net profit	7,313,737	4,234,309	+72.7

GRAND TOTAL (59)

Sales	$9,466,645,356	$7,166,307,512	+32.0
Net profit	481,491,274	219,161,337	+119.7

Lowering of Federal corporation taxes from their wartime peaks was the outstanding factor in the sharp rise in retail net profits. In many instances the reduction from the previous year in provision for Federal income taxes ranged around 35 percent, which represented a heavy addition to net. Allied Stores Corp., the leading department-store chain, for example, in 1946, had $30,903,752 in profits before Federal income taxes, made provision of $12,525,000 for such taxes, and had a net after taxes of $18,378,752. In 1945 the comparative figures were $2,470,401, $19,100,000, and $8,370,401, respectively.

I have here in my hand other reports from newspapers which show the unprecedented prosperity of business and industry, of mining, of farming. Pick up any daily newspaper with a financial section, or the Wall Street Journal and other business and financial journals, or the business reporting services like Dun & Bradstreet or the National City Bank News Letter, and the evidence strikes you on every hand.

I am sure that all of you saw in the papers last week another story saying that the increase in retail business all over the country was 12 percent, and not just 4 percent to 11 percent as I stated on the floor before those final estimates were published.

THREATENS OUR GREATEST CROP OF ALL

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two additional minutes.

I feel that when the country is prosperous we should not deprive the farmers of their opportunity of continuing to contribute to the national prosperity. Therefore I feel strongly we should not by our act here take away the assistance provided by a Democratic Congress which has enabled the farmers to become prosperous and contented and self-respecting American citizens equal in every way to their city brethren, as they always were in industry and good citizenship.

I myself have at all times aided the passage of beneficial legislation which has helped the farmer to lift himself out of his misery and want and insecurity to today's prosperity.

But this bill would repeal section 32 of the act of 1935, and worst of all by reducing the school-lunch fund, when only last year the Congress affirmatively passed the basic legislation for it, will endanger our most important of all crops, our young people, our boys and girls, by taking away from many of them the extra hot lunches at low cost provided under the law.

When you look back 12 or 14 years, you know what the lot of the poor farmer was. It was the legislation that we passed that put them on their feet, and they have been prosperous ever since. With this legislation you arrest their efforts and you arrest the prosperity of our Nation.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. No; I cannot yield, sir. I am sorry.

LOAN SHARKS AND HEARTLESS BANKERS

Are we, Mr. Speaker, going to turn the farmers back to the tender mercies of the loan sharks and the heartless bankers?

Are we going to restore the bankers' private tax of high interest, high insurance, high discounts, and precipitate a new flood of foreclosures and farm failures, and start a new generation of lost farmers on the road to nowhere?

If you do not remember the sad story of 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, and 1933, the farm strikes, the moratorium laws, the dumped milk, the forced auctions broken up by outraged farmers protecting their own, go back to the files of the daily papers of those years.

In your own office take down your copy of Agricultural Statistics and watch the changing picture of farm income, farm prices, interest, taxes, mortgage debt, and ask if you want to turn the clock back.

Never before in history have farmers made so much in proportion to what they have to spend. God knows prices are high, far too high, in my opinion; but at least the man who toils with his hands, who spends long hours in the fields and with his herds and orchards is making a decent living. He has a profitable spread between his expenses and his income. He is not ground down by a mortgage on which the interest just keeps up with his payments until a crop failure, when he loses everything.

PENNY-WISE, POUND-FOOLISH

This penny-wise, pound-foolish economy embodied in this bill will just play into the hands of the same Wall Street sharpshooters who have been hammering down the prices of sound investment stocks on the market.

They do not care where they make their money or who they hurt. One day these gambling manipulators will be selling stocks short to wipe out the equity of thousands of small investors; the next day they will be gambling with farm products on the commodities exchanges; and another day they will be speculating in farm lands, mortgages, and bonds, all to the detriment of the national economy and the best interests of the country, and bound to affect adversely the hard-working dirt farmer, and not only the farmer but the Nation.

It can be truly said of the farmers who have been used by the Republicans, and have to a great extent supported and aided the Republican party, "They who continue to serve the devil well, with hell he will repay."

VOTE AGAINST DRASTIC RULE

In view of all this, and more that I could say if time but permitted, I feel it is our duty to vote down this outrageous rule whereby the Committee on Appropriations has assumed a legislative jurisdiction which is not theirs, and is attempting not only to deprive the appropriate legislative committees of the right and privilege and power of bringing positive legislation to the floor which is properly theirs, but to repeal laws passed by previous Congresses.

Any member of the House who votes for this rule is voting against the farmers. If any Member votes for this bill and ties his own hands, and then later tries to tell his people he voted for amendments to restore any of the vicious cuts in the Agriculture Department budget, I warn the people of his district right now that he is falsifying his position to them.

This is worse than a gag rule. It is autocracy such as has not been seen on this floor since the days of Speaker Joe Cannon.

It is legislative tyranny of the worst kind.

Above all, it is your political suicide.

For your own interest, if you will not for the national interest, cast your vote against this drastic rule.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include articles and statistics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I regret to find myself on this occasion in the position of opposition to the distinguished majority leader, the Rules Committee, and my distinguished friend from Illinois, the chairman of the Sub-committee on Agricultural Appropriations, but it is the same position that I have taken on many previous occasions, and the only position I think any member of a legislative committee of the House can take if we are going to maintain the integrity of the legislative committees.

It is not necessary, of course, to adopt this rule in order to bring the agricultural appropriation bill before the House. It is not necessary to have any rule to bring that bill before the House. If the rule is voted down, the only effect will be that the bill will be subject to points of order against legislative provisions which it contains.

I may say that although I have seen other appropriation bills brought into the House under a rule which permitted legislative provisions, I cannot recall that I have ever seen a bill which contained legislative provisions of the importance that are contained in this particular piece of legislation.

I am speaking now not only as a Member of the House but as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and by direction of that committee to appear and speak for the committee in opposition to this rule. There are in this bill at least six provisions that are pure legislation. Perhaps there are more. They are all important matters of legislation, matters that should be considered by the Committee on Agriculture and matters that certainly deserve more consideration than the Appropriations Committee could possibly give them.

If you will look in the hearings you will find that these matters, although they are important legislation, were not considered by the Committee on Appropriations in open hearings. They were considered in executive sessions. The Congress is entitled to have more information on these matters of legislation than can possibly be secured in the debate upon this bill. All of these matters are matters that would require, if they were to be considered properly, hearings of some extent and duration on the part of the legislative committees.

In one respect certainly this bill goes further than any other appropriation bill has ever gone in the way of legislation, in that it repeals a permanent appropriation. I am referring now to section 32 of the Triple-A Act, which provides that each year there shall be set aside one-third of the customs revenues to be used in support of agriculture in the way of expanding consumption at home and abroad, in diverting agricultural products to other uses, and in supporting the prices of agricultural commodities. That is permanent legislation. It has been on the books for more than 10 years. Yet under this bill that appropriation is rescinded and the money is directed to be held in the Treasury.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. On the item to which the gentleman has referred, I might state that when that was approved unanimously by both sides of the aisle as being one instrument that might help in dealing with surplus commodities, both seasonal surpluses and national surpluses of farm products. I concur in what the gentleman has said, that this is an item that should receive more consideration.

Mr. HOPE. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for that statement. It is true, as he said, that this act was reported out unanimously by the committee. It has been on the books for more than 10 years. Its value has never been questioned.

I do not believe there has been any provision of the Agricultural Adjustment Act or any part of our general agricultural policy which has been of greater assistance to agriculture during that time.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Is it not a fact that if the money appropriated for the purpose intended by the act is not used, then the money goes back into the United States Treasury, and is thus saved to the country?

Mr. HOPE. That is true. No one can say at this moment how much of that money may be needed during the coming year. If none is needed, it all goes back into the Treasury. All we do if we keep the rescission provision in the bill is to make a paper saving because if the money is not used it goes back into the Treasury in any event. But no one knows what we may expect in the way of agricultural surpluses in the next year. There may be minor commodities or there may be important commodities with reference to which it may be necessary to take action under the provisions of this legislation.

But if we adopt the rule and retain in the bill this legislative provision, that would be impossible. But I do not want to say anything more about the merits of the matter. What I am speaking about is the legislative integrity of the House because under the law the Committee on Appropriations cannot legislate, and the legislative committees cannot appropriate. If we violate that principle by adopting this rule, then we are establishing a precedent which will be cited in the future when further attempts are made to undermine the integrity of the legislative committees.

What we are in effect doing is setting up the Committee on Appropriations as a great super committee of the House of Representatives which will undermine the authority, activity, and importance of the legislative committees.

When I say this I am speaking not only for the Committee on Agriculture but for every legislative committee of the House.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I want to comment on the remarks made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and also on what the minority whip had to say. When they were in control of the House they brought in similar gag rules which waived all points of order. Our committee tried to perfect legislation so such procedure could be avoided. We did pass legislation which is now law so that the practice followed by our side in this respect does not differ at all from that of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] did when he was chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOPE. The position taken by the Committee on Agriculture is the position which has always been taken by that committee when the Committee on Appropriations on previous occasions has brought in a bill containing legislative provisions. I think I may say with all deference to this particular subcommittee that no subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations has brought in more bills which contained legislative provisions. It seems to be a habit with that committee, a habit which I thought we had put an end to a few years ago when we had a show-down on that proposition and the Committee on Rules finally refused an application for a rule.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I am glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. HOEVEN. Does the gentleman feel that if this practice continues there will be no need to have a Committee on Agriculture in the House of Representatives?

Mr. HOPE. There is no question at all but what every time we adopt a rule of this kind we undermine all the legislative committees and take a step toward making the Committee on Appropriations a big super committee.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK], a member of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, that the pending proposal is detrimental to sound and desirable agricultural legislation could have no finer witness than the gentleman from Kansas who has just taken his seat. I am not able to go back 40 years, as my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has done, but I can go back far enough in service on the Rules Committee to state just a little about the background of this situation.

In the course of the recovery program, sometimes referred to as the New Deal, various and sundry agricultural programs were established for which there was no specific authority in law. I might mention the Rural Electrification Administration or I might mention the school lunches or I might mention some 69 other important items.

As we went along the Appropriations Committee would come from time to time before the Rules Committee and ask us for a rule waiving points of order on agricultural bills because of the absence of any legislation specifically establishing those programs. We worked along with that from year to year, and at the same time we kept threatening to give the Committee on Agriculture a legislative spanking if they did not get busy and supply the necessary legislation, which was complained about continuously by the minority party in those years. I think some of the distinguished members of the Committee on Agriculture were before us when we talked this over. Then, finally, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] has said, we served somewhat of an ultimatum and told them they would have to get legislation or we would quit granting rules waiving points of order. We did get legislation establishing some 71 of these programs, and that fixed the policy of the Congress on this question. Now we are proposing to give them a legislative spanking because they have done what we threatened to spank them for not doing. You are not only headed for a procedure that is detrimental to agriculture if you adopt this rule—and the only reason I am speaking is to get my voice in the RECORD against it—but you are heading into legislative chaos and you are simply vesting in the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Agriculture, down in a little closed room somewhere, the power to determine the agricultural policy of the Congress, insofar as a committee may do so, without the people who are interested having any opportunity at all to be heard and present their case.

There is a great stack of telegrams on my desk that have a very vital ring. If I were to look over on the majority side, I would be disposed to say a dangerous ring. I had to wire them back that, if the procedure was adopted, the policy of this Congress with regard to agriculture would have been changed in many vital respects, without the people who are most directly concerned having any opportunity whatever to present their views. If that is what you want to do, this is the way to do it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK] has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, since I am a Democrat, I doubt that the Members of the majority body are going to be governed by what I say when I speak against this rule. I would like to call attention, however, to the fact that the issue is whether the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who is chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, is to write the agricultural policy of the Republican Party. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois will tell you he has never been in favor of section 32. Section 32 funds are repealed under this act. Time after time in this committee it has been brought up, and I am sure he will agree with this, that he felt that provision should not be made for carrying on those activities of the Department of Agriculture under section 32, but that appropriations should be made annually by the Appropriations Committee. Of course, that would come under the jurisdiction and control of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois and would permit him to largely control the agricultural policy of his party and therefore of the Congress.

Last year we had a bill passed in this Congress which became law, which provides for the control of Government corporations. The Commodity Credit Corporation is one of those corporations, and it went to the committee of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN]. But this year we find that our good friend—and he is very persuasive and a fine fellow—we find that the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations has gone to the chairman of the whole committee and taken over Commodity Credit Corporation, one of the corporations that would go ordinarily and did last year to the other committee. We find that this distinguished gentleman has also taken over half of the Farm Credit Administration, which also belonged to the committee of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN]. I say to you that if this committee this year is permitted—and I am a member of that committee—if they are permitted to repeal section 32 of this law for 1 year that in effect it is repealed and it is gone. This committee takes unto itself the power to stop the flow of those funds, money that is set aside under the basic law to the credit of agriculture. If you are not going to be permitted to use it as it was recommended by the budget, let us transfer those funds to the Commodity Credit Corporation for its use in carrying out this program so that the American farmer will receive the credit for this money which under the basic law is set aside to help him through his problems and to offset the disadvantages of bringing agricultural products into this country in competition with his own. I made the motion in the committee but was overridden. And there again they turned down my efforts to retain those funds which have meant more to agriculture than perhaps any other piece of agricultural legislation.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. My colleague on the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Agriculture well knows that I was with him in opposing asking for a rule upon this particular bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. WHITTEN. That is true. The distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN] and other members of the subcommittee opposed the granting of the rule. It is true that in times past we have had rules on bills containing agricultural legislation from the Appropriations Committee, but I wish to call your attention to the fact that in each of those cases we had no legislation for the Farm Security Administration, we had no legislation for the school-lunch program, and in practically every instance—and, in fact, in every instance I recall—the chairman of the subcommittee was joined by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in asking and in obtaining a rule to bring into this Congress legislation under which this matter could be considered.

But I say to you that this bill will reflect that there is a tremendous difference between the attitude of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois and the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] as to what is for the best interests of agriculture; and I will say that if this rule is adopted, then you are forsaking the ordinary legislative processes and saying that the chairman of this subcommittee shall fix the policy of the Republican Party with reference to agriculture. This bill reflects that attitude here today because certainly I know that the members of the Agriculture Legislative Committee would never bring into this Congress a bill to repeal section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. If you will study the uses of those funds for the last 10 years, you will see that in the case of wheat, in the period around 1937, when the granaries of this country were so filled with surplus wheat that the farmers could not even store the wheat they gathered, this is the fund that bailed them out. This is the fund that bailed out the poultry producers and the producers of walnuts and raisins, the producers of various other crops throughout the country, including cotton from my own area. Now, to adopt this rule means that you are permitting the distinguished gentleman from Illinois to write the party ticket of the Republican Party—a ticket that says you are repealing that act and taking away those funds—and I say that is not in accord with the desires of the majority of you men on that side of the aisle.

If you defeat this rule, you defeat the efforts of the gentleman from Illinois to repeal section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, yet if you adopt the rule, you cannot be heard to say that you did not make it possible for section 32 to be repealed. You will have contributed to the destruction of one of the greatest provisions in the law for handling surplus agricultural products—a provision which has saved the wheat farmers, the poultry growers, other grain producers, and cotton farmers. The responsibility for destroying that great program will rest on those of you who approve this rule.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding—and if my understanding is incorrect I wish to be corrected—the Committee on Agriculture are unanimously opposed to the adoption of this rule. That action was taken at a meeting either this morning or yesterday. In view of that fact it seems rather strange that we witness what is attempted in this appropriation bill. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], one of the most respected Members of the House, whether he is a member of the majority party or the minority party, and he demands the respect of us on our side, should be the spokesman of his party in this branch on matters concerning agriculture.

I think the RECORD should show that anyone who votes for this rule is voting against the interests of the farmer and later if they vote for the rule and then try to tell the farmers of their district, "Why, I voted for amendments to increase the appropriation," they are engaging in what might properly be termed "political hypocrisy."

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I have served on the Committee on Agriculture for more than 20 years. In all those years in dealing with agricultural problems we have not engaged in partisan politics. I do not like to see the gentleman trying to inject partisan politics into this issue.

Mr. MCCORMACK. The gentleman is entirely mistaken because I am following the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], who is a Republican; so there is no partisan politics in my position. The gentleman, of course, is a very adroit politician himself and he has the very pleasant habit of trying to accuse others of motives which they do not entertain.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Is the gentleman for the rule?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Then I am for the gentleman. And so the gentleman is with me. He is playing politics at that rate.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Let me go ahead. I only have a few minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] tried to justify a vote for the rule by saying, "You can amend later on." But you are tying your hands. A lot of these provisions can be stricken out on a point of order and these are provisions in the bill that change the organic law, that came out of the Committee on Agriculture, passed this branch and the other branch, and became law. The distinction between the rules of the past waiving points of order and this one is that invariably in the past it was where the Appropriations Committee made an appropriation for some activity for which there was no authority in law. This is a rule repealing in whole or in part existing law or parts of existing organic law. There is a marked difference between the rules reported out in the past making in order an activity in an appropriation bill for which there was no authority. This type of rule repeals in part or in whole some of the important provisions relating to agriculture.

Let me show you how far the Appropriations Committee went in its attempt to do a job and there is no question but what there is a job being done on agriculture in this bill. I call your attention to the National School Lunch Act provision, which concerns cities too, reading:

> To enable the Secretary to carry out the provisions of the National School Lunch Act of June 4, 1946, $45,000,000.

They cut it from $75,000,000 to $45,000,000. But what did they do further? Did they stop there? No.

> Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for matching funds from sources within the States derived from the sale of lunches.

In other words, whoever in the Appropriations Committee conceived that and whoever voted for it not only had in mind a sharp reduction in the school-lunch program but they went further and they did a job on the school-lunch program because the little amount paid for school lunches has been used in the past as a part of the State's fund, and the organic act permits it to be used in that way, and that is matching the Federal fund.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. May I point out the legislative features of this appropriation bill deprive agriculture of about $183,000,000 without giving the Legislative Committee of the House any opportunity at all to even discuss the matter with farm leaders and farm officials of the Department of Agriculture.

It seems to me that it is a very important matter when legislation of this kind can be brought in on an appropriation bill and the farmers of this country deprived of a substantial sum of money to the tune of $183,000,000.

Mr. MCCORMACK. And it produces great harm to the conservation program, to the price-control-support program, to the veterans' program, to the small farmers, to the lunch-school program, as well as other activities.

I might make this brief observation. It is rather interesting that every time I take the floor I am accused of politics, and when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] takes the floor he is not accused of it. I am not accusing him of playing politics. He is doing his job, and I respect him, and I do not accuse the gentleman of engaging in politics in trying to have the rule adopted, but any time one of the Democratic leadership takes the floor—and you better stop it in the future—they are accused of engaging in politics. That could work both ways. We do not accuse the Republican leaders of it, and when the gentleman is taking the position he is taking he is only doing his job, and I admire him for it, although if I could look into his mind and read his thoughts, he is disgusted with the action taken by the majority of the Committee on Appropriations in reporting this bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts has indicated that he can look into my mind and determine what is going on with respect to this matter. I do not have to look into his mind or the mind of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], or some of the others who have spoken over there, to see what is going on in their minds.

Now, they cannot distinguish this rule in any real particular from rule after rule that they brought out here and asked us to support and which many of us did support. The thing that disturbs them is that the items in this bill that might be subject to a point of order are going to save the Government and the taxpayers some money, and that is just completely abhorrent to them. Why, they cannot be for economy in Government. They cannot be for saving the taxpayers any money, so they adopt this position of opposition to this rule, not because of any great solicitude for those of us on this side, but because they are just following the old pattern that has been in evidence here every day since we first met last January 3, which is one of stubborn opposition to every move we make to try to cut the cost of government.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, the devil can cite Scripture to his purpose. It is so very obvious that the discussion here indicates that those who oppose the rule are more interested in the subject matter of the bill than in the technicalities of committee jurisdiction.

Now, let me make it abundantly clear what is involved here today. This rule is worth $183,000,000. Many rules cannot be interpreted in terms of money. This one can. The action by the committee in rescinding what is known as so-called section 32 funds, which consist of 30 percent of customs receipts which are permanently appropriated, will be stricken from this bill on a point of order if the rule is not granted, and the $383,000,000 saving that the committee labored to bring in here will be reduced from $383,000,000 to $235,000,000. That is involved in this rule. We had the benefit of the testimony. The discussion you hear here today is predicated not upon testimony but rather upon a technical consideration or a political consideration. This committee has taken testimony for 7 weeks. We had 411 witnesses before the subcommittee. It has taken us 3 months to bring this bill here. We have taken very advised action in the matter.

After battling through the subcommittee, the full committee, and the Rules Committee, and supporting the rule on the floor of the House, if we now cannot have a rule then take $183,000,000 of economy out of this bill. On the 20th of February you all voted on the legislative budget. The vote was 229 to 174. To the call of the roll your voice intoned that you were in favor of trying to achieve a $6,000,000,000 economy. We bring in here a bill in support of that thesis. Are you going to cripple our efforts now on a technicality?

It is said that this is a departure from custom. I do not see the gentleman from Missouri on the floor just now, who was at one time the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee of which I am now the chairman. Year after year I went to the Rules Committee with him. I stood at his right hand and helped him ask for a rule to protect the bill, and no one will deny it. Here today we are marshaling the facts and marshaling the record. There is no departure here. We have gone through this sort of business in other years. Always I have stood with your chairman asking to get a rule, even though it was being fussed over on this side, because there was little of partisanship and politics in the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations.

I served on the Reorganization Committee with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY], who did a marvelous job; and how long we battled on this thing—18 months—and then brought in a bill with a bridge title and a retirement title and a pay increase. We had a provision in there to take all legislative matters out of appropriations. You could not even report an appropriation bill with a legislative matter in it. What happened? We sat down with the leadership not only on our side but on your side as well, and we took it out, so that it applies today to the Senate but not to the House of Representatives. You approved that bill with that item stricken. Will you stand here now, depart from the record, and give us that kind of opposition?

I sometimes wonder why a Member of the House who is in his right mind will take service on the Appropriations Committee and eat his heart out month after month to scare up a few dollars for the American taxpayers, and then be so constantly challenged by technicalities upon the floor. If you want to throw that $183,000,000 out the window, all right. You have as many prerogatives, as many privileges, as much power, and as many rights here as I have. But it will be noted on the record whether you will escape or not under these circumstances if you take $183,000,000 out of this bill.

You are not foreclosed in your rights. You can strike out the rescission provision on section 32 when the bill is read for amendment. If you do not like what we did on meat inspection when we are trying to put the inspection fee upon the packers and save $6,000,000 for the Treasury this year and another $5,000,000 next year, you can move to strike it out. If you do not like what we have done with REA in sending them directly to the Treasury instead of circuitously through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, without changing their interest rate or their prerogatives or their priorities or anything else, you are free to strike it out by an amendment on the floor. There is not an item covered in this rule that you cannot strike out. But you see, you test it on its merits. It is not the arbitrary fact that you can stand and say, "Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order," and then suddenly, without testing the merits of the provision, throw it out the window. Is that the way you are going to dispose of the $183,000,000 of economy involved?

This committee does not try to usurp the prerogatives of any other committee. But try to write an Agriculture appropriation bill with a thousand and one different provisions in it and try to squeeze out of it a little economy, and see the difficulties that you run into. It is a regular wilderness of technicality. You have to be so serpentine and sinuous in your tread in order finally to get a bill that will stand up and effect a little economy and avoid, insofar as it can, legislative provisions.

There is not a single legislative provision in this bill that is not coupled with an economy.

Meat inspection—there is an economy of $6,140,000.

Section 32—the economy is $148,000,000.

If we did not do it, that $148,000,000 would be a loose roving amount of money that would not find its way back into the Treasury until the end of the fiscal year 1948, which is a year from next June.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Is it not a fact that we could allocate $148,000,000 of AAA funds to take care of this particular section 32 fund?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I shall point that out.

Mr. Speaker, were we so profane in this matter? The President of the United States, who is of the opposite political persuasion, took $100,000,000 out of section 32 and put it into the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which meant the conservation-payment fund. The President and the Bureau of the Budget did that. Perhaps it was subject to a point of order, but when we go to the merits of the matter, have we then been so profane?

With respect to the other $48,000,000, it was a pretty nebulous case, as I shall seek to point out in the general discussion, and I shall cite you line and page of the scripture to prove it, instead of drawing it out of thin air with some kind of speculation or some kind of conjecture.

Then there is the Rural Electrification Administration. We were quite generous with that, I thought.

Here, at the instance of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation officials and with the approval of the Budget Division of the Department of Agriculture, the language in the bill was submitted. They said instead of borrowing by first going through the Administrator and the Secretary and then the RFC and then the Treasury Department, why not go directly to the Treasury. It does not prejudice them in their operations whatsoever. It will save three-quarters of 1 percent because that is what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation takes out.

Then, for its administrative work it puts people on the pay roll. It is coupled then with the saving of $25,000,000 in cash and it then makes inoperative the 85-percent collateral provision under which they operated and it does them good rather than harm because it facilitates and expedites their operations. There can be no quarrel about it.

Gentlemen, are we going to test these things on their merits or are we going to throw them out the window? There is ample precedent for what we do today—abundant precedent, if you please. And not a single Member of this House is foreclosed when we are in Committee of the Whole from his opportunity to say, "Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out the rescission title of section 32 funds." And that amendment will be in order. Not a single Member is foreclosed in his opportunity to say, "Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out the provision on meat inspection." And that amendment will be in order. No Member is foreclosed in his right to say, "Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the provision on Rural Electrification Administration." And it will be in order. Or to say, "Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso on AAA funds." And it will be in order. In every case we will test the whole controversy on its every merit instead of just throwing it out the window on a technicality. So, I say to you, after 3 months of endeavor we would like to have this rule. I appeared before the Committee on Rules yesterday morning. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] was there. He opposed the rule. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] was there. He opposed the rule. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ZIMMERMAN] was there. He opposed the rule. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] was there. He opposed the rule. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, was there. He opposed the rule. I sought in my humble and feeble way to say, "Give us an opportunity to bring this matter to the floor of the House and let the Members of the Congress work their will on these provisions. Let us not be diverted by some question of legislative or technical jurisdiction." Now, that is the whole question that is involved here.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman seems to regard this matter as a mere technicality, of very slight importance. I know the gentleman is usually very frank. I wonder if the gentleman will not confess to the House that this is a bold invasion of the prerogatives of the House Committee on Agriculture, of which the chairman is the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, let us see what a bold invasion this is. When the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] was the chairman of this committee, after years of urging on my part, we changed the character of soil-conservation payments so as to make them conservation and use payments instead of subsidies. We did that in an appropriation bill. I went up there with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and helped get a rule on it. I went with the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] to the Rules Committee to get a rule to cover an amendment on agricultural credit as it related to the Agricultural Credit Corporation. We had to draw language in such involved fashion that hardly a Philadelphia lawyer could understand it, but it was still subject to a point of order. Just like Herminius stood at Horatius' right arm at the bridge on the Tiber, I stood there with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], and said, "Give us a rule," and I have been doing it for 10 years.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. So the gentleman is consistent in his policy and his contention that the integrity of the legislative committees should not be so carefully guarded?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No, no. Let me comment on that. That is not what the gentleman from Illinois has in mind. I say to you, out of a humble heart, if you could serve for 1 or 2 years on an appropriation committee and see what labyrinthian wilderness of restrictions we operate under, that taxes the facility of the General Accounting Office to the point where the Comptroller General is fairly beside himself and says, "For God's sake, let us get some relief from this great labyrinthian bureaucracy with all of its fiscal restrictions"—if you have 1 year of experience your heart would be filled to overflowing with sympathy for the 43 members who go through that labor year after year.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOLEY. Did not the gentleman yesterday state to the Rules Committee that being chairman of the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations it was almost impossible for the gentleman and his committee to write an appropriation bill without invading the prerogatives of the legislative committees and writing legislation on appropriation bills?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, no; it is not quite what the gentleman from Illinois said. What the gentleman from Illinois said to the Rules Committee was that it is pretty difficult and sometimes an almost impossible thing to prepare an appropriation bill and achieve the kind of economies that we effected and not drift over a little bit into this field of legislative jurisdiction. There is not a chairman of the Appropriation Subcommittees who will not bear me out in the difficulties under which we labor.

So, in the best of grace, let us test this thing out on its merits, approve this rule, and let us see whether or not this House wants to initiate a saving of $183,000,000 that is involved in this rule today. It is your question to decide.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COOLEY) there were—ayes 130, noes 103.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 189, nays 170, answered "present" 2, not voting 68, as follows:

Mr. Miller of Nebraska with Mr. Byrne of New York.

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. GRANT, who is absent on official business. Had he been present, he would have voted "yea." I voted "nay." I therefore withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. ROBERTSON changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. HALE changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3601) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how I was recorded? I had a pair with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. JONKMAN. I voted "no." I wish to withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The vote has been announced and the time when the gentleman could have announced how he would have voted has passed—except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HILL. But, Mr. Speaker, the Clerk read the pair himself.

The SPEAKER. That is true, but the gentleman himself had voted. He should have addressed the Chair and requested that he be recorded as "present."

Is there objection to the gentleman from Colorado changing his vote? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Colorado will be recorded as having been paired in opposition to the rule.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion, and pending that may I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that the time be equally divided, that we run on more or less indeterminately today with the hope that before the Committee rises we probably will be able to read at least the first section of the bill and perhaps a little more.

Mr. CANNON. I think the division of the time can very well be arranged, but we should proceed without further limitation until we know just how many wish to be heard. I trust nobody will be denied an opportunity to be heard during general debate.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Insofar as that can be complied with, that certainly will be the rule; but in view of the fact that time is of the essence and so many Members want to get away Thursday, as expressed earlier by the majority leader, I hope we can complete the bill tomorrow. Therefore, whatever progress we can make today will be in good stead as we begin deliberations on Wednesday.

Mr. CANNON. I am very glad to cooperate with the gentleman from Illinois in the hope that we will be able to make good progress with the understanding that no definite arrangement is made as to reading any particular part of the bill today.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the subcommittee wishes to be rather clear on what is contemplated here. It is hoped we will be able to read at least the first paragraph tonight and perhaps a little more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that debate on the bill run throughout the day, the time to be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3601, the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1948, with Mr. HERTER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, the hour has struck. The time has arrived for the Republican Party to put performance ahead of promises. It is time for it to assume its responsibility to the people the while it saves the small farmers of America from regimentation and destruction. It is time for Congress to cooperate to that end.

That there is a concerted attempt to consolidate agriculture and to make big business out of it under Federal control at the expense and wiping out of the small farmer, as is also true with respect to small business, is not to be denied. It is admitted.

While I did not and do not agree with all the items contained in the bill, I am in favor of many of them, for this is no time for any American to count what votes it will cost him to oppose or to support a program for economy and against paternalism. He must have the courage of his convictions. This is the time for anybody with intestinal fortitude to stand up for his country despite the penalty he may pay to demagogs and self-seekers and job hunters.

Over the last few years before and during the war there has grown up all over the country a group of paternalists, radicals and Socialists, who believe this is a good government to live under, so long as they can live off it. Do not forget it. Some of these people forget that they are themselves paying for all this alleged Government assistance. I cannot understand their attitude. The Government gets no money except by taxing these very people. What it hands to them it first takes from them, or somebody else.

Economy is only practiced when it commences at home. It is time to economize and to become stable and practical. We need to economize; and to do it, instead of talking about it, is the only way to have economy prevail. We must eliminate, cut down, and save to the utmost. Expenditures throughout the Government have pyramided beyond reason and our ability to carry on.

Attempts to threaten or coerce Members of Congress to vote for or against measures are un-American approaches. The average hard-working farmer who is a member of the Grange or the Farm Bureau does not know and would not approve of the methods the "big boys" employ as they earn their salaries out of the pockets of the average farmer. It is a shame.

I have lived my life in Vermont. I am for Vermont. I do not have to prove it. I am for Vermont farmers and their welfare. I do not have to say so. I will try to see that their needs are met and cared for. They know it.

I hate hypocrisy and demagogery, and the spending of the money of my Vermont friends to try to carry on a Henry Wallace program. I am opposed to it. We need to get back to the old-fashioned honesty of hard work and a fair price for its products. God knows when we will ever reach that discretion.

This bill is both a threat and a promise. Demagogs will call it all kinds of names, and hypocrites will label it others. While I am opposed to some of its provisions, it is really a step toward a 100-percent America for the farmers of America. It needs some trimming; I admit I am for it and it will get it.

Agriculture is the most essential industry in the world. It has long been one of the most independent of industries. The farmer who owned his farm and managed his own business independently and paid his own way was a king. He should be allowed to operate without Government interference or control.

Organization is all right if not too comprehensive. A too far-reaching control from the Government becomes arbitrary and dictatorial. It will speed the end of the small farmer.

Federalized agriculture spells the destruction of initiative, destroys the desire to make one's living off a farm, and eventually destroys America. Paternalism wherever it shows its head should be stopped, for it carries a poison which has buried other civilizations five deep. If we are to maintain our self-respect, our form of government, and wish to contribute to the acceptance of the responsibility in world affairs which is ours to bear, or to shirk, we must begin with the real dirt farmer. This bill undertakes to protect him. This bill undertakes to place the responsibility for the farm program back on the farm; to eliminate government control, regimentation, and unnecessary duplication of needless expense and effort. The only way to reduce taxes is to cut expenses.

The bill is not perfect. There are amendments to it which should be made. I will support them. I will support the bill as it probably will be amended, for it is a step in the right direction in the interests of the farmers. It is time the real farmers had a chance to operate their farms and be independent. They will be either independent, or cease to be.

As one person said concerning all the schemes offered by the farm agents and bureaucrats: "Those boys in the Department of Agriculture who want to federalize and paternalize the farmer forget that they cannot beat God." There is so much in that statement one could wisely spend a week or more considering what it involves.

The cuts which are made are most of them wise. Some are unwise, in my opinion, and I so registered in the subcommittee, as a hopeless minority.

The cuts, and the reasons offered therefor, will be fully gone into during the debate which will follow.

The subcommittee is composed of a group of good-natured fighters representing the country, and fighting for it, and for the citizens who represent agriculture, our farmers.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN].

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, may I first compliment the chairman of our Subcommittee on Appropriations for Agriculture, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], for the very fair and considerate manner in which he has handled the operations of this subcommittee. Certainly, we eight members of this subcommittee have not always agreed. No bill contains more controversial matters than does the one now before the House. The problems have been approached strictly on a basis of nonpartisan consideration, and as to what is best for our Nation. Never once do I recall during the nearly 2 months we were in session that any political red herrings were dragged into these hearings by members of the subcommittee. It has been a pleasure to serve with not only the other members of the majority of this committee, Mr. PLUMLEY, Mr. HORAN, and Mr. PHILLIPS of California, but also with the members of the minority, Mr. CANNON, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. WHITTEN.

It has been my endeavor to consider the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, which represents in the Government my personal industry, in exactly the same manner in which those for Labor and Federal Security were considered. Might I state in reference to a 1-minute speech made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] here today, in which he pleaded for more appropriations for REA, that REA will have available on the 1st of July $550,000,000 for construction purposes. Do you know that REA has today allocated, but not expended, $325,000,000? That is the testimony of Mr. Wickard before our subcommittee. We are giving them an additional $225,000,000 here, and surely, with better than half a billion, this subcommittee has done well by REA. We have seen to it that every cent that REA can legitimately expend, when we consider the cost of labor and material, is given to them in this particular bill.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. I am rather interested in the gentleman's comments about REA. I have received a number of telegrams from local REA associations expressing concern about some of these cuts.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Might I say to the gentleman from South Dakota, in the first instance, that it is just too bad that certain parties have misrepresented the action of our subcommittee in this matter. There are no better friends of REA in Congress than are upon this subcommittee—Democrats as well as Republicans. May I assure the gentleman that every cent that REA can properly use is available for that great project the coming fiscal year. We want it completed as soon as possible so as to bring to every farm home in America this wonderful convenience.

Mr. MUNDT. I know the gentleman from Minnesota has been a long-time friend and supporter of REA.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. May I state to the gentleman that REA provides the light and electricity for my home farm in Minnesota.

Mr. MUNDT. It is gratifying to have the assurance that if this appropriation passes in the form it is now before the House the expansion and projection of REA to areas which are not now served can be continued without any crippling of the legitimate program. I think that is the gentleman's assurance, is it not?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Absolutely, and the entire subcommittee feels as I do.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. This fund for administrative expenses is cut appproximately one-third. The gentleman would not take the position that that would not necessarily mean that applications for extensions and the approval of new loans and class B loans would be delayed. The gentleman hopes that it will not, but the gentleman cannot give us any assurance of that, can he?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I have a very high regard for my friend from Mississippi but must differ with him because, after all, we have reached a certain pattern in the allocation of these loans and it is not necessary—and I have this word from some of my associations back home—for these engineers, accountants, and so forth, to come out there continuously from the national headquarters and tell them what to do. These allocations, as the gentleman from Mississippi well knows, are mainly for B, C, and D projects, and surely it is not now necessary to extend the same degree of supervision.

Mr. WHITTEN. That is right; in reference to the kind of allocations.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I do not agree with the gentleman that we have done anything but good for the REA when we instill in them a little caution toward economy. After all, why should not they, as well as any other governmental agency, take their share of the cut. Four million dollars is going to give them ample money with which to do a good job.

Mr. WHITTEN. The gentleman will agree that the applications for class B loans and other loans which should provide for area coverage still must come into Washington and be approved here, and these administrative funds are necessary to take care of them?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Certainly they must come into Washington but not with all the red tape attached to the preceding ones. As I said, the pattern has been set. I think it is time to get some of those attorneys out of the Solicitor's office as well as some of the numerous employees out of the REA. These people can do something more worthwhile for the Government than they are doing in those particular positions.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Is the economy being made in REA largely on administrative expenses?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Practically entirely in connection with the administrative expenses. One-tenth only of the money asked for to extend lines was refused.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. It is not on the construction of lines?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. We gave to the REA in this bill 90 percent of what they asked for as far as loan authorizations are concerned. Remember that that $225,000,000 is piled upon the other $325,000,000 which is also available for construction, having been allocated but not expended as yet. Look at Mr. Wickard's testimony to that effect on page 1434 of the RECORD.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. I notice the report states that the $4,000,000 exceeds the amount appropriated for 1945 for REA. I wonder how that $4,000,000 figure compares with the amount they received in 1946.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. In 1945 they had available for administrative expenses $3,246,000. In 1946 the amount was $4,340,000 and $5,500,000 in 1947. If we are ever to balance our budget, and get down to sanity in the line of expending money, each and every agency of this great, rambling structure of the United States Government will have to take proportionate cut. Much as I reg REA, no agency should be exempt fi the trimming which absolutely must done.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. This is point in which I am vitally concern We know that in 1945 there was no po bility of expansion and extension of REA lines because it was impossible get the necessary materials and equ ment to expand.

Will this $4,000,000 figure hamper hinder or delay the expansion of R lines to those communities which are now served?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I do feel that this reduction in administra expenses will do anything but good.

Mr. MUNDT. In line with what gentleman has said, and in further s port of his position, reducing the amo of bureaucracy somewhat might cut sc of the red tape and actually expedite operations instead of delaying them.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I feel t that would apply to almost any Gove ment agency today. We spend ab $34,000,000,000 for food for all of 140,000,000 people. The President asked for $37,500,000,000 for expenses Government. Think of it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield my good friend from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. As matter of fact, of the proportion of $225,000,000 which would become ava able for lines, is not the amount allow for administrative funds of the RI namely, $4,000,000, larger than th have had some years?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yi to the gentleman from Illinois [M DIRKSEN] for answer to that questi

Mr. DIRKSEN. I was going to say my friend, the gentleman from Sou Dakota, that on almost one-half of amount requested they energized tw as much line in 1940 as they did in 19

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I th the gentleman from South Dakota [M CASE] was referring to administrat expenses.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; that is wha am referring to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Th they certainly ought to be able to along on this $4,000,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely; they co have gone on with less. We thou the committee was extremely gener on that.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. From the beginnin have believed in the efficacy and good work of the REA. We all kr that it has shifted many of the burd and much drudgery from the backs men and women to the muscles of i and steel driven by electricity. Bu object to much of the information propaganda which has been sent misleading our people, trying to convi them that the failure of some farm to get electricity is the result of failure of Congress to appropriate s funds. I have voted for appropriations and for increased appropriations for the REA. The reason that some of the farmers in the various districts cannot get electricity is due not to the failure of Congress to pass sufficient appropriations to meet their needs, but rather to the costly, cumbersome, and inefficient administration of the Federal bureaucracy.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman is entirely correct. In my opinion, many of these so-called friends of rural electrification are doing that great work a disservice in bringing needless pressure upon the Members of this House who have proven themselves time and again on both sides to be real friends of the REA. We will give REA every dime they need, but at the same time we do not intend to put more money on the shelf than is necessary.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. I hope there is no misunderstanding about this money that is now available as the gentleman mentions. I do not understand the gentleman to tell us there are $325,000,000 now available for allocation for loans to a cooperative that either wants to extend its lines or is now starting in business? That money has already been allocated.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. It has been allocated but not expended.

Mr. POAGE. That is right.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. But the money is there and they will have it for construction purposes, when needed and when the materials and labor are available.

Mr. POAGE. That is right, but the gentleman did not intend to say that even the $225,000,000 will all be expended before the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. No; I do not think it is necessary that it should be. Most of it will be allocated, however.

Mr. POAGE. Certainly it will be allocated during this coming year. The $325,000,000 which has been mentioned does not add 1 penny to the amount of money that is available to take care of your people who do not now have lines. The $225,000,000 is all the money that is being made available during the next fiscal year to take care of people not now signed up. Is that not right?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I think the subcommittee has made every necessary provision as far as funds are concerned to keep this great project going in high gear. What more can the REA people ask?

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. It has been my observation and experience—and I think I am in a position to know, because I am down there in the middle of TVA, where there is an unlimited quantity of electric power—that the trouble about the extension of this REA service is the inability of those who desire it or those who furnish it to obtain transformers and other equipment in the way of wire. That is the great trouble.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. And that will continue to be the great problem this coming year. More than ever that backs up the action of the subcommittee in doing what we have done. We have perhaps made more money available than they can ever use, but we want to be sure REA has enough.

Mr. JENNINGS. The gentleman is absolutely right about that. The question is to get these facilities.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to my chairman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the Secretary of Agriculture himself in a letter told the committee that in all probability it will be as much as 20 months before they can get these transformers.

Mr. JENNINGS. There is not a bit of doubt about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. May I continue with my speech, from which I have digressed to answer these inquiries about REA?

The one great problem, as far as agriculture is concerned, is that of maintaining parity prices for our farm commodities. All other agricultural problems sink into insignificance in comparison with that of assuring a fair and equitable price for what the farmers produce. I believe that the majority of the farmers of America will agree with me—one of these farmers—that payments need not be made to them in order to make sure that our soil will be properly conserved. The average farmer is interested enough in his own farm and in his own soil to be willing to keep that soil up by the application of proper fertilizers, provided he receives sufficient money from the sale of his commodities to be able to do so. I am also satisfied that the majority of the farmers of the Nation resent the criticism leveled at agriculture in general at the acceptance of any subsidy whatsoever. We have been forced at times in the past to come to the Treasury for a portion of a fair price for our products which we should have received in the market. Triple A payments, as made the past few years, are vastly different from what were known formerly as parity payments, which were made to the farmers of this Nation for the purpose of assuring to them at least 90 percent of parity for what they had to sell. The so-called triple A payments, in my opinion, do not come within this same category, and I, as one of the recipients of thse payments, believe that our Treasury needs this money today more than does the farmer. In line with this belief, I personally made the motion in subcommittee, which was adopted, to allot only $150,000,000 to triple A for 1947 payments instead of the $267,000,000 provided in the budget request. Further action by the subcommittee provides that there will be no triple A payments in 1948, and for the first time in many years our farmers will be strictly on their own.

I am disappointed, however, in the fact that the subcommittee and the full committee have seen fit to allow only $15,000,000 for the total of administrative expenses with which to take care of the National, State, county, and township operation of the entire triple-A structure. We need and must have the triple A county and township committees, through which to take care of our sealing programs, and we will not be able to do that with a $15,000,000 appropriation. Let us keep in mind at this point that the national and State expenses for this work in 1947 were $8,871,868, while the expenses of the county associations were $20,039,088, a total of $28,910,956. In the proposal to limit this year the expenses of the entire triple-A structure to $15,000,000, we find that of this amount $1,950,000 is permitted to be expended for national and State expenses, while $13,050,000 is allowed the county associations. I do not quarrel with the decrease in expenditure in the national and State set-up, but I do feel that it is practically the beginning of the end for the triple A county and township committee set-up, when we propose to give them nearly $7,000,000 less than they had available in 1947.

Please keep in mind that there is practically the same amount of work involved in making out the proper forms and writing a check to Jim Jones whether he receives $150 for his portion or whether that portion is approximately $90. The same computations are necessary, and I sincerely hope that the House will see fit to adopt an amendment restoring the $7,000,000 for this purpose.

The average farmer throughout the Nation knows just how badly we may need the county and township committees in the future to take care of our price-support programs as the various emergencies arise, and I feel sure that this same average farmer will agree with me that it would be far better to take an additional $7,000,000 allotted for individual payments to farmers and give this additional $7,000,000 to the county and township committees instead with which to do a good job. Unless these committees are available when needed, chaos can easily enter the agricultural picture and cost the Nation many times over the amount needed to keep these committees functioning.

Mr. Chairman, it is my intention when we come to the proper paragraph of this bill to offer again a similar amendment to that which was defeated in the full committee only by a tie vote of 16 to 16. If there is any item in this bill in which I personally feel that our committee is in error, it is in this reduction of the administrative expenses for the triple A committee structure. Let us keep these committees, even at the expense of whittling down the payments to the farmer.

Mr. Chairman, it would require too much time to discuss the several changes that could be made in this bill. The gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] and I both feel that there is too much of what we might term departmental personnel left in this measure. In accordance with that belief, I personally had inserted in the report supplementary views as follows:

I have concurred in the majority report with the following reservations:

A major portion of the cuts effected have been obtained through the reduction in appropriations for AAA, the school-lunch program, and the Farm Home Administration, together with reductions of a lesser degree in REA, Research, Forestry, and other branches.

I do not feel that proportionate cuts in personnel throughout the Department of Agriculture have been made consistent with those above mentioned.

It is my intention to offer on the floor, after careful study, certain amendments designed to secure the balance which is desirable.

May I point out that the American Farm Bureau Federation has issued a letter today in which it backs me up in this opinion that the cuts in personnel have not been deep enough. Let us glance at one or two for example.

The immediate office of the Secretary has been allotted by the committee $18,350 more than it had available in the year 1947. It does seem to me that it should not be necessary for the Secretary's immediate office to expend $2,137,560, and it is my intention later to offer an amendment which would reduce this to somewhat in line with the other cuts which have been made in this bill upon the farmers of the Nation.

May we also glance at the Office of the Solicitor, which has been allocated in this bill $2,561,000, a decrease of only $54,000 under that available in 1947. When we consider, Mr. Chairman, the vast lessening of the various programs in the Department through this bill, it would seem that the work of the Office of the Solicitor would also become greatly lessened, and there is no reason in my opinion for an appropriation to the Solicitor's Office of more than $2,000,000. This cut of $561,000, which I propose to offer as an amendment, will do much toward leveling off the cuts as they should be in the Department of Agriculture.

I might state that my good friend, the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. DIRKSEN], suggested at least inferentially that a 20-percent reduction in personnel in the Office of the Secretary might well be made. This suggestion as to a 20-percent reduction in personnel throughout the Department of Agriculture has been advocated by the American Farm Bureau Federation, and I believe that that recommendation is very sound.

We have noted the past few days in the press of the Nation, declarations of the sighs of relief that obtained in the Department of Agriculture at the smallness of the cuts in personnel. Too much of the economy in this bill is at the expense of others than the employees of the Department of Agriculture. We see evidence throughout the bill, as we do in every appropriation measure, that hundreds upon hundreds of personnel have been upgraded 1, 2, and 3 positions, until we have arrived at the point where we have all corporals, sergeants, lieutenants and others, with practically no privates to do the work. That should be changed.

In conclusion, may I express the hope that the House will seriously consider the various amendments that will be offered in order that we might secure a better balanced bill. The farmers of America are willing to do their part in accepting these slashes as made and which we were compelled to make in the interest of economy. Is it asking too much, Mr. Chairman, that the governmental employees in this vast bureaucratic structure known as the Department of Agriculture shall take a similar reduction in behalf of a firm, stable economy in this great United States of America.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, it is an easy role, of course, to appear as a critic and I hope while I shall differ vigorously with the committee in some of its findings that some of the more constructive aspects of what I say will not be overlooked, for I realize the committee has had a difficult job and the fact that some of us entertain strong views of disagreement does not mean that we are lacking in appreciation of the hard work that the committee has done. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak primarily of the work of the Farmers Home Administration. I do this not to exalt the activities of the administrative group any more than the contribution which the Congress has made in the fundamental law pertaining to the farm tenancy program.

I want to talk about the little farmer, I want to talk about the veterans, and I want to be entirely fair with those who have seen fit by committee action to reduce the appropriations for the little farmer and for the veteran who is a little farmer. I am sure that no Member of this House means to be unfair to the veteran, and sometimes, unconsciously perhaps, we hit below the belt as we plead for the veteran. I would like to disclaim that, and as I have said in other debates in the House, I realize that the veterans' interests are tied to other interests. If he is a farmer, to the interest of the agricultural population in general. If he is a part of the business community, his interests are tied generally to those of the business community. I am aware of that. But here in FHA is a specific program that is being channeled for the farm youth who went to war and came back seeking an opportunity to reestablish himself on the land.

Here is a program that is being greatly jeopardized by the action of the committee in cutting out all of the appropriations for the tenant-purchase program, reducing the administrative fund for the Farmers Home Corporation from $25,000,000 to $18,000,000, and reducing the rehabilitation loans and emergency crop loans, as we used to call them—they have been combined—from $90,000,000 to $60,000,000. It simply cannot be justified if I properly interpret the testimony of the agency officials and the comments that were made by the members of the committee as they heard Mr. Dillard Lassiter and his associates.

Let us go back briefly to the history of the Farmers Home Administration. Every man who knows Marvin Jones respects him. I think that one of the finest monuments to any legislator is the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, and it is proving itself. I am speaking now of the tenant purchase program. It is necessary to distinguish between the two phases of the Farmers Home Administration program, the rehabilitation loans and the tenant purchase loans or the ownership program.

Speaking now of the tenant purchase program I must pay tribute to our former Member, Marvin Jones, who insisted, when the legislation was being evolved, upon two things: One was that it be anchored to the locality; that a county committee be designated to pass upon the soundness of the loans, and his wisdom in that respect has been amply demonstrated. One reason that the program is working out is that a committee of farmers acquainted with land values has passed upon the soundness of every loan. The second is the standard of personal experience and fitness. The applicant as well as the land must pass muster.

Our Government, in inaugurating the farm tenancy program, had few examples in other countries to help us. There was one pattern, and that was in Denmark, where in one generation the tenancy ratio went down from 90 percent to less than 10 percent, but the Danes had a rather restricted experience. They were engaged largely in dairying, and we have in addition to our great dairy industry, of course, many other types to be considered. But we paralleled Denmark's policy of liberal credit for the purchase of farms so that increasing numbers of American farmers might be able to say, "This is my own vine and fig tree," and as the prophet said, "There shall be none to make him afraid." So the law prescribed that loans should be for 40 years, for 100 percent of the value, and at 3-percent interest.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. I would like to make this observation, that while we are making these reductions under this appropriation act, the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill over in the other body has been under consideration which provided in section 10 an appropriation of $25,000,000 for rural housing for the first year of its operation. I understand that that bill will not come up on the floor and that we will not have an increase of appropriations to carry out a rural housing program.

Mr. HAYS. I am glad to have the gentleman's comment. Incidentally, speaking of the housing program, it is true—and this is not a partisan statement since it involves a program begun by a Democratic administration—but it is true that over a period of years there has been more spent in Federal funds, for housing in single cities than in rural housing in the whole United States, and yet if this appropriation measure stands unamended, you are going to strike out of the bill something that is proving its soundness, without any doubt, and the figures are in this record submittted by the Farmers Home Administration.

Let me get back to the figures. I refer to the tenancy program. What happened? You have loaned under the Bankhead-Jones Act the sum of $282,000,000, with only a $50,000 loss. Now, you cannot find anywhere in the governmental enterprise of noncommercial credit anything that is comparable to that, and yet you propose to strike it out.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield to my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Is it not also true that those in the low-income groups in the cities received subsidies that were many, many times greater than the subsidies that were paid to these farmers?

Mr. HAYS. Exactly.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Extending over many years.

Mr. HAYS. Right. There is no element of subsidy here. These men have gone out on the land and by hard work have proved their right to a stake in it, and they are making good. No one is going to stand on this floor and question this basic conclusion, and I submit that we ought not to interrupt this program. It has vast economic and social implications. I just cannot believe that the committee intends to interrupt it permanently. Then why lose this valuable time? I believe my friend from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] thinks well of the record. I believe that he is proud of the Bankhead-Jones program. It undertakes to reduce the frightening percentage of farm tenancy in this country so that we can get it well below the 50-percent mark, where it was once, to a proper percentage throughout America.

I am not making any sweeping claims for farm ownership. I realize that in a country with diversified interests there will be an element of tenancy, that in some situations the renter relationship is wholesome and economically sound. It is not that I expect all farms to be owner-operated. I realize it cannot be done. I am saying—and this justifies my allusion to the early history of the Bankhead-Jones Act—that it was a dangerous situation that called for the enactment of this law, and I do not want us to take a backward step.

Now about the veteran. These young farmers have come back, a million of them. A survey of the Army at one time showed 650,000 of them, when they were asked, "What do you want when the war is over in the way of an economic opportunity?" saying, "A chance on the land."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HAYS. These young men came back, some of them 4–H Club graduates, some of them agricultural students. We are spending now under the GI bill of rights millions of dollars to equip them through vocational training for farming pursuits, yet we would say by this action that they are not to have the credit that is necessary to enable them to utilize to a maximum degree the capabilities developed by the GI program.

We are not stopping the GI loans for the city veteran. I regret to make this reference, but we are going right ahead with business loans. If the veteran wants a radio shop he gets a loan, and if he wants to finance a new business he gets a loan, but the committee says that he cannot have a farm, not now, under this beneficent program.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HAYS. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Possibly the only thing we have to offer in that connection is the Cunningham bill, that has been in the hopper for several weeks now. I do not remember all its provisions, but as I recall, it conforms to the Bankhead-Jones provisions. It applies only to veterans, if I remember correctly.

Mr. HAYS. Yes; I thank the gentleman for his contribution. He has helped me very much by these references. But no law will help if appropriations are withheld.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. A study of rural-population indexes shows that today the per capita acreage is increasing, that is, the large farm is getting larger as time goes on, and we are not making proper inducements to the small-farm operator.

Mr. HAYS. Yes; I am glad to have that pointed out. That undoubtedly is the trend.

I anticipate that the committee will say that they do not want to encourage land inflation. That is in the report. I recognize that danger. I agree that we would be unfair to some applicants to say, "Here is a loan, buy the farm." I realize that. Certainly we ought to give every encouragement to the measures that are being advanced for stopping the spiral in land prices. But the records show that the Farmers Home Administration has avoided that misfortune. There has been an increase in their loans of only $13 a farm. They are handling the problem in a very effective way, by cutting out every element of speculation, and by full use of their facilities for land appraisals.

The War Assets Administration will ultimately release 3,000,000 acres of agricultural lands as surplus war property. Much of this land should be sold to eligible farm veterans. We should not deprive them of adequate credit facilities. There are other sources of farm land and under the tenant-purchase program it can be made available at terms which assure success.

The FHA's success has attracted the veterans who wish to engage in farming. On April 30, 41,000 of them had applications on file. To meet this situation nonveteran loans were suspended in 26 States. The agency has had a larger volume of applications for operating loans, approximately 150,000 this year, 48,000 from veterans. If the appropriation is not increased, virtually no additional production loans can be processed.

Now, I believe that the Members give the Administrator, Mr. Lasseter, credit for a good performance. He is following legislative policy closely in one of the most difficult jobs in the Department of Agriculture.

The Congress should not handicap the agency in its vital function. I, therefore hope the appropriations can be restored, as contemplated by the Bankhead-Jones Act and the Cooley Act.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WINSTEAD].

Mr. WINSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, the action of the subcommittee in this bill is deplorable. They have broken faith with the American farmer. I realize that reductions must be made in expenditures. Many millions of dollars have been cut off appropriations this year, and I have subscribed to most of them. I feel that cuts were in order in the Agriculture Department, because certainly there are duplications which exist throughout the Department. A careful review of this bill, however, discloses that the cuts are made in funds and there are no requirements that the reductions be applied to eliminate duplications. In fact I find nothing that would prevent the Department from keeping the high-priced administrative and supervisory personnel and applying the cuts to the jobs of those in the local and county levels, which actually render the service. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the cuts in this bill are cuts in services to the farmer and not cuts in cost of service. In several regards this bill absolutely breaks faith with the American farmers.

During the war the President, the Congress, and the Secretary of Agriculture urged the American farmer to plant every available acre to increase the food supplies of not only the United States but of other countries of the world. The American farmer heeded that call and has planted many acres which, under good farm practices, would have been better had they not been planted. In so doing the natural resources have been depleted. Recognizing that situation, the Congress for some years past has provided for soil-conservation payments, Thus payments are not, as some describe, outright payments to the farmers or gifts from his Government, but they are made if the farmer himself will spend for each dollar of Federal payment $2 out of his own pocket for the protection of the fertility of the soil. In other words, if the farmer spends $3 out of his own pocket to protect this land, the Federal Government has paid $1 on the basis that the Federal Government, and those to come after us, have an interest in this great natural resource—our soil.

I believe this is a good program but whether it is a good program or not, insofar as this appropriation bill is concerned, we made an outright commitment to the American farmer last year when this bill was brought up because Judge Tarver, of Georgia, offered an amendment which fixed this program at $300,000,000 for this calendar year, funds for which must be included in this bill. Judge Tarver at that time was chairman of this committee. He stated that he was offering the amendment so that it could not be misunderstood or so there would be no mistake in the matter. The Secretary of Agriculture announced such program after the bill of last year became the law. The various AAA offices of the States, of the counties and communities announced programs based on such figures. Action has already been taken. The programs have been acted upon, the farmers have done their part, and now when this committee reduces such appropriation almost in half it is breaking a commitment which has been entered into and on which the American farmers have relied. Mr. Chairman, although I did not share in the opinion, I recall in recent weeks when Members of the Congress, including those on the Republican side of the aisle, advocated supplying to Russia certain lend-lease materials and certain industrial plants, even though Russia had failed in many instances to carry out her agreements, all because they contended we had made a commitment. But here today we find many of that same crowd recommending that we break our commitment to the American farmer, who has fulfilled his agreement 100 percent.

I believe that this type of program should be greatly reduced. The demands for food and for working every available acre, it is to be hoped, will let up in the next few years. This program should be tapered off, farmers will learn the value of protecting the soil themselves and have done so, but certainly insofar as this year is concerned we are obligated to carry out our commitment.

A study of this bill shows that the administrative expenses of the REA have been reduced approximately one-third. We all know that through the war practically no expansion of this system was made. The war effort required so many of the materials that all of us in Congress have had to write many letters advising that materials and equipment were unavailable to provide such extensions. Each time I had to write such a letter I realized it was deplorable that this was the condition, because I know, Mr. Chairman, that nothing could be more helpful to farm life and farm people than to see that electricity is available in the home and about the farm. Now that the war is over and plans are being made to expand the REA lines, now that the local directors would have the opportunity to expand their systems and carry this splendid service to thousands of other farmers, we find this committee, or the majority of this committee, coming in with the report which will seriously cripple the operations of the REA. We all know that when an application is made from a local REA it must be processed by the National Administration. We know that the office here must supply engineering advice and must help in securing supplies. We are almost altogether dependent upon the REA office to see to it that the new lines are placed on an area basis so that in the future still additional lines may be extended so that eventually all farms may have the benefit of cheap electricity. Certainly, the Republican members of this committee are going to have the responsibility for keeping thousands of these farm homes from having electricity, but it is still more important these farm families living in those homes will not have the benefit of this great program to make their lot a little easier, their lives a little brighter. I believe that by all means this committee today should adopt an amendment replacing this administrative fund so that the Rural Electrification Administration can put on full steam and expand this system just as rapidly as possible.

Also, I notice from this bill that the Republican members of the committee have provided for the repeal of section 32 funds. These section 32 funds are made available under the act of 1935 as amended, wherein 30 percent of the customs revenue from competitive agricultural products brought into this country shall be set aside for the use of the Department of Agriculture to assist in the support of American grown agricultural products and in their utilization. Over the last 10-year period these funds, which under the basic law belong to Agriculture, have served to bale out the wheat farmer, the poultry farmer, the fruit grower, the corn farmer and the cotton farmer. To take away these funds now is in effect to repeal one of the great substantive laws which has kept agriculture on an even basis with other industries. I certainly hope that this House will review the action of the majority of this committee and strike out this effort to repeal section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

This report also strikes out all tenant purchase loans, all land purchases under the Farmers Home Administration. This organization has outstanding over $800,000,000 in loans now, and administrative funds are reduced to the extent that it is my information that the losses may run as high as $50,000,000 for lack of provision under the bill to handle outstanding loans. The entire land purchase program is stricken from the bill. This means that the veterans, 35,000 of them, whose applications are now being processed will have no opportunity for a year at least to become home owners, yet funds were made available and other citizens were permitted to buy through the years that these boys were in the service and now that they are back and want to buy, this committee says no funds shall be made available.

This bill fails in another particular, Mr. Chairman. We all recall that just a few years ago we were burdened with great surpluses of agricultural products. While today practically everything that is grown can be utilized either here or abroad, in just a few years we know that surpluses will again trouble us. We will have too much corn, too much wheat, too much cotton, and the Commodity Credit Corporation Act provides that the Federal Government guarantees either to purchase or to lend up to 90 percent of parity on such products. Thus we can easily see that it is highly desirable that every effort be made to fully utilize these surpluses in agriculture products, because to utilize them will be to prevent the Federal Government from having to purchase or lend money on them and in the long run will be cheaper.

We know the value of research, we have seen it in hybrid corn, we have seen it in the improved cotton seed, and in practically every phase of agriculture. Under the Hope-Flanagan bill, providing for research and utilization and marketing of agricultural products, $19,000,000 was provided for the next fiscal year. Yet this committee, after first refusing to make any appropriation, has recommended only $6,000,000. It is my judgment that this sum should be increased to at least $9,500,000 because each dollar spent in research and utilization of agricultural products will probably save many times that much in causing such products to be used the coming year and in keeping it out of the category of surplus.

Mr. Chairman, I have attempted to point out wherein this bill is very destructive. As I stated at the outset, one of the greatest disappointments in this bill is in the fact that it does not cut out duplications and does not require the reduction in personnel in the national and district offices as it should. I am sure that the Department will reduce personnel due to the fact that funds are simply not available, but there is nothing in the bill which will prevent the Department from applying the cuts in the field and to the employee at the local level who actually renders the service to the farmers, and retain the high-priced supervisory personnel. No, Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to reductions in appropriation, but I think they should be applied in the right place and in such way as to cut out duplication. The American farmer is not receiving too much service. The cost of the service that he does get is too great and it is there that these reductions should have been made. I think that one little thing in this bill will indicate what the Republican majority has had in mind. The Secretary of Agriculture is getting a new limousine, but the American farmer is getting 50 percent reduction in service in the payments which he has earned under an outright contract between his Government and himself. The Republicans have a majority of the votes in the Congress, but certainly they will make a serious mistake not to accept the amendments which will be offered by our party to correct the tragic provisions of this bill, which I have pointed out. A more patriotic, hard-working group than the American farmer does not exist. Certainly, I for one expect to keep faith with him.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, most of us from agricultural districts are greatly disappointed in this bill. I think every Member of the House who represents an agricultural district knows that.

Our farmers have probably reached the most stable basis in American agriculture. We have made great progress. We have made progress when it comes to conserving our soil. We have made progress in improving our pastures. We have made progress in greater yields per acre. We are rotating crops, terracing lands, conserving soils, reforesting marginal lands, dredging low lands, and making the greatest progress in our history. I think it can be said without any fear of successful contradiction that American agriculture now is upon the firmest foundation in American history. But along comes this bill. I do not want any mistake made about it. I have never indulged in partisan policies on this floor, but I want the farmers to know and I want the country to know that this is a Republican bill. It is the product of Republican brains, and I think that some of our friends on the left who can now take full credit for it, should pause to think. The farmers are going to know what political party is responsible for this bill.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I yield briefly.

Mr. GROSS. It may be a Republican bill or any other bill, but I am going to support it because it is going to save thousands of GI's from going into bankruptcy, due to the reckless loaning of money to the GI's by a Government that is just a do-good outfit.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield for a speech. I have the gentleman's statement and I am not surprised at his going along with his Republican leaders in supporting this bill to cut the American farmers. The gentleman usually goes along with his party.

Mr. Chairman, I do not have time to discuss everything in the bill that I would like to discuss, but there are some cuts in the bill that are so hurtful, some cuts in this bill that stick out like a sore thumb, that I am constrained to devote my short time to those matters.

Of course, the bill as a whole, if we might use Shakespeare's language, "is the most unkindest cut of all." I do not know of a single agency in the Federal Government that has suffered so much at the hands of this Republican-controlled Congress as the Department of Agriculture. I know of no group that has suffered so much and will suffer so greatly as the man between the plow handles, as the result of this bill. Why should this happen to the farmers? As one who was born and reared on a farm and who now lives on a farm, I protest the treatment of the farmer by the Republican leadership in this Congress.

Mr. Chairman, under the question of soil conservation, they have cut the item for soil conservation research—that is something that every man who is interested in the United States should be interested in, every man in the city ought to be interested in, planning to make this country greater, agriculturally speaking—and to do that we ought not cut out the very vital element of research. We must have knowledge. It is the foundation of our great agricultural progress. Our new knowledge has contributed to the bountiful crops we now have—great crops—great yields—national agricultural security. Yet this great subcommittee in the Eightieth Congress has seen fit to cut this item, not by 10 percent or 20 percent or 30 percent, but by 52 percent.

I have read the report. I know the philosophy under which the committee, or perhaps I should say the distinguished chairman, the affable gentleman from Illinois cut this item. But I disagree with the committee and with the chairman in this. We must continue to have research and experimentation for our farmers just as we have in other phases of vital American life. This cut of 52 percent is too deep, to say the least.

In the Conservation Service, in the Soil Conservation Service, they have made a cut of 12½ percent, but that cut is based upon the number of soil-conservation districts we had last year. If you consider the number of districts, 1,838, which we had at the time of the writing of the bill last year, it is a cut of 12½ percent, but we have 200 more districts now and the districts are now increasing at the rate of about 20 a month. I am informed that if you take into consideration the districts as they now stand the cut is about 22 percent. That means a lack of personnel out in the field. I believe in economy, but if you are going to cut out the man who goes out to the farm to help the farmer, goes out and helps the one-gallus farmers, what can you expect in this country? The field personnel help in many farm programs and this cut means less help for the farmer. I do not like that cut.

Mr. Chairman, I wish now to talk very briefly about another cut in this bill which is very bad. In 1946 when the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Tarver, took this floor and offered his amendment to fix the triple A payments or soil conservation payments at $300,000,000, it was adopted in this House overwhelmingly. The gentleman from Georgia then, as is revealed by the record, put the House on notice that it was establishing a precedent, that it was establishing a fixed sum and he warned the House that if they did not want to do that then was the time to vote against it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. It goes even further. It goes so far as to fix it by statutory law. It becomes law.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. That is just what I am getting to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Very briefly.

Mr. GORE. And when the Congress took that action it made a commitment with the farmers of the country. Following that action the programs have been signed, the farmers have entered into the operation of the program, yet now we are breaking faith, we are reneging on that contract.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I thank the gentleman. That is what I was just coming to.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. No; my time is short; I yielded to the gentleman once, and I ask him please to let me continue with my remarks.

At that time Mr. Tarver, in presenting his amendment, said this:

> Mr. Chairman, I am presenting for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole the question to which I made reference a few moments ago; that is, whether or not you are going to authorize for the crop year 1947 program $300,000,000. I am presenting it in language which is so definite in character as to admit of no misconstruction. It is the time now to decide whether you want to reduce the 1947 crop-year program, not next year after the plans of the Department and those of State AAA authorities and the farmers have already been completed. If we want to reduce it, reduce it now and reject my amendment and offer some other amendment to indicate a lower figure.
> But if you want to fix it definitely and in such form as to enable the farmers of the country to rely upon it implicitly so that even the Bureau of the Budget cannot disregard it, then adopt the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. Chairman, that is what the gentleman from Georgia said in submitting the amendment and it is written into the act. We Democrats consider this a solemn obligation of the Government of the United States. Acting upon that, allocations were made to the various States. An allocation was made to the State of Louisiana and all others and that allocation, that money, in the various States has already been largely allocated and taken up in effect in the numerous States. In the State of Louisiana on April 30 there had been allocated of its allotment 69 percent.

What are we going to do? Along comes this committee, speaking for the Republican Party in the Eightieth Congress, and says, "We know in effect that the Congress did that, but one Congress cannot bind another Congress." There is no disputing the fact that one Congress cannot bind another Congress, but, Mr. Chairman, one Congress can write a solemn commitment and we on this side of the aisle take the view that this was a commitment and we want and urge this Congress to live up to it.

Mr. Chairman, what are we going to do? What is the American farmer going to expect in the future? What can the American farmer rely on? The Republican leadership has gone back on this 1946 amendment and declines to give the American farmer this fund which we think the last Congress practically committed. We take the position that this is an obligation, a commitment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman realizes, of course, that in each and every contract signed up this spring there is a clause that the carrying out of the contract by the Government depends upon the action of the Congress in making the funds available?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Every farmer, I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota, knows that all these payments depend upon the money being appropriated by the Congress of the United States; but every farmer expects the Congress of the United States to live up to its commitments, even if the Republicans are running Congress. Do not forget that there are Republican farmers relying on this also, and if this money is not made available to them they should know who is doing it to them.

Mr. Chairman, I wish I had time to go ahead and discuss briefly other things. The school-lunch program has been cut from $75,000,000 to $45,000,000. That goes into the stomachs of the poor children out in the country. You have seen fit to cut it. Oh, yes, you can vote to send things to Europe, but some of you cannot vote to fill the stomachs of the poor hungry child. I hope you will vote to correct this situation and provide funds for these school lunches.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ABERNETHY. There were recorded here the other day only 86 votes against sending $350,000,000 more to Europe.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. That is right, and most of the gentlemen on the right and the left voted for it.

Now, I want to discuss something else here very briefly in conclusion, and that is section 32 funds. More than 10 years ago this Congress went on record and arranged through our imports to get a certain fund. Everybody in this House knows about it. That fund was also solemnly dedicated, but we have seen the spectacle in this House in the good year of 1947 that this august body voted in effect a few minutes ago and probably will vote again later, because you have the votes to do it with and we recognize that, to take section 32 funds from the farmer entirely. We recognize the fact that the Republican steam roller is rolling along smoothly and it will probably roll along smoothly on this bill. But, you have seen fit to cut that fund out. You have seen fit to take that fund from the great American farmer, and you have got the votes to do it with. Gentlemen, that is the farmer's money. That is a sort of sacred fund. That fund has a solemn dedication, and we have throughout the years recognized that. The Democratic Congresses never wavered from the commitments of 1935, but here in this good time of 1947 it is being snatched away, ruthlessly taken away from the American farmers. I do not think that our farmers are going to like that. Even Republican farmers are not going to like that.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the farmer who gets up before daylight and works into the night, I do not think that the young men coming back from the armed services who helped to win this war and who are going back to the farms and who have to work early and late as I did back there, I do not think that they are going to like it and I plead with you not to do this. The late Senator Borah, a great Republican, I understand offered the amendment for the section 32 funds, and yet in 1947 under the leadership of his party, the great work of Borah is stricken down.

I plead that we may forget partisanship and stand by our farmers, North, South, East, and West. This is a national problem. Agriculture must be sustained. Let us vote on both sides of the aisle to restore these funds to the American farmer.

I appeal to this House to rectify this great injustice to producing America.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it can be successfully disputed that the Federal Government has wasted billions of dollars in the past 10 to 15 years. It cannot be disputed that a great deal of money has been spent unnecessarily. It is certainly time that this Government should about face and economize wherever possible, in order that the heavy tax burden now being borne by the American people be reduced, and in order that the tremendous public debt of approximately $260,000,000,000 be reduced as rapidly as possible.

I expect to cooperate with economy-minded Representatives in Congress, to that end, whether they be Democrats or Republicans. I firmly believe that governmental expenditures should be sharply curtailed, that taxes should be reduced as rapidly as possible, and that the public debt should be reduced as rapidly as possible.

I do not believe, however, that this appropriation bill which we are considering today should pass as it has been reported out by the Appropriations Committee. Before we vote on this very important measure, I want to call to the attention of the committee and of the House, that, at the present rate of soil erosion, about one hundred and seven million acres, or approximately 25 percent of our farm land, is deteriorating rapidly. That is to say, the fertility of our soil and the top soil itself, is being depleted by the growth of soil-depleting crops and by erosion caused by rainfall and dust storms. The experts who make it their business to know the facts concerning soil depletion and soil erosion state that unless this approximately one-fourth of our cropland is treated within the next 13 years—by 1960—it will be irreparably damaged, and that it will be too late to take remedial steps after 1960 for this one-fourth portion of our cropland.

In addition to that, there is another portion of our cropland which is rapidly eroding. More than 110,000,000 acres of our cropland is eroding in such a serious way that its productive capacity will be permanently impaired unless that acreage is treated within 23 years from this time—by 1970.

In the first part of April this year, because of the fact that I realized that the preservation of our top soil and our productive cropland is of vital importance to all of us, I asked the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress to give me a report of croplands which would show the rate per annum at which our soil resources are being depleted, and which would show whether the rate of depletion is decreasing or increasing, comparing the present-day rate with the rate 10 years ago, and 25 years ago. On May 1, 1947, I was furnished this report. It shows that the rate of depletion by erosion on unprotected land is increasing with every year of use. It shows on conservation-protected land an entirely different situation; that is, that on conservation-protected land, the rate of depletion is decreasing rapidly, and there is little, if any, loss of soil from such land for such time as the protection is maintained. This report shows, however, that approximately 90 percent of the farm land which is subject to erosion is still without adequate protection.

For the country as a whole, then, the total depletion is reduced as the acreage of completely treated land is increased. This report shows that the rate of erosion is increasing, but the area in which erosion is taking place is being reduced as the conservation treatment progresses. This reduction of area in which erosion is taking place has been due in large measure to the soil-conservation program of the Agriculture Department of our Government.

The report which I mentioned above gives the further important information that about 500,000 acres of former cropland is being ruined each year as the result of erosion, and is rendered useless for any further practical cultivation. Surely these facts are sufficient to impress thinking people with the fact that a continuation of the conservation program of our Department of Agriculture is very necessary.

I believe that this report, which was furnished me by the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress, is conservative. I believe that it is reliable. I do not believe that it is exaggerated. I asked for it so that I might have the facts to make up my own mind when the question of continuing this soil conservation program came up in the House. The financing of this soil conservation program, in my opinion, is an instance of money well spent by the Government.

In the time allotted to me, I cannot, of course, begin to cover the many items contained in this appropriation bill. There is one other item, however, which I wish to discuss more or less briefly. That is the school-lunch program.

Again I wish to state that I expect to cooperate with all those who want to run the Government economically. But if an item is appropriate for Government financing, why not finance it adequately? This is not an issue that ought to be straddled. Either the school-lunch program is a good program or it is a bad program.

The Appropriations Committee, by their action in setting up $45,000,000 for the school-lunch program, has endorsed it, and given it the committee's approval. Forty-five million dollars, however, is not enough to finance the program for the coming school year. Seventy-five million dollars is the amount needed. Even with $75,000,000 appropriated for the school year which ends June 30, 1947, we still lacked $6,000,000 of completely financing the program for this current school year. It was necessary to go thrcugh a battle on the floor of the House on April 1 to get this additional $6,000,000 to carry the program through the school year. If we are going to finance the program, why not finance it at one time and eliminate all the hurly-burly and scurrying around and fighting on the floor of the House between those who favor the program and those who oppose it, as we had to do on April 1 to get this little deficiency balance?

How is it consistent to vote for forty-five million and refuse to vote for $75,000,000?

I do not think it is necessary to reiterate and argue here that this school-lunch program means better health for school children through defeating malnutrition. There are many children throughout the United States who do not receive balanced meals at home, but who through the school-lunch program have been able to receive one complete, balanced meal per day. This means a great improvement in health. It means that the general health and well-being of the children have improved, and that the children actually make better grades when they receive this balanced lunch at school. The improvement in their physical condition will go with them throughout their entire lives.

In this connection, I cannot help remembering one of the first speeches I heard here when I became a Member of Congress in January. I well remember that on January 8, which was the third day the House held sessions at the present term, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], chairman of the subcommittee which brought out the present bill, took the floor of the House and made quite a lengthy speech, calling the attention of the Members of the House to the very large proportion of young men examined for military service who were found unfit physically. He gave the actual figures and the percentages in every State in the Union and this can be found on page 186 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of January 8, 1947 The percentage of young men rejected for military service because of physical unfitness ranged from 23.1 percent in Utah, which was the lowest, to 44.2 percent in South Carolina, which was the highest. In the gentleman's speech he pointed out that the principal causes for rejection were eye defects, defective teeth, defective feet, and heart ailments.

It is well known that a proper, balanced diet is a great contributing factor to good eyesight, good teeth, good bones, and robust physical development. On January 8 the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] was greatly concerned about the physical fitness of our young men for military service. We should be greatly concerned now about the physical fitness of our young people. It is of the utmost importance to our future security that our young men and young women should be strong, healthy, and physically fit. One of the cheapest and most effective ways in which we can assure this physical fitness is to provide them the proper food which they will get through this school-lunch program, which, in the long run, is money well spent and money well applied.

I especially call the attention of the committee in the House to the analysis of funds for the national school-lunch program, as submitted by State educational agencies, which was placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on February 17, 1947, by Senator AIKEN. This table shows that the school-lunch program is welcomed throughout the United States, including the District of Columbia. The children of Illinois, the home State of the gentleman who is the chairman of the subcommittee reporting this appropriation bill out, have written letters to me asking me to support the school-lunch program. I have had similar requests from many sections of the United States. In this analysis of funds on page 1069 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is given a complete tabulation of the amounts allotted to each State. It is something every Member should read and study.

How can we refuse to continue this program on an adequate basis, in the face of the fact that we are sending hundreds of millions of dollars al' over the face of the earth, that we are subsidizing users of the mail by paying a part of their postage expense, that we are subsidizing ocean traffic, air traffic, and other items considered to be in the national interest?

I have heard it said by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from New York, that the States have plenty of money and ought to finance this program themselves. On one occasion, at the very time this contention was being made by the gentleman from New York, a strike of school teachers was going on in the gentleman's own home State, which in itself indicates that the State was not financing its school program, and I presume because of lack of funds. Certainly they would not refuse to pay the teachers if they had the money. We cannot insist that money be taken from funds needed for school teachers' salaries and apply it to the financing of a school-lunch program. No one wants the school teachers to pay for the school-lunch program, which that would mean.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, I have very great confidence in the farmers of America. It would seem that I have a greater confidence than the gentleman who preceded me, the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Does not the gentleman from California feel that the average farmer in America wants to do his share toward helping to balance the budget of this great Nation?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. From the days of Cato when he spoke of the farm population as being the safest, the population most to be trusted, and the population less given to intrigue, I think we have found in every emergency, and especially in the history of this Nation, that the solution of that emergency and the strength to meet the emergency have come primarily from the rural areas of America.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Does the gentleman feel that we on this subcommittee or we in Congress would be doing anybody, whether he be a veteran or a nonveteran, a favor by helping him to buy farm lands today which are inflated out of sight above their true value? It would simply mean that that particular man would go broke in a few years. I certainly cannot see where we have done anything but justice in eliminating entirely the farm-tenancy program for the present. We will restore these loans when land prices moderate in value.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Translated into the simple language of the gentleman from Minnesota there is no answer but "No." I agree. I do not think this House at any time desires to appropriate less money than is needed for the essential agricultural requirements of America, nor does it wish to appropriate any money which would be disadvantageous to the veterans, to the young men, or to the farmers.

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HAYS. My reading of the record did not reflect that there was any testimony offered to the committee to the effect that the Bankhead-Jones loans are adding at all to the inflationary influences in this country at the present time.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Will the gentleman permit me to answer that very briefly?

The evidence before the committee was that the prices of farms, such as those desired by the young men who would ask for a 100-percent loan, had risen to a point where a break in price or a recession was about to occur. There were in many areas of the United States definite evidences of people anxious to sell their farms, anxious to sell them under the terms of these 100-percent loans, because by that means Uncle Sam would be assuming the burden and they would be out from under, and would have loaded them upon the shoulders of the veterans before the recession went any further. That was very definitely before the committee and had, I think, the largest influence in removing that particular fund until this committee, and until the whole Congress, could see just what situation develops. I think the gentleman from Arkansas will agree with me that in the past this House has never been niggardly toward the veterans or toward the younger farmers under any of the acts passed by this House.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman will recall the President's statement last week which had a great influence on the subcommittee in revising their estimates on this particular item.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The gentleman from Arkansas is familiar with that statement by the President of the United States that we are in a dangerous period for the purchase of farms, and that did influence the committee.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN] and I as two members of the subcommittee which brought the bill to the floor and two of the members of that committee who represent districts which are almost entirely agricultural, have added to the subcommittee report what might be called minority reports. They are not minority reports in the sense that we opposed the other members of the committee. They are additional views, in which both of us separately have said that in our opinion this bill is not cut as much as it could be. Remember that we speak for farmers, we speak for men and women who went to the polls in November and said that they wanted a sound economy, that they wanted a balanced budget, and that they felt that if we are to support the entire world in a style to which that world hopes to become accustomed, it is better for all of us, including the farmers themselves, to do it with sound money and with a balanced budget.

We have here another one of the great rambling agencies of Government, with no deliberate desire to grow, but simply growing through the requests of the farmers of America, from a small agency to one which now covers acres of ground and employs 70,000 people.

So, I agree with the gentleman from Minnesota who has already spoken, that there are many places in this bill where further cuts could have been made.

It is not my desire to talk about the whole bill. I would like to pay my respects as the newest member of the Subcommittee on Agriculture to the chairman and to the other members who did a tremendously hard job. It is not easy to cut a bill. It is very easy to appropriate money. It is tremendously hard to cut a bill and to cut it especially in matters with which you are so closely associated as all of us were.

So I thought I would take one or two of the items that are in the bill and say a little about them and suggest what might have been behind the cuts, in my mind at least, and in my vote in the subcommittee.

The AAA appropriation, that is, the payments to the farmers for doing things which most of them would have gladly done without the payments, and which they would have to do if they are to continue to be successful farmers, is one of the items now which comes up for discussion. It is said that we cut a great deal of money from that appropriation. I point out now that the Bureau of the Budget wished to apply $100,000,000 of section 32 funds to those payments, a transfer of funds with which the subcommittee was not entirely in favor. We actually took off that item about $117,000,000.

It has already been pointed out, before I came on the floor, that these payments could be divided into groups of certain sizes. There was some 63 percent of the total in checks of $60 or less; that is, the money total. They went, however, to only 22 percent of all the farmers who are receiving these payments. There was 17 percent in money total going to the farmers who received checks of from $60 to $100. There was, however, 19.31 percent, or less than 20 percent of the money, going to 60 percent of the farmers in checks of from $100 up.

I ask you, Mr. Chairman, and anyone who knows the farming situation, if you do not agree with me that practically all of these farmers would not only have made the same improvements or done the same work on their farms and that they would have done it without the payments from the Federal Government as quickly as they would have done it with the payments. I received a petition a year ago from one of my counties asking us to stop these payments, even though the signers were receiving them. I find it difficult to believe that the farmers themselves are doing the mourning which is heard upon the floor of this House today.

I wish to call the attention of the Members of the House to an actual contract, which I hold in my hand, sent to me by the man and woman, joint owners of a farm, for whom it was filled out and to whom it was sent. He sent it to me saying that he hoped this could be cut out and would I please do all that I could to see it is eliminated.

I want to call the attention of the House today to the words printed in very plain type on the front of this contract at a place where they could not possibly be missed, if a farmer even looked at it casually, in readable type, and not in the proverbial fine type on the back of the contract which we joke about in insurance contracts. This is what it says:

> Payments under the 1947 agricultural conservation program are subject to the appropriation hereinafter made for this purpose by the Congress.

The committee decided that we could pay the people who would receive $60 or less the full amount, those who would receive $100 three-quarters of the payments, and those who would receive from $100 to $500 half the amount, and those who would receive over $500 nothing at all, or up to a quarter of their amount. We certainly have fulfilled any obligation which might have been imposed, not by us but by the field representatives of the Department, for the smaller farmers of the United States who have been so emotionally spoken about today.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman has read the language that was carried in the agreement. Inasmuch as similar language has been carried there for many years, and the Congress has consistently in past years met its obligation and appropriated the funds, just exactly how far does the gentleman think that his farmer and my farmer should go regarding that as something that deterred him from engaging in the practice himself? I would like to get the gentleman's practical experience from his contact with the men in the field.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. If we may leave it as a practical proposition, it becomes a very easy question to answer. It is still a fact, whether the farmer read it this year or 2 years ago. If the farmer received a check in previous years, there was no reason for him to believe the statement was not a fact in the contract which he read this year. The only question is, are we to pay, in my opinion, the farmers with the larger incomes, the farmers who would receive from $100 up in checks—are we to pay them in full or not? I have expressed my opinion that I believe those farmers themselves, if a questionnaire was sent to them, would in great majority say that they would support the report of this committee.

Mr. PACE. If you could pay only one or the other?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Yes, if you could pay only one or the other. Does the gentleman think that the money should be divided among all? In which case it would be about 50 percent for all.

Mr. PACE. Well, I feel very deeply that the Congress should fulfill its obligation that we made last year and appropriate the funds we promised for the program.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I thank the gentleman. I think, from all the farmers I have talked to, their reaction will be very favorable to an ending of the program, whether it comes abruptly in the middle of a payment season or whether we wait until the end and stop it then. I think most of the farmers will look upon it as a saving of $117,000,000.

I wanted to speak about the Research Act, for which $19,000,000 was asked and for which the committee appropriated $6,000,000. I was a member of the Legislative Committee while this was going through. I went home and, you might say, campaigned on the platform that the two outstanding acts of the Seventy-ninth Congress were the passage of the Research Act and the passage of the Reorganization Act. I came back and to my very intense disappointment found that the Department of Agriculture was not setting up a merchandising research section or bureau under the terms of the act, but was setting up a sort of an adjunct to the Production Research Act.

This discussion appears in the hearings. I have carried it on with representatives of the Department ever since, including the Secretary recently. I have here the most recent chart handed me by the Secretary showing the set-up. I will say very briefly that any organization in the Department of Agriculture which attempts to set up this merchandising research service so clearly outlined in the bill and in the report, by putting production research head over here, balancing the production marketing administration head over here, then showing under him, as one of the four subheads, the assistant administrator for marketing who is intended to be the man referred to in the Legislative Research Act, thus putting him where he is inferior in organization position, and not balancing this position, that certainly was not intended by the Legislative Committee as I understood the act at the time I was a member. I think the subcommittee was very generous in giving $6,000,000. I would have given $4,250,000, which was half of the first year's amount and then said to the Department that they could come back if they set up the agency as we asked them to set it up. I have repeatedly said that $19,000,000 would be a very small sum to pay for what the Legislative Committee wanted, but a very expensive sum to pay for what they are now getting in the present organization.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to my distinguished friend the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I wish the gentleman would explain to the House the effect of this cut and whether or not in time under this cut we will have a correlation of all the experimental work? What I am trying to get at is the difference between experimental work and research work.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. There is very close correlation between production and marketing and research on both sides, and there has to be. For that reason the setting up of a coordinating office is very good.

In the past 10 years we have had our appropriations for marketing research absorbed in production research, and it was the desire of the legislative committee, I am positive, to set up a marketing or merchandising research program which could stand on its own feet, be identified, and the expenditures identified and coordinated. I am sure the gentleman from Wisconsin will agree that production research would benefit the farmers of the country at a time when, using a very familiar expression, it is really later than we think. We must build up production, the delivery of the produced food, from the farm to the consumer, as we have built up ability in the United States to produce beyond all other nations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I thank the gentleman very much. Let me proceed very briefly just to illustrate one of the little agencies in the Government which in my opinion has not been overly cut. We have a little office called the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations. Back in the days when I myself spent quite a bit of time with some of these men in Germany and France, and in other countries, we were giving the agency about $180,000 per year and it was very effective, it was a very good agency of the Department of Agriculture. The agency asked this year for $738,000, and I can assure you that the job now done is in no way comparable to the job that was being done when they got $180,000.

The committee only reduced that $100,000, down to $638,000. As it is now, reports come in from abroad from men who are not always trained in reporting. They are supposed to arrive on the first of the quarter, shall we say? They are much more apt not to arrive, or to arrive late. They go to the State Department. They are looked over by someone in the State Department to see if they are satisfactory from a departmental viewpoint. They then go to the Department of Agriculture to be looked over by the Bureau of which I am speaking. They go back to the State Department to be looked over by specialists for that particular country or part of the world. They go to another bureau to be corrected for English and syntax. When that is all accomplished, they are so little like the original report they go back to the Bureau to see if they can be put into some workable form for the farmer. By the time they get to the farmer they are matters of historic interest and not current reports such as we used to get from the agency when it received smaller appropriations. I am citing that as one agency which, in my opinion, has not been overly cut.

Finally, this matter of section 32 funds has been a matter of a great deal of discussion. I think there was some misunderstanding about it. There was on my part. There was also some misunderstanding about the funds before they came down from the Bureau of the Budget, because if you add up with your little adding machine you will find the Bureau of the Budget asked for $100,000,000 out of those funds for the AAA; they asked for $75,000,000 for school lunches; they expected to use $900,000 for management of the marketing agreements; that adds up to more than $145,000,000 or $148,000,000 which might be available next year.

There was some question about uses of the fund. One hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars for teaching people to eat fish is hardly a proper claim against section 32 funds. In the last few days some technical information has reached me from people who are interested in this, which makes me believe that because of the perishable nature of some commodities and also the relationship which the gentleman from Georgia has pointed out between sections 22 and 32, there should be a correction made in this section of the bill, and I am confident, without taking any more of the Committee's time, that this can be properly worked out before the bill comes up tomorrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH].

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, the Agriculture appropriation bill before us today is the ninth appropriation bill, including the three deficiency measures, to come before the House from the Committee on Appropriations. As a member of that committee I can, with pardonable pride, testify to the painstaking manner in which various operations of the respective departments and agencies have been studied and their needs appraised. The hearings on each and every bill have been exhaustive.

In the instance of the bill before us, for example, it will be noted that the printed hearings fill two volumes of 2,669 pages of testimony. As stated in the committee report accompanying the bill, "an aggregate of departmental, congressional, and outside witnesses would easily total 500 persons." Aside from the actual hearings, the committee members spend many hours and days in personal study of the items involved. Properly to appraise the financial requirements of a department or agency necessitates a complete knowledge of the laws being administered.

The thoroughness, the laborious care with which the Committee on Appropriations has prepared the bills it has reported merits special mention. Over the past several years there was a disposition on the part of Congress to accept, practically without question, every recommended expenditure. We all well remember the days of "blank check" appropriations. It is obviously difficult for the bureaucrats to realize that these days are over; that this new Congress intends to maintain control of the purse strings and to make no appropriations that are not clearly justified.

Whenever the Appropriations Committee reports a bill reducing some item of expenditure or eliminating some other, there inevitably follows this campaign we are experiencing here today to have the cut restored. Our committee is accused of being arbitrary. But, if nothing else, the voluminous hearings that are held should be persuasive evidence that no decision is arbitrary. On the contrary, each decision on each item is the result of long and careful consideration.

The situation is well expressed by the following paragraph to be found on page 5 of the report accompanying the bill before us:

> The committee could follow the route of indiscriminate reductions for the purpose of effecting economies but such a course might result in the serious crippling of essential functions or in nullifying the remainder of the appropriation carried for such an activity. On the other hand, the committee can follow a basic approach which preserves the essential functions, eliminates those which are not regarded as indispensable, and reduces waste, extravagance, and duplication with constant emphasis upon those research activities which in the judgment of the committee are regarded as essential.

In our determination to reduce the cost of Government, to balance the budget and to reduce taxes, the Committee on Appropriations is not recommending indiscriminate reductions in expenditures, as some would have the people believe. As I believe I stated on previous occasions on this floor, some justification can be found for practically every expenditure; but we must determine what is necessary and what is a luxury that we cannot afford. We must select the things that are essential and eliminate the unessential. To economize we simply must have the will to economize.

When the New Deal came into control of the Government our annual budget was only $4,500,000,000. We then entered upon the so-called spend-and-elect policy, and the average budget before the war amounted to $10,000,000,000. The budget submitted to Congress last January by President Truman for the next fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1947, called for $37,500,000,000. In other words, 2 years after the war the Administration proposed to spend three times the average expenditure before the war. It just does not make sense, and particularly considering the fact that we have a national debt of $268,000,000,000.

It is most unfortunate that the administration is unwilling to cooperate with the Congress in placing the country on a sound fiscal basis. President Truman has publicly stated that his $37,500,000,000 budget should not be reduced. We have had very little cooperation from the departments and bureaus in our efforts to find ways and means to cut expenses. And every appropriation bill that has come to this floor has encountered amendments offered by the Democrats to increase the respective items that have been cut.

Our Democratic friends have made some very fine speeches about how they believe in economy; but, as the record shows, they have for the most part voted against every saving proposed. It is my conviction, however, that in reducing the Government expenditures we are complying with the wishes of the great mass of American people.

The bill under consideration is the sixth regular appropriation bill, as distinguished from the deficiency bills, reported by the Committee on Appropriations. Five have passed the House and one of them has also passed the Senate. The savings made in these respective bills are as follows:

Labor-Federal Security	$103,415,959
Treasury-Post Office	897,072,750
Interior	134,006,907
State-Justice-Commerce - Judiciary	159,650,451
Navy	377,519,200
Agriculture	383,427,742

As of the moment, the Congress has reduced the proposed expenditures for the next fiscal year by $2,055,093,009. We have thus made a very substantial beginning for placing the Government on a peacetime basis. Not a single essential function of the Government will be impaired by any of these cuts in the appropriations. Insofar as I am personally concerned, I believe that even larger cuts could be made in certain items. But the progress that has been made, considering the opposition from the administration and various pressure groups to any reductions, is indeed gratifying.

A reduction in the Government expenditures automatically reduces the number of persons on the Federal pay roll. This, in itself, will eliminate many bureaucrats who have perplexed, harassed, annoyed, and even retarded business with their complicated regulations and countless forms.

By thus reducing Government expenditures, we are able to give our people relief from the heavy burden of taxes, and at the same time reduce the national debt. Taxes have become so high that there is very little incentive for starting a new business or expanding an existing one. As demonstrated in the last war, the productive strength of the United States comes from the thousands of small companies. If we are to have an expanding economy, these small companies must be encouraged to grow and new ones must be brought into existence.

I do not at this time intend to get into a discussion of the effect of high taxes on American production. But I do wish to emphasize that the very first step in any program for making our system of private enterprise function—that all the people may enjoy a higher standard of living—is to eliminate waste and extravagance in Government spending.

I am proud to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations, which is pursuing this objective, and I am confident that the House will uphold the committee on its work. Doubtless some of you have special interest in certain items in this bill and would like to see larger sums appropriated. But in any economy program all of us, whatever our interests, must make certain sacrifices for the common good.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE].

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION PROGRAM

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself to two features of the agriculture appropriation bill in which Illinois farmers are greatly interested—rural electrification and the soil-conservation program.

Rural electrification is on the threshold of its greatest opportunity for progress. Construction, retarded by war and shortages of manpower and materials, is now able to move forward again at an accelerated pace. Two and a half million farm families still are without electric service and they are waiting impatiently for the light and power that they have seen applied so profitably on other farms in this country.

Yet in the face of this great unfinished job, this House is being asked to cut back the rural electrification program. The agriculture appropriation bill proposes to make this cut-back in two ways. First the bill proposes to reduce the REA loan funds by $25,000,000. There are some who are under the delusion that there is no reduction being made in these loan funds. The fact of the matter is that REA under the bill as it now stands would have $25,000,000 less money to lend for rural electrification. Second, the bill proposes to make a slash of nearly 30 percent in the REA administrative appropriation, a slash so deep that the whole program will be slowed down.

POWER LOBBY INTERESTED

This is not the time to be putting the brakes on rural electrification.

Let me quote from a letter I received a few days ago from a constituent, Mr. Martin Schaefer of Hoyleton, Ill.:

It seems to me—

He writes—

that we have a large number of Members in Congress inexperienced in farm problems who together with those people representing the large power interest are trying to deprive about one-half of our farmers the right to enjoy the standard of living the other half enjoys.

This man then points out that the REA funds are merely loan funds, not appropriations. He goes on to say:

All Congress does is to set aside money to be loaned to REA co-ops which must be repaid with interest. What reason is there to cut this amount to be loaned?

He asks with good reason, and goes on to say:

We pay monthly installments on the loan. On top of it Uncle Sam's got a mortgage which means we don't own anything till the last pole is paid for plus every cent of interest. I can't understand that any Member of Congress could even think of curtailing or stopping such a program.

FARMERS ENTITLED TO BENEFITS

I want to read just one more paragraph:

It seems they have money for witch hunting and frankly I feel that just things like this are what creates Communists. Nobody can undermine our Government from the outside. It must come from within and I think actions like this make Communists when one American farmer can have things which Congress denies his neighbor. It's not hard to make a Communist out of a person who is denied the necessities and comforts of life. When you deny lights, homes, roads, health, etc., to one, and give it to another, you get dissatisfaction, hatred, jealousy, and all the means to destroy our Government, and I hope that your long experience will not permit you to go overboard with those who deny those things that make a happy, healthy Nation.

This letter came to me unsolicited. It shows the people back home are watching us here in Washington.

Let us consider that thought before we undertake to damage the great program of rural electrification.

Funds for adequate administration are necessary to the sound operation of any lending program. No banker would be so foolhardy as to lend his money unless he made sure his loans stood an excellent chance of being repaid.

In addition to making new loans on a sound basis and on a basis that will best advance rural electrification, REA must meet the costs of administering loans already made. It is custodian of the Government's interest in more than $1,000,000,000 in loans made up to now.

I know of no other Government program—or any comparable business enterprise—which is doing as economical and as effective a job. As the record shows, this program is being conducted with about one employee, including messengers and clerical employees, for each borrower. And the average borrower is a $1,000,000 enterprise.

REA HAS ENVIABLE RECORD

I challenge anyone to cite a private-lending institution with such a record. The comparison is even more dramatic when it is remembered that most agencies make loans on a well-established basis for not more than 60 percent of the value of the property mortgaged. REA, on the other hand, is making 100-percent loans to new enterprises. And up to now more than $20,000,000 have been paid ahead of schedule, while delinquencies have been negligible.

Everybody is for rural electrification. Even the power company interests who come before our committees say it is a good thing, but at the same time there are many who are trying to rob the program of its effectiveness. It takes more than nice words to keep rural electrification going forward. This means we must provide adequate administrative funds not only to assure sound lending but sound administration of the entire program. It is false economy to do otherwise. The taxpayers have every right to expect the Government to give as much attention to its loans as a private lending institution does. This attention is necessary in order that the rural-electrification program can continue to move forward on the sound basis that has been established and in order that service can be brought to the two and one-half million farm families still living in the kerosene age.

Let us not be penny-wise and pound-foolish.

SOIL CONSERVATION SERVICE

In my opinion, the proposed cut in the funds for the Soil Conservation Service cuts at the most fundamental part of the agricultural program. The land is the foundation of our agriculture. For generations we neglected it. Finally, after we had experienced giant dust storms, the most devastating floods in our history, and watched tons and acres of our finest land wash down the rivers into the Gulf of Mexico, we decided to do something about it. We were already a hundred years late, but everyone agreed that there was still time if we worked hard and fast.

During the past 10 to 12 years we have made the most remarkable conservation progress of any natior in history. It is true we are still losing our soil over millions of acres every year, but we are also cutting down the rate every year. If we keep at it and support this program, we can put a stop to the waste of erosion, for all practical purposes.

But what does the committee recommend? It would have us cut the appropriation for the Soil Conservation Service by $5,437,000 below the budget estimate, and $5,300,000 below the appropriation granted the Service for the present fiscal year.

VALUABLE AND NECESSARY SERVICE

Almost all of the money appropriated to this Service is used to employ people. And 93 percent of the people hired by this Service are doing technical work of various kinds, expert work, that is directly helping farmers apply sound conservation measures to their land. This, I say, is a valuable and necessary service. It has won the widespread approval of farmers and city people alike. It is a service that is protecting the productive capacity of American agriculture.

Somewhere along the line somebody must have misinformed the committee, because in their report on this bill they say that we do not need as much technical assistance in soil conservation districts now as we did when the districts were new. That, I submit, is a highly erroneous point of view. I have three of the finest soil conservation districts in the country in my congressional district and they have made outstanding progress. But they are actually just getting started. They have 10 or 20 years of hard work ahead of them. Every one of these years, the farmers are going to need the help of these Soil Conservation Service technicians if they are going to do their job right.

The committee seemed to be laboring under the impresison that the Soil Conservation Service sends its men into an area to hold meetings and do educational work. That is certainly not the case. Our State Extension Service does the educational job. What the Soil Conservation Service provides is expert technical assistance to the individual farmer—one farmer after another—in working out the detailed soil and water conservation problems he has on his farm. No other agency of Government does this job.

WORK MUST BE DONE IN FIELD

I know from the experience in my own district that this is the kind of work that has to be done field by field. And you have to go right out onto each field—analyze it thoroughly and build your conservation measures accordingly. It is a painstaking job and one that is going to take some time. It is also going to take some money—but as long as we are going to spend money on agriculture, where can we spend it better, for the most lasting results, than in the protection of our land? What good will it do us to take care of everything else in agriculture if we let our land wash away in the meantime?

There is only one way to conserve our farmlands and stop erosion: That is to put the land experts out there where they can work in soil conservation districts—helping one farmer after another until the whole job is done.

If the Soil Conservation Service is restricted to the funds proposed by the committee it will be forced, according to my information, to cut its assistance to soil conservation districts by 22 percent under the amount furnished this year. Unless we grant the Soil Conservation Service more money—at least enough to work with all the soil conservation districts of the country—we will be undercutting the soil conservation program and falling down on the farmers who want to protect their lands against erosion.

That simply does not make good sense. If we must make these big cuts in the agricultural program, let us make them somewhere in the superstructure. Let us not undermine the foundation of the whole thing.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WORLEY].

AMERICAN AGRICULTURE AT THE CROSSROADS

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Chairman, a distinguished writer once called the parable of the prodigal son the most perfect story plot ever contrived. That parable has provided the framework for the story of human frailties many times in many forms. It provides an ideal framework for the story of American political life of the last decade and a half. Let me tell you the story of American agriculture and American political parties in that framework.

There was a great Nation called the United States. And this Nation had two great political parties. One was called the Democratic Party, and the other was called the Republican Party. Now the Republican Party in the year 1920 said to the Nation, "Give me that part of the estate which is mine. Give me the rulership of this Nation. The Democratic Party has had it long enough."

And the Nation—foolishly—did as it was asked. It gave to the Republicans the rich inheritance of leadership of the land which had become the wealthiest and the strongest on earth.

But, alas, this party encouraged lavish and worthless investments in far-off countries. It watched the paper values of the exchanges on Wall Street rise high on the hot wind of speculation. It looked at the ticker tape and clapped its hands and said, "All is right with the world. Such and such a stock is up another five points."

Yes; stocks on the market exchanges were up. And that seemed good indeed. But stocks on the farm were up, too—piling up year by year in mountainous surpluses of cotton and wheat—and that was bad, because as the surpluses grew, the prices shrank until taxes, mortgages, and interest ate up all the income, and farmers were knocked into bankruptcy like tenpins by the big black ball of economic depression.

First it was only the farmers. But then, like a great dark cloud, economic catastrophe overtook the speculators in the exchanges, and the manufacturers, bankers, and merchants in the markets, and the laborers and clerks in their humble homes. A terrible famine of jobs and profits spread over the whole land. The price of wheat was never so low in three centuries as it was then. The value of farm exports was never so low in well-nigh 50 years. The buying power of farmers' products fell to about half their pre-World War level. The farm fourth of the Nation virtually ceased to be customers for city goods.

Desperate in the effort to hold their properties, farmers mined the soil, frantically endeavoring to dig up, as if by the roots, enough cash to meet their costs of interest and taxes. And millions of acres lost fertility and topsoil while farmers lost their homes and their land.

Agriculture was prostrate.

Mr. Chairman, the low state to which agriculture had fallen by 1932 is not easily forgotten. In that year farm operators went bankrupt at a rate of one every 2 minutes—and this they did 24 hours a day and 7 days a week. Many farm laborers were glad to work for room and board. Mortgage debt alone took a tenth of the farmer's gross income—to say nothing of taxes and other costs.

The average price of a bushel of wheat fell to 38 cents; corn to 32 cents; oats to 16 cents. The price of a pound of tobacco was 11 cents; cotton, 7 cents; beef, 4 cents; hogs, 3 cents.

And the carry-over of cotton rose almost fourfold in less than a decade, so that the people of my own State of Texas and of the whole South trembled on the brink of wholesale bankruptcy.

And over the radio punsters quipped, with an undertone of fear in their voices, about signs in public places being changed from "Keep off the grass" to "Don't eat the grass."

The Republican Party had dissipated the Nation's economy. Such was the inheritance of the Democratic Party when called upon by the people to rehabilitate a prostrate Nation.

Then began the long struggle which has brought to this Nation the greatest agricultural prosperity it has ever known.

Net income from agriculture last year was not two or three times, but eight times as great as in 1932.

Foreclosures and assignments were reduced not to one-half or one-fourth of the number in 1932, but to one-twentieth.

From near collapse, American agriculture has today reached a position where it is a hundred-billion-dollar-plus industry, where its quick assets of currency, bank deposits, and Government bonds total some twenty billions, where farmers have a 93 percent equity in their business.

What a difference.

From a level of about 50 percent below parity in 1932, farm prices climbed to 32 percent above parity in October 1946.

From a condition in which the elephant heel of surpluses, of cotton and wheat particularly, were crushing the life out of agriculture, we have today only a normal carry-over of wheat and no more Commodity Credit Corporation cotton to sell.

From a total mortgage debt of about $9,000,000,000 in 1932—and a negligible amount of quick assets—agriculture in mid-1946 had a total mortgage debt of little more than five billions—and quick assets nearly four times that amount.

In 1932 agriculture was flat broke. In 1946 it was richer than at any time in history.

What a difference!

And how that difference is making itself felt. Mr. Chairman, in 1932 farmers were no longer sizable customers for tractors and trucks, for new homes and barns, for furniture and clothing. But today, manufacturers and merchants can hear the jingle jangle of coins in farmers' jeans—and back of those coins are plenty of rectangular green-backed pieces of paper that fall soundlessly but joyously into the cash registers, even as the gentle dew from heaven.

Farmers want tractors—200,000 a year a survey showed, for 3 years after the war's end.

Farmers want trucks and cars—a billion dollars' worth.

Farmers want building improvements—another billion dollars' worth.

Farmers want household goods—$400,000,000 worth a year for 3 years after the war.

And they have the cold cash to back up their wants in a way that gives solid assurance of an era of continued prosperity.

What a difference!

Admittedly, the war was a big factor in the booming prosperity many farmers have enjoyed these last 5 years. But prosperity was well on the way long before Pearl Harbor—long before war broke out in Europe. The growth of buying power of the American farmer started in 1933.

I am not going to recite the details of that climb and of the sweeping agricultural legislation that helped farmers to climb out of the depression. I am merely going to put into a few sentences the highlights of what has been accomplished, using my own State of Texas as an example.

First. The agricultural adjustment program helped farmers produce in accordance with the needs of the people. It enabled them to set up a complete ever-normal granary program which supported prices of basic crops and maintained stable reserves. It made it possible for farmers to use soil-conserving practices that added untold wealth to the Nation's natural resources. Did that program pay dividends? I have heard it said that the ever-normal granary alone meant as much to the Nation in the winning of the war as an extra army or an extra fleet of ships.

Second. Under the national soil-conservation program 30,000,000 acres have been devoted to organized conservation. In 1945 more than half the Nation's farms, containing three-quarters of our cropland, participated in carrying out soil-conserving or erosion-preventing practices. Under this program and the adjustment program, American farmers built up a bank of fertility and they drew upon it heavily to help win the war. Did it pay? In Texas alone some 40,000 farms covering 15,000,000 acres have been aided by the Soil Conservation Service in applying conservation plans. A survey of typical farmers showed that soil conservation enabled them to step up their yields per acre by an average of 26.5 percent.

Third. The farm-credit programs during the tough going of the 1930's helped farmers refinance their mortgages, reduce their interest payments, and keep their farms. Did that pay? In Texas 250,000 Farm Credit and Production Credit Association loans were made in amounts totaling $725,000,000.

Fourth. The farm-security program helped farm tenants become owners and small farm owners to improve their economic position either by getting additional land or by more efficient farming. Did that pay? I wish the 87,000 Texas farmers who received rehabilitation loans were here to answer that question. I wish the 4,000 farmers who took out farm-ownership loans were here to tell you. Already nine-tenths of the principal of the rehabilitation loans has been repaid and the tenant purchase borrowers have paid up 86 percent more than would be required on the basis of equal annual installments to pay their loans in full in 40 years.

Fifth. The rural electrification program brought power and light to millions of American farmers, helping them to increase their production efficiency and to improve their living standards. In Texas alone, from the beginning of the Rural Electrification Administration in 1935 until the end of 1945, a total of $53,500,000 was loaned to provide electric power to farmers. REA loans were used to construct 44,000 miles of distribution lines serving 114,000 consumers in rural Texas. At the end of 1945, REA borrowers in the State had met all interest and principal payments due on their loans and had paid $1,200,000 on principal ahead of due dates. Did it pay? Here is an interesting fact. Eleven years ago when the rural electrification program was started, only about 1 Texas farmer out of 50 had electrical service. That proportion has been stepped up to 1 out of 3. For the whole Nation, the proportion of farms with electricity has risen from about 10 percent to close to 50 percent.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on for a long time talking about the marketing agreements, about water facilities, and flood control, about price supports, commodity loans, and conservation payments. I could talk about the farm-labor program that in 1945 helped more than 77,000 Texas farmers secure workers. I could talk about the research programs which have paid such big dividends to the Nation—hybrid corn seed, for example, or the production of penicillin in commercial quantities, or the development of dusts and sprays containing DDT.

But I am going to pass over all of those features and mention simply the protection farmers are given under the so-called Steagall amendment, which assures price support for major agricultural commodities at 90 percent of parity or higher until January 1, 1949. Thus, American agriculture is protected by a floor under prices. We all know why this measure was adopted. It was adopted because our Democratic Party was determined that American farmers should not again be the forgotten men they were after the other World War. It was adopted because looming very big in the minds of the President and the Congress was the memory of the terrible collapse of farm prices in 1920 and 1921. In less than a year, at that time, farm prices plummeted down more than 40 percent.

That is not happening this time.

Well, there is the record. There are the facts. As has been said: "The farmer and the farmer's family can measure for themselves the vast difference between the desperation which was theirs and the recovery which is theirs." Surely the record—in peace and war alike—is good.

And today the people of this Nation are enjoying the greatest abundance of the products of the farm they have ever known.

Let me again cite the record. With fewer farms and with 10 percent fewer workers than in prewar, with shortages of machinery and materials, without plowing up the parks and plains, American agriculture during World War II stepped up production more than one-third, sent up to one-fourth of its products off to war, and at the same time fed civilians 10 percent better than in peacetime.

Not only that, but year by year and every year—beginning not in 1942 or in 1940 but away back in 1937 and going right through the war—American agriculture set new production records every year. Every year a new record. Every year more food than the year before. Meat production jumped by about one-half over the 1935–39 average, and egg production by about three-fifths. Commercial truck crops increased by about two-fifths. Output of some of the war-valuable vegetable oil crops, such as soybeans and flaxseed, tripled or more than tripled.

And how was it done? Not by putting on three shifts. First, there was not have made much difference anyway, be-labor available and, second, it would not cause three shifts cannot make the land produce and the sun and rain work any faster.

It was done by long hours, by hard work, by technological improvement—and by a legislative program that helped the farmer go all-out.

It was possible only because agriculture had been snatched from the near death of the early 1930's and restored to the vitality and good health of the 1940's.

Now that is a long story about agricultural progress and prosperity. It is a story that should be of great interest to our Republican colleagues because it is the picture of the sound, healthy agricultural situation which they, as members of the dominant party, are inheriting as we begin this year 1947. Will they keep it that way during their tenure of office? It cannot be done by trusting to luck and ignoring the farmer's problems as they have done many times in the past.

Mr. Chairman, there are many problems to be decided about the future—such problems as making full use of the farmers' remarkable increase in productive capacity. Inevitably, there must be readjustment from a wartime to a peacetime production pattern. In times past, the inability to change pace, to shift gears, has been agriculture's biggest handicap. In the last 14 years, however, farmers have learned much about the necessity for making production fit demand—something that industry has long recognized. They have built up the machinery to make that adjustment through the legislative programs and particularly through the national production goals.

Thus, during the war the goals helped farmers produce the tremendous quantities of meat, milk, wheat, corn, cotton, eggs, and other strategic foods that a fighting nation requires. Now with the return of peace the goals are helping agriculture emphasize such production as is most needed.

To make the goal mechanism work, there obviously must be unified action. There must be leadership. In the case of depressed markets, there must be income protection. All these requirements can be provided only by a continuation of full-fledged cooperation between farmers and Government.

Another outstanding problem—a continuing problem and one which farmers have already made a good start in solving—is that of soil and water waste which in the first one-third of this country made almost a million acres a year unfit for further cultivation.

The conservation job is well underway, but there still is a big job ahead. The task of applying the basic soil and water saving measures will take years and—in the interests of the whole American people—there must be no slackening of the work.

And then there is the problem of regaining adequate foreign trade in farm commodities. By means of the World Bank and various international agreements, the Government is endeavoring to help agriculture build up international commerce. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations is another phase of the world-wide effort to make agriculture strong and prosperous so that hunger may eventually be banished from the earth along with the great threat to peace that hunger inevitably carries with it.

The whole marketing picture needs to be examined and in some ways revamped. The recent Democratic Congress took a big step in this direction with the Agricultural Research and Marketing Act, authorizing widespread research to discover new uses for farm products, new markets for old products, new methods in making distribution of farm commodities not only more efficient but also more profitable.

But the most fundamental factor in the maintenance of a prosperous and healthy agriculture is a continuance of a full employment, full production economy.

This is the most elementary economics. The income of the 25,000,000 farm people must come primarily from the spending of the 115,000,000 city, town, and village people. The amount of food money in the city wage earner's pocket is one of the measuring sticks of the farmer's prosperity. In a full employment economy where the wage level is good, much of our new-found agricultural productivity can and will be absorbed.

During the depression a large proportion of city, town, and village people could not buy anywhere near the amount of food they wanted. Millions were seriously undernourished. The effects of their malnutrition were evident not only in lowered health standards but in reduced farm income.

Here is a challenge that should call forth the best that is in us. This great Nation is capable of producing enough food to provide its people with a good diet. The importance of good diet to national health and strength is a fact we cannot afford to ignore. It remains for all of us to make sure that the American people have the means of purchasing the food which farmers are so capable of producing.

We have made great progress toward the goals of security, opportunity, and prosperity. Whatever lies beyond the veil that hides the future from our eyes, this much at least is assured: Never in all American history has agriculture been so well prepared to adjust its operations to demand. Never has it been better able to plan a wise use of the land to provide continuous, abundant, profitable production for the needs of the whole people.

That, I am sure, is the conclusion that even the Republican Party must draw after a good look at the Democratic record.

For the welfare of American agriculture and of the whole Nation, I sincerely hope that the Republican Party will not allow their inheritance of a sound and prosperous agricultural situation to be frittered away.

Mr. Chairman, nothing is more fundamental than to keep agriculture, the backbone of the Nation's economy, straight and strong. But today American agriculture is at the crossroads. It can continue strong and healthy or it can sink into the shabby doldrums of the early thirties. The legislative responsibility of the majority party cannot be alibied or escaped, and if the bill which we are considering today—which arbitrarily cuts, slashes, or eliminates these measures which have been so important to American agriculture—is any indication of the policy which the Republicans intend to follow, then the outlook for agriculture is indeed black.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLSWORTH].

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss some of the forest conservation items in the Forest Service appropriation as shown in H. R. 3601.

Those of us who have been in close touch, for many years, with the work of the Forest Service are concerned by the action taken by the committee. The necessity for developing our forest wealth to the maximum needs no lengthy exposition. The story has been heard frequently on the floors of this Congress.

I am particularly concerned about some of the specific cuts the committee has made. A deep cut in national-forest administration, the great part of which is designed to increase present timber sale business, is short-sighted. I question the committee's comment that a good deal of this is a reduction merely in paper work. Much of this reduction will be felt in the ranger and supervisor jobs, where the ultimate work of the Service must be done. If we want to build our national forests up we cannot reduce in the forces needed to put good management into practice.

I am also concerned about two reductions made in the research items. One deals with the work of the Madison Laboratory. It is regrettable that this cut has been made and the reasons given by the committee that the laboratory has not enjoyed the esteem of the Congress and that its work is academic and visionary seem to me to be quite contrary to the facts. The Laboratory has an enviable reputation for having pioneered and for having advanced the whole field of forest products in America. Its reputation extends beyond the boundaries of America as an outstanding institution, particularly for its contributions to the war. This was accomplished because it was able to draw upon a large backlog of research work. The basic work that the laboratory has advanced has been, and will continue to be, translated into practical things by industry. I want to call attention to some things that are not visionary or impractical accomplishments of the laboratory: They developed the semi-chemical-pulping process now in use, which makes possible pulping of species never used before and with higher yields per cord of wood. This will have real importance if we are to meet the existing paper shortage. The work of the laboratory on converting waste material to yeast and alcohol is now bringing to the field a new industry of considerable importance.

May I say right here that some 3 weeks ago I visited a plant newly erected in Springfield, Oreg., which was producing alcohol, good 192 proof ethyl alcohol from sawdust. This plant at Springfield, Oreg., is a full-scale commercial plant producing some 4,000,000 gallons a year, or it will produce that much when it gets into full production, and it was made possible only because of the Madison Laboratory work on the pilot plant. The work on laminated woods and new packaging techniques furnished the Navy and the Army sources of material for their war needs—material which they never had before and when they needed it most. Those of us in the West who have profited by the findings of the laboratory would feel that it is a mistake to decrease the work at this time.

The other research cut deals with the Forest Survey, which aims to give a sound inventory of our resources, our requirements, and our drains. This work, too, cannot be characterized, as the committee has done, as academic and lacking in practical value. It has been of inestimable value in the Pacific Northwest, where the original survey is completed and is now being maintained. Similar data are needed for all the forest lands of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN], a member of the committee, 30 minutes.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, as we come to the consideration of this Agricultural Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1948, there are a number of curious things in connection with it. I have served on this committee for some several years now and with the members of the Republican majority who were on this committee prior to this year.

The surprising thing when we read this report is that practically every program that has been absolutely ruined in this bill was approved and subscribed to by the Republican members of the subcommittee no later than last year. Having approved these programs last year, it is surprising that we find this year these same gentlemen coming into the Congress with a bill which virtually ruins those programs. Looking back over the situation we may be able to find some explanation for that. Last year this bill was considered shortly before the election. It was then their hope that the Republican Party would recapture control of the House of Representatives and of the Senate. Of course, it is a matter of history that they did so capture control of both of these bodies. The majority of the Members of the House and of the Senate from agricultural regions other than the South are in the Republican Party.

Shortly after that election in November we began to read in the press that the Republican Party came back on the basis it was going to reduce expenditures. That is a worthy objective. Since I have been a Member of this House I have tried to vote for economy in Government. When we got here in January, however, we learned what it was intended to do with these savings that they were going to make through a cut in expenditures. When these four committees met to adopt this $6,000,000,000 reduction, of course that was not binding, but it read good. It read like it was carrying out the mandate of the people to the Republican Party. At that meeting we on the Democratic side tried to provide that such savings as were made would be applied to retirement of the national debt. We understand what it means to do without in order to pay what you owe. Nearly all of us as individuals have had that experience.

In the meeting of these four committees over which the Republicans had control, they refused to provide that the money which was saved would be applied to reduction of the national debt. We saw from the press that another of their promises to the American people was to reduce the income tax. So this $6,000,000,000 cut was tied in with what was then known as the Knutson bill. Under that bill, a man with a $300,000 income would have gotten an increase in his carry-home pay of as much as 69 percent. The small fellow who got $1,000 would have gotten an increase of 2.1 percent and the man with a $10,000 income only 6.1 percent.

In carrying out this commitment, where did they start out in January to get this money, not to apply on the national debt but to be used in passing the Knutson bill which got too hot for them. They passed a bill, however, that is virtually no better. Where did they start out in January to get that money?

When they called the House Appropriations Committee together we first noticed it. When they set up the subcommittees, in every instance but 1, in 10 of them to be exact, there was a division of 4 Republicans to 3 Democrats. But when they got to the Agriculture Subcommittee on Appropriations there was a division of 5 Republicans to 3 Democrats. I tell you, Mr. Chairman, this bill and certain phases of it was a direct result of that overwhelming vote on this committee of 5 Republicans to 3 Democrats. So we can see back in January there was some intent to see that these cuts were made and applied to agriculture, and they were used to pass this tax bill that now rests in the other body.

There is another thing that is most unusual here. Back in February, of all the subcomittees of the Appropriations Committees there was only one that I know of where the chairman of the committee then before any hearings submitted to the committee how much the cuts were going to be and where they were going to be made. That was done by the chairman of this Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations. Of course, when the news got out that he planned to provide no funds for research in utilization and marketing of agricultural products as authorized under the Hope-Flannagan bill, when it got out that it called for the elimination of the school-lunch program, when they learned it would do away with a great deal of the Rural Electrification Administration, of course, when the heat got too strong with regard to those three segments of the bill, they were not treated as they announced they were going to be treated in February, and some provision is made in this bill for those programs, although the bill is inadequate in my judgment.

Now, there is another thing that I think might be called to your attention and that is this: After this committee had been in session for 8 weeks, after we had marked up the bill, after the clerks had printed the hearings, after the report had been prepared and the tables compiled, 10 days after all that had been done, on last Monday, there was a meeting of the Republican steering committee, and in the press the next morning there was a statement that the Republicans were falling far behind in their efforts to make it possible to pass their tax bill and what do we find when that statement appeared in the press? We find the very next day this committee, having completed its labors 10 days before, and though these five gentlemen—and they are most estimable gentlemen—on the Republican side had taken their knife and applied it to the Department after 8 weeks of hearing witnesses, and after having done what I feel sure they believed was a good job, after having reduced the Department $337,000,000—10 days after that, when the Republican steering committee had met and determined that they had to go back and cut some more if they were going to be able to pass this tax bill, the first committee that was called back was the Committee on Appropriations for Agriculture, and we met in session on Wednesday, and there, too late to get what we did in the report, they adopted four amendments. One of those did away with the farm-tenant purchase program under the Farmers' Home Administration. They said to the 49,000 veterans who made applications for loans under their program, and they said to the 35,000 who now have their applications in the process of being approved, "We have cut you off because we have got to have the money for the tax-reduction bill." There is no fund for that for the next year. And they looked at the triple A and they said, "Why, under the triple A program you are not supposed to get payments unless you do certain things for yourselves and for your own land. It has cost you about $2 for each dollar that the Government promised to pay." They said, "We need some more money, so instead of having to prove that you did this work, you just come in and say you did it and we will give you the money so that we can cut $8,000,000 more and make that available for this tax bill." That was done.

Then we come to crop insurance. The testimony from the Department was that it would take $4,000,000 to wind up the affairs of the crop insurance program, but in their need for additional funds, they cut the $2,000,000 that they had earlier allowed to $1,000,000. Even though the present chairman of the committee last year, when they were trying to reduce the administrative fund for the Farmers' Home Administration, then the Farm Security Administration, when he spoke against a simple cut of $1,000,000, from $24,000,000 to $23,000,000, said "I will not be a party to meat-ax methods of reducing expenditures." Notwithstanding that, when this committee met, it went into that phase of this program and the administrative fund is cut approximately 40 percent when they have outstanding loans of more than $800,000,000 that must be serviced and should be collected.

Here is something I want you to keep in mind, and this is most unsuual. There were two little items that came up in that meeting of the rump committee, as some people have termed these callbacks. At the same meeting held about 10 days after the business affairs of the committee were over there were two little bills of $7,500 which two good members of that party wanted to get through. The Department had not sent them down.

They had not even considered them. The Bureau of the Budget did not send them down. They had not considered them. Now, do not misunderstand me. I am not opposed to consideration of requests of individual Members who know the situation and who have a personal interest in presenting these matters, but 10 days after the committee was through, and when they were called back to strike out $40,000,000 more out of the appropriation for agriculture, they spend their time approving two additional projects that individual members of the Republican Party were interested in of $7,500 each. That was a part of the committee action.

But, here is the unusual circumstance connected with this, gentlemen. When the whole committee met and the Republican members of this subcommittee submitted in writing the action of the subcommittee in which they wiped out this $40,000,000, lo and behold these two little bills that were stirred up to take care of individual Members, without any showing at all, had been overlooked. When I asked the question as to why they were not included, it was said, "Why, they were adopted so late that we could not bring them here without having to mess up the entire tabulations and tables. We could not figure them through these reports."

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. In just a moment.

Of course, my question then was, "How could you figure the $40,000,000 that you cut away back through these reports, when they were adopted the same morning?" We have had no real answer to that as yet. You are bound to reach the conclusion that it was determined that it might be a little embarrassing, but I doubt that that would embarrass any group who would come here this year and absolutely destroy several of the farm programs which they sponsored and approved less than a year ago and preceding the last election.

I now yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The gentleman has in part answered the question I have not asked. As I recall, the reason for the two items to which the gentleman refers was that the matters had come up after the bill was closed. I thought perhaps the gentleman also wanted to include in the list the money we voted to repair the damages due to the Oklahoma tornado, which came up at the same time and which was included at the same time.

Mr. WHITTEN. Does the gentleman mean to indicate that they are of somewhat the same nature, the Oklahoma situation and that in the gentleman's district and that in the district of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I am quite sure the gentleman wants to be accurate, and will say it was not in this gentleman's district.

Mr. WHITTEN. In the gentleman's State; perhaps I am in error.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I thank the gentleman, but we have 23 Congressmen in California.

Mr. WHITTEN. Yes, and we feel the weight of their votes sometimes, as we apparently did this morning in the vote on the rule.

I have never opposed any cuts in the Department of Agriculture. I believe I have a good record here in economy. I subscribe to most of the reductions in this bill if they were properly applied. But to show you that the cuts in this Department are a result of the pressures of the announcement of certain political leaders in the Republican Party, read this bill, and you will not see where there is any case where there must be a reduction in personnel, with one exception, and that is that in the Information Service it is limited to 250 people.

When they set out to absolutely ruin the Soil Conservation Service and the triple-A payments because of the duplication between those agencies and the Extension Service, I said, "Gentlemen, do not ruin a service to the American people. If there are faults and duplications that ought to be eliminated, and I agree with you that there are, this committee should consolidate all those supervisory and administrative personnel, and I will go along with you in doing that." But no, they were not interested in that, they just cut the total amount of money, because what is necessary is to show up with the funds.

I tried to do that throughout this bill. When they got to the REA, the chief objection, and you gentlemen will bear me out, to the REA appropriation for administrative funds was objections to certain people who have to do with that administration. I do not believe there is a Member of this House who would intentionally—I do not know what the pressures are from the national party, never having undergone such pressures myself, but I do not believe in the face of any pressure from any party that any man from an agricultural region would have the courage to cut down the expansion of the Rural Electrification Administration, as much as it means to the rural people of this country. But I think it must be agreed that the chief reason for this cut in the administrative expenses of the REA was a disagreement with, dislike of, or failure to appreciate the capacity of certain people who have to do with this operation. Of course, there could be real merit to that with regard to a few people. I do not know, many of them are able, conscientious administrators, but I do say that I tried to get the majority members of this committee to bring the Secretary of Agriculture in here. I said to the committee, "If there is something wrong with the administration of this agency, let us correct it, but let us not cut out a service to the American people, let us not cripple an agency here which means more to the farm people and those who live in rural areas than almost anything that has been done in this Government."

One of the biggest reasons for the necessity of setting up this administration in the outset was because the utility companies had gone into the more populous areas and gotten the so-called cream of the crop. The first local REA associations quite naturally were set up in the more populous areas. The first lines built were through the more populous areas, and it is only during the last few years that proper attention has been given to area coverage and to planning so that eventually this service can be given to all rural people. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call attention also to the fact that when a local REA association borrows money from the Government, makes its original plan, and has it approved, that the Rural Electrification Administration is without power to expand their service and carry their lines to other areas where they give additional service to still more people. However, the Rural Electrification Administration does have an opportunity to do that when the additional loans are requested, the so-called class B loans. Under the law, once the local co-op is created, expansion is in the hands of the directors and manager of the local association. Certainly they should, and I believe they do, want to expand this service to their neighbors and to others in their own area who have been unable to get current. But we need the national administration to assist in making available poles, transformers, and materials, and to see in this time of shortage that all of that does not go into the hands of the utility companies. Most of these directors are not experienced engineers, and they need the benefit of the national association and engineers for planning so that eventually the line can be built economically to all rural people of the Nation, and yet though practically all the money requested for loan authority is made available, the fund for the rural electrification is reduced by one-third.

The first of this year there were two and one-half million farm families still living without electric light and power. It is estimated that in addition to these unelectrified farms there are more than 2,000,000 rural establishments such as schools, crossroads business places, and rural dwellings not on farms that do not have high-line power.

Few counties, even in the most prosperous areas, have completed their rural electrification. While a big and difficult part of the job remaining is in the less densely settled areas of the West, it is a fact that almost 60 percent of the unelectrified farms are east of the Mississippi River. The States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia, as a group, have more unelectrified farms than all of the 11 westernmost States together.

Nine States each have more than 120,000 farms still awaiting the highlines. In each of 18 States there are more than 60,000 farms without electricity.

These figures give an indication of the magnitude of what has yet to be done. The REA today has a backlog of applications for rural-electrification loans totaling $237,000,000 and will have $270,000,000 at the end of the fiscal year. Farmers in every State and every community are insisting that they be given the opportunity to provide themselves with electricity. Even though good progress has been made during these dozen years, the fact that approximately 43 percent of the Nation's farms still are unelectrified represents a powerful challenge to future action.

Such reduction would be penny-wise and pound-foolish. It would be costly in terms of dollars, and even more costly in terms of accomplishing the objectives of rural electrification.

The Congress has authorized a billion-dollar investment in rural electrification. This investment is self-liquidating but is not and cannot be self-administered. The Government's contracts must be carried out and the Government's security must be protected. Common business sense requires this. An arbitrary reduction in the funds for administration of this program is unwarranted and unwise—it is just poor business. Let us examine the facts.

As every single member of this House representing a rural area well knows, the extension of electricity is today more desired than any other single improvement that can come to unserved rural areas. No single thing can so greatly reduce the difference between rural and urban living standards as the taking of electricity to farm homes. Fortunately, we have in the REA program a method in this country by which that objective can be accomplished on a self-liquidating basis.

The rural electrification program is being carried forward through nearly one thousand individual farmer-owned cooperatives. Up until the war and some since with the guidance, counsel, and encouragement which the relatively small staff of the Rural Electrification Administration has been able to give, these farmer-managed cooperatives have been constantly growing and reaching out to serve more and more of their neighbors. It can be said, almost without exception, plans are getting started to carry the REA program forward in every single rural community of this Nation. Today there are REA-financed lines in more than 2,200 counties. There are nearly one and three-quarter million farm families and other rural consumers receiving service from REA-financed lines. New consumers are going on REA-financed lines at the rate of 25,000 per month. Plans projected into 1948 indicate that the program will accelerate to a point where new consumers will be connected at a rate exceeding one-half million per year.

Even though the cooperatives are pushing into thinner and thinner territory, their financial record is excellent. They have repaid more than twenty million dollars on their loans before the due date.

Although the progress during the past 12 years has been amazing, with the percentage of farms electrified increasing from 11 to about 57 percent, there still remain about two and one-half million unserved farm homes—some of them, incidentally, in every rural congressional district—and at least 2,000,000 other unserved rural dwellings, churches, schools and the like. To these unserved people the great progress made during the last decade is meaningless. Their homes are as dark and their lives filled with as much drudgery now as they were before the program started. It is in terms of those people that we must think.

We want the cooperatives to be constantly encouraged to take in new members and to build more lines—in fact to get on with the job of electrifying rural America. More importantly, we must rely on the REA staff to give to the efforts of each of these hundreds of cooperatives in 46 States, a national plan of area coverage which will assure that the benefits of electricity will be made available in all rural areas in the most economical manner possible at the earliest possible date.

ADEQUATE SUPPORT IS NOT GIVEN FOR THE RESEARCH AND MARKETING ACT OF 1946

Mr. Chairman, it has been recognized for many years that research in agriculture has worked wonders. It has given us improved seed, greater production from the same investment and from the same work. We have seen total production of agriculture products multiplied many times as a result of research in production. And as a result this country has been able to produce and meet the needs through this war. We have seen production reach untold limits, and except for the world's needs we would have tremendous surpluses today. Just as soon as the world is able to supply its own needs even to a limited extent, surpluses will pile up again in this great Nation.

The chairman of the agriculture legislative committee and the ranking Democrats on the committee, Mr. HOPE and Mr. FLANAGAN, joined by my able colleague, Mr. ABERNETHY, of Mississippi, realizing that this situation was not too far off, last year passed through this Congress the Agriculture Marketing Act of 1946, known as the Hope-Flanagan bill.

Duties levied on imported agricultural commodities have been used to protect the farmers of this country from the impact of disastrous price collapse that follows a little surplus production and has given the low-income consumers access to better foods. This action strikes at farmers of the entire Nation.

Why is it, Mr. Chairman, that this subcommittee has taken upon itself to repeal one of the major legislative actions of this Congress in history for the protection of American agriculture and the granting to those that engage in agriculture fair treatment with industrial production which through the years has had protection, and in its action is completely usurping the jurisdiction, rights, and prerogatives of the great agriculture legislative committee headed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE]?

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield.

Mr. HORAN. The gentleman recalls, of course, that we have not reduced any of the loans for the REA. Is that right?

Mr. WHITTEN. There is a $25,000,000 reduction.

Mr. HORAN. That was not a loan fund.

Mr. WHITTEN. There is a slight reduction, although I doubt the loan authority has been seriously crippled.

Mr. HORAN. To give an illustration, the gentleman recalls perhaps that it is the experience of the REA cooperatives in his own district that in some cases it has been a matter of overadministration or overregulation on the part of the REA at the Federal level.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The gentleman is making a very interesting statement. Can you tell us why the Committee on Appropriations brought an amendment here to the act dealing with the lending powers of the REA rather than submit that question to the House Committee on Agriculture which wrote the provisions providing how the loans are to be made and how the REA should get its funds?

Mr. WHITTEN. That is a rather difficult question to answer. The action of this committee does not reflect my own views. Apparently, it was believed that now is the time to act and that the majority members of the committee could do as good or even better a job than the folks on your committee. That is about the only way I can see it.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Did your committee find any reason why under the plan set up by the House Committee on Agricultur. for the REA to obtain these loans and get money with which to operate they did not recommend to the Committee on Agriculture that this committee study the question and report the necessary changes back to the Congress for action?

Mr. WHITTEN. I wish to say with regard to that particular provision, doubtless it is an improvement over the former procedure, but in view of the history of the differences between the legislative committee and the appropriations subcommittee, certainly I think it would have been much, much better, instead of bringing it in in this way that appropriate action had been recommended to the gentleman's committee and acted upon by that committee.

I now yield to my chairman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In direct response to my friend from Missouri, this matter was initiated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation itself after a check with the Budget Bureau, the budget officer, and the Budget Division of the Department of Agriculture, for the reason that it would be far better to go directly to the Treasury with a consequent saving of three-quarters of 1 percent in administrative costs and thereby enable an economy of $25,000,000 to be effected because it was not necessary then to cover the so-called 85 percent collateral clause in the basic law. That is the answer.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Does the gentleman mean to say that he encourages and favors representatives from the REA or any other Government agency coming before your committee?

Mr. WHITTEN. May I suggest that the gentleman referred to the RFC?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I am speaking now of the RFC or the REA coming before your committee and suggesting changes to be made in the basic law rather than to have these people come to the legislative committees of the Congress which were set up to do that job? Can you explain why you encourage that?

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to my good friend from Missouri that I encourage everybody in government to come and see me individually or in my capacity as chairman if I think it will enhance efficiency and economy in government.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Then you advocate that all of these departments come to your committee and let you write the law with respect to these departments rather than to the legislative committees of this House. Is that what you are advocating?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That was not the gentleman's question in the first place. I encouraged those people to come, because I like to get these ideas that will give us sounder and more efficient governmental structure.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Will you explain again, are we to let people come to a star chamber session where the public is not invited, where nobody knows what is going on, and there formulate the policies of these agencies and departments of government, without anybody outside being advised about what is going on until this report finally comes out a day or two before the bill is up for consideration?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman's question is beautifully academic, because all hearings are closed in the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Do you think, then, admitting they are all closed, that that committee should assume to take over the burden of the legislative duties of this Congress?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely not, but may I remind the gentleman that every legislative proviso in this bill is coupled with an economy. That is the important point.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Then you can justify revising and revamping practically all of the legislative action of this Congress that has been had by its legislative committees? Is that right?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman knows the answer to that as well as I do. The answer is "No." It must be done within reasonable limits and with the proper restrictions.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I think this Congress should know pretty soon just how far the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives proposes to go when it deals with legislative matters.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The best answer is the history of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. WHITTEN. May I state to the gentleman from Missouri that you have a perfect example of how far the committee will go in the bill now being considered.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. There are five different provisions in this bill rewriting the law governing certain agencies and groups.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I remind the gentleman that in other years, when your party was in power, the subcommittee used to come in here with a dozen or fifteen provisions in the bill. We have been very modest and restrained.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that he well knows, because he is a very able and efficient Member of this body——

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The gentleman well knows the proposition was made that appropriations for certain things that were beneficial to agriculture would not be made, because there was no basic law authorizing the appropriations, and finally this House said that unless you have legislative action for these appropriations, we are not going to give them to you. The gentleman well knows that the House Committee on Agriculture went to the Appropriations Committee, of which you were a member, and asked for a list of the things that needed legislative support. The House Committee on Agriculture sat down and wrote a bill, containing, I think, 75 or 80 different provisions, every one you said was necessary to obviate a rule waiving points of order, and we passed that bill in this House. Yet, in spite of that fact, your committee comes back today in five different instances and seeks to place legislation on an appropriation bill, and even to amend laws which this Congress has written.

Mr. DIRKSEN. As a matter of fact, the Committee on Agriculture has not come to the present chairman of this subcommittee with any such proposal.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. You were a member of that committee when we did it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The instant chairman of the subcommittee has made specific recommendations to the chairman of your committee with respect to things that should be done. That is, they were informal, but they were specific, nonetheless.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further. I have concluded that many of these differences are not going to be resolved, so we might as well proceed.

Now, with regard to the action of this committee, in several instances, certainly, I think we have broken faith with American agriculture. Only last year the distinguished chairman of this committee went on this floor and urged the farmers of this country to plant every available acre, be it thin, be it eroded, whatever its condition was; that the food situation in the United States and throughout the world was so deplorable that the farmers of this Nation should plant every available inch of ground they had into farm products, to help relieve this shortage. There the chairman said, when crops are produced, of course there is another element in there, and that is to conserve the soil:

> I was a little hostile a few years ago, as you may remember, to the Soil Conservation Service, but the more I saw of the world, the erosion, the leaching process, in India, in Ceylon, north Africa, and elsewhere, where people have such difficulty in making sussistence, where people have to work from sunrise to sunset, I got a better appreciation as to what soil, one of the greatest assets of our country really means. So, soil conservation, and also the practice carried on under the Soil Service, and Domestic Allotments, are some of the top functions of the Department.

Then he goes on to urge the farmers to do everything possible toward production of agricultural products regardless of its effect on the soil.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman tell them that the gentleman from Illinois has not changed his views about that matter, and then tell them also that they have over a hundred publicity experts in Soil Conservation, over 146 people doing personnel work; and that what the gentleman from Illinois wants to do is to eliminate a lot of waste and extravagance, and if he had had his own way he would have cut it half in two for the purpose of getting at this duplication and waste the gentleman from Illinois pointed out.

Soil Conservation has 12,000 people, the Extension Service has 11,000 people, the Farmers' Home Administration has 9,200 at the farm level. All of them were engaged in some kind of duplication.

Mr. WHITTEN. And the gentleman will admit that he refused and the committee refused to consider the consolidation of supervisory and administrative personnel in those respective agencies so as to get at the basic problem and thereby reduce the cost of the service instead of the service.

Mr. DIRKSEN. My good friend belabors me first because to bring about some economy there is legislation in the bill, and then he belabors me again by suggesting that we should rewrite the basic legislation of the agencies involved.

Mr. WHITTEN. What I am attempting to develop is that if he will study the basic legislation in each instance he will find how Congress has outlined the carrying out of the policy for which money is appropriated.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But the Committee on Appropriations could not break down these three large agencies.

Mr. WHITTEN. They could because no legislation is required. Certainly the gentleman would not insist that the Appropriations Committee could not strike out duplications which are not required by law. Then if he could bring a bill such as this which repeals certain basic legislation certainly the gentleman would not argue that such consolidations could not be made.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman certainly will argue it because you could accomplish it only by a bill making this coordination. The economies we have effected are so designed as not to impair the efficacy of the agencies affected.

Mr. WHITTEN. The gentleman from Illinois, I might say, is one of the most affable but one of the smoothest operators it has ever been my privilege to deal with.

Here is the fact about this matter of soil-conservation payments. It has been represented time and time again here that this is a payment to individuals, a direct grant from the Government to farmers. The distinguished gentleman from California took that view. I want to call your attention to the fact that these payments are based on and made available for certain work to retain or improve the fertility of land. The more land on which these improved practices can be carried out, the greater the expense to the farmers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Mississippi five additional minutes.

Mr. WHITTEN. The more land on which these practices are carried out, the more the expense is to the farmer. The farmer must spend on this land $2 out of his own pocket for every one the Federal Government pays for such improved practices. The Federal Government says that for every $2 he puts up the Federal Government will put up one because the Federal Government is interested in the fertility of the soil of this Nation. Each year when this appropriations subcommittee has met, since I have been a member of it, we have made the appropriations for the current year to pay for the Federal Government's contribution to pay for that work, which has been usually three times as much as the Federal contribution will pay for, and we announce the program for the next year. Now, the Department of Agriculture in times past has relied upon that announcement of the program for the next year. The triple-A committees meet that formula, announce what they want the farmers to do, each farmer paying two-thirds of the cost himself, and the farmers would act on it, would expend his funds, and then the succeeding year the Budget Bureau in several instances proceeded to cut down the amount of money necessary to carry out the Federal Government's commitment or to pay for the practices which have been carried out as announced through this committee the preceding year. Last year—I do not see any way in the world to get around this—as a commitment to the American farmer Judge Tarver said: "We are tired of this practice," and he offered an amendment fixing the program for next year at $300,000,000. It is a floor and it is a ceiling and, he said, "I offer it so that there can be no misunderstanding of the situation." He said he had submitted it to the committee, which would include the gentleman from Illinois and my Republican colleagues on the committee, and stated, "I offer it as a committee amendment." The exact proceedings are as follows:

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Committee amendment offered by Mr. Tarver: On page 48, lines 21 to 23, strike out all the language within the parentheses and insert in lieu thereof the following: 'amounting to $300,000,000, including administration.' "

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I am presenting for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole the question to which I made reference a few moments ago. That is, whether or not you are going to authorize for the crop-year 1947 program, $300,000,000. I am presenting it in language which is so definite in character as to admit of no misconstruction. It is the time now to decide whether you want to reduce the 1947 crop-year program, not next year after the plans of the Department and those of State AAA authorities and the farmers have already been completed. If we want to reduce it, reduce it now and reject my amendment and offer some other amendment to indicate a lower figure.

But if you want to fix it definitely and in such form as to enable the farmers of the country to rely upon it implicitly so that even the Bureau of the Budget cannot disregard it, then adopt the amendment which I have offered.

I may say that I have submitted this amendment to the members of the subcommittee and it is, therefore, offered as a committee amendment, since it met with their approval.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. I wish to see if I thoroughly understand the amendment. The bill as now written puts on a ceiling of $300,000,000 for next year.

Mr. TARVER. Exactly.

Mr. POAGE. As I understand it, if we adopt the gentleman's amendment we have in effect approved $300,000,000 for next year without either putting it up or down; in other words, it is a kind of floor as well as ceiling.

Mr. TARVER. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 62, noes 19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

It will be noted from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that not a single objection was raised by any member of this subcommittee to this amendment nor to Mr. Tarver's statement. It may be stated without any chance of contradiction that the American farmer was told by the Congress, as was the Department of Agriculture, that $300,000,000 would be used to pay the Federal Government's share of this program for this calendar year, funds for which are provided in this bill. Notwithstanding this commitment, notwithstanding the fact that the payments have already been earned, this bill reduces from $300,000,000 to $165,000,000 the sum available to meet this commitment.

This commitment was acted on by the Department of Agriculture, programs were announced providing for expenditure of these funds, and promises were made to the American farmer that if they would spend this money from their own pockets and do this work that the funds would be available. Now it is said that since the Republican members of this committee are faced with the necessity of cutting out essential money from this appropriation bill that in the announcement to the farmers a statement was made in fine print that insofar as money is available the money will be paid. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, this language meant that if the farmer signed up and spent his money in such program so that the Government's one-third would be more than $300,000,000 that, of course, the farmer knew he would not be repaid except the pro rata share of the $300,000,000 to offset the cost which he had been put to in carrying out such programs. Certainly there can be no more definite showing where agriculture and the farmers of the Nation stand with the Republican Party than in this absolute failure of the Republican Party to carry out this commitment, as I have heretofore described.

There is one other thing here which I think is deplorable, and that is the repeal of section 32 funds. Throughout the years we have through high tariffs protected those in the industrial fields. We have enacted the minimum wages and hours law, and as long as organized labor can protect itself through the power of its bargaining, just so long it is going to be necessary to provide some protection to those who happen to be engaged in agriculture in this country. We must do that.

Under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act 30 percent of the customs revenue that this Government collected because it let competitive agricultural commodities come into this country to help handle the surpluses that might grow up in this Nation is set aside for agriculture to handle surpluses. I say to you in the last 10 years funds from section 32 have been used to bail out, true, the farmers in my cotton South, but if you will study the record you will find this is not a local problem or that local groups have received the major part of the benefits. It has spread over the entire United States of America.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, may I point out to you that in the last 10 years these funds which under the basic law belonged to agriculture have been used to bail out the wheat farmers in the West, it has been used to bail out the fruit producers in the country of the gentleman from California. These funds have been used for the following purposes:

To help the producers of poultry product, $81,699,000.

To help producers of fruit, $146,016,000.

For producers of grain, $180,610,000.

For the dairy farmer, $125,097,000.

To move surplus cotton, $154,080,000.

For producers of meat and meat products, $71,872,000.

For the growers of nuts, $25,195,000.

To move surplus tobacco, $10,424,000.

To purchase vegetables from distressed vegetable producers, $120,896,000.

To the growers of miscellaneous crops, $19,745,000.

To provide cheap milk and lunches for the school children of America, $204,312,000.

The deplorable thing about this situation is that the gentleman from Illinois has never had any sympathy with this basic legislation and has so expressed himself time and time again that they should come to the Appropriations Committee for appropriations and they should not be entitled to these funds which come in because foreign agricultural products are allowed to compete with the products of American agriculture.

I say that if in this bill they are permitted to repeal section 32, the tragedy of it is not only that you will have to go before the Appropriations Subcommittee on Agriculture for appropriations to try to carry on this very wonderful work, but in view of the attitude as shown herein in regard to agricultural appropriations and as today expressed in this agricultural appropriation bill, you can tell in advance what the outcome is going to be when you go before that subcommittee, and I say to you that these funds under the basic law belong to agriculture and should be set up on the books to their credit and they should be made available in the years to come when they are going to have surpluses so that those surpluses will not pile up to destroy the market of the American people.

I would like to point out one other thing to you gentlemen, that while on the face of it it may look like you are saving money, and it may be that you can claim credit for having saved it and that you can use it for this tax reduction bill that you want to pass, but I will say as long as you have the Commodity Credit Corporation and as long as you guarantee a loan on the purchase of commodities at 90 percent of parity, I say a removal of section 32 funds may result, Mr. MURRAY, in the Government purchasing more and more and more of the surplus products of this country and in effect cost your Government money instead of saving money, and I believe that is a sound analysis of what this action may mean.

We, in Congress, must realize that although it is the declared objective of the Federal Government to complete the job of rural electrification, the Federal Government does not build and operate lines, it merely guides and stimulates local groups who are accomplishing this stated national objective. There is no way to force the local REA already operating to extend its lines. Those of us in Congress who have maintained close touch with the rural-electrification program know, however, that there exists between the REA and its borrowers a close, cordial, cooperative relationship which is bringing rural America closer and closer to the realization of that objective.

The committee has recommended provision of $225,000,000 in loan funds for fiscal 1948. While I commend this action, I am forced to point out that this provision loses much of its value unless we equip REA with the funds it needs to carry on its work. The committee proposal to reduce drastically the REA administrative fund would require substantial abandonment of the established, proven pattern of operations, and would seriously curtail the program of taking electricity to all farm people in the quickest, most efficient manner possible, and, even more important, on a self-liquidating basis.

I hope that you will support our amendment to restore these funds and assist us in seeing that the REA program is not retarded.

One of the great legislative acts passed by this Congress was the Hope-Flannagan Act providing for research in the field of utilization and marketing of Agricultural products. Under this bill the sum of $9,500,000 was authorized for research in the field of marketing and utilization of products for the fiscal year 1947; and the sum of $19,000,000 was authorized for the fiscal year 1948, the year for which this present appropriation is being made. No funds were secured for the present year and thus under the authorizing legislation $19,000,000 is authorized available for the next year for this great field. As I have stated back in February it was announced by the leaders of this subcommittee that it was believed that we could get by without appropriating any funds for the next fiscal year. However, so many people were interested and the reaction to such statement was so great that the majority members of the committee finally appropriated $6,000,000 for this research program. This is a great deal better than no funds at all but it is my belief, Mr. Chairman, that in view of the splendid results we have gotten for the funds expended in research for production that certainly $9,500,000 should be made available for this program and at the appropriate time we plan to offer an amendment to increase this appropriation by $3,500,000. Certainly in the years ahead I want it to be said that we clearly foresaw that there would be surpluses of agricultural products and that we as a Congress had tried to learn new uses for those products and learn how to market those products to the best advantage. I am afraid that the majority members of this committee will in the years to come have cause to regret their failure to make adequate provision for this program.

Mr. Chairman, a review of this bill will show that regardless of what the Republican members of the committee may say, the only reduction in personnel required is a limit that may be placed on people in information services, where the total is fixed at 250.

Mr. Chairman, of the $381,000,000 reduction provided in this bill, I subscribe to much of the reduction if it were properly applied instead of left to the Department. However, there are some programs vital to the welfare of agriculture that are eliminated, some practically ruined and others drastically reduced. Of course, I do not subscribe to such action.

In at least five particulars this bill is short-sighted and almost tragic, and at the proper time we expect to offer amendments to correct such provisions.

First. Section 32 of the laws of 1935, as amended, is repealed for 1 year.

Second. Soil-conservation payments are cut almost in half—after they have been earned and in direct violation of the action of this Congress last year.

Third. The administrative funds of the Rural Electrification Administration are reduced by one-third.

Fourth. Inadequate funds are provided for research in utilization and marketing of agricultural products.

Fifth. The tenant-purchase funds of the Farmers' Home Administration are completely eliminated and funds so essential for administering the $800,000,000 now owed is drastically reduced below the point of good business.

Gentlemen, when this rule was adopted this morning, my friends on the left determined that they were going to let the most affable, the most able and one of the smoothest men I ever knew, with whom it is a pleasure to serve, determine the agricultural policy of his party, and I say in this bill he is doing a mighty good job of determining it, and if these provisions that are legislative stay in this bill, he has done a good job of saying today that agriculture is not in the bag for the Republicans but that the farmers of this Nation must look to the other side of the aisle for protection as they have learned they had to do in the past few years. It has made me realize the importance of having the Democratic Party in power as much as I have opposed some of its policies, because there agriculture and the people engaged in the industry stand high in the party councils and they will never be sold short as is being done here today under this bill.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I surely do not care to get into a political agricultural argument. It takes me most of my time to keep out of them. I had a memorandum prepared and intended to give it as a 1-minute speech this morning. The heading is, "Steagall support prices are the bills of rights for the American farmer." After what I have heard today, I am not too sure that we should talk about agriculture. We should probably inject politics along in with it. There is too much politics and not enough agriculture in the air here today.

I take the position that so far as agriculture is concerned it has not been on a parity-income basis since 1922, and that things were not too rosy, the seventh year of the more abundant life or in 1939. I claim that the agricultural prices for 1939 show that we were just about in the same position in 1939 as we were in 1932, the year that is so dear to our friends' hearts. With that in mind I have taken a page out of the August 1939 Agricultural Prices. This indicates that they are absolute facts and authentic.

What do I find? I find that in August 1939 this seventh year of the more abundant life, when wheat was 54 cents a bushel, they were paying 27 cents-per-bushel export subsidy to get rid of it. Wheat was only 49 percent of parity the seventh year of the more abundant life. Corn was 57 percent of parity, and rye was 38 percent of parity. Well, of course, they helped the rye business along quite a little because at a time when rye was bringing 58 percent of parity they lowered the duty by 20 percent and put an embargo on wheat. I do not know how anybody in the South or anybody else can be satisfied with the price set-up in 1939 so far as agriculture is concerned. Here is cotton bringing 56 percent of parity or 8.6 cents a pound. In other words, my contention is, regardless of the 28 bills that our distinguished colleague from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] says have been passed in the name of King Cotton, that the Steagall amendment fundamentally, is really the farmer's bill of rights. Day after day it grieves me to see the support program so badly administered. If this support program is not administered with common sense, yes, and nonpolitically and nonsectionally, public opinion will bring it to an end in spite of what its supporters may wish.

The Steagall amendment was not necessarily a political, partisan affair, either, because that amendment had rather unanimous support, as the gentlemen from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. CRAWFORD] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL] can verify. I think once in a while it might be well for our colleagues to remember that pretty much of the agriculture of this country centers around Chicago as the capital, and that a dozen States around Chicago do a large share of the food producing that is going on in the United States. Outside of Texas and California, there are very few States that can or do feed themselves.

I do not care to get into the political part of it, as I say. We can talk about giving a man $4 for a soil check or $7 for one, but, after all, what makes the difference is what he gets at the end of the month for his milk check or at the end of the season for his tobacco check, or what he gets for the produce he sells from his farm. That is a farm program a farmer understands and appreciates.

With all these glowing tributes that have been given to the present administration, I should like to call your attention to the fact that right today milk prices in my State have gone down 40 percent. Why is this, and why has this been allowed to happen? I have not seen anybody worrying about that. My contention is that the support price for milk and some of its products are not being supported in keeping with the Steagall amendment nor its intent.

If we can get the Commodity Credit Corporation and get the people in the high places to really support legal, lawful price—and I might say the record of this administration has not been too good in the past in connection with the Steagall amendment—many of the worries of American agriculture will be eliminated. It is not any wonder that pork is high when in 1943 and 1944 they let hogs sell below 60 percent of parity, contrary to law. They let eggs go much below 90 percent of parity. I say as far as agricultural production is concerned we have to live up to the support price as provided in the Steagall amendment. That is No. 1. That, together with the high rate of employment in the United States, is the best agricultural program this country has had or, in my opinion, ever will have.

My memorandum and official table are:

STEAGALL SUPPORT PRICES ARE THE BILL OF RIGHTS TO THE AMERICAN FARMER

Mr. Chairman, the agriculture prices from 1930 to 1940 were very low. By 1939, the seventh year of the more abundant life, the whole agriculture program had bogged down in spite of the billions of dollars that had been spent on a few crops representing less than one-third of American agriculture. With 10,000,000 people still unemployed, the relationship between the pay rolls of the country and agriculture prices was most apparent.

The greatest influence on farm prices in America today and yesterday is and was the size of the pay rolls of the Nation. Satisfactory agricultural prices require high employment at good wages.

The war not only put the labor in the factory to work, but also the labor on the farm to work as well. The war prevented the huge losses that the CCC was apparently going to face.

The following page from the official Agricultural Prices of the United States Department of Agriculture indicates what agriculture prices can be expected with an unemployment list of 10,000,000 in our country.

Since then the Steagall support program has been put in operation and the most important farm crops and products do have or are at least supposed to have the support guaranteed by law.

The Steagall support is really agriculture's bill of rights. The agriculture bill of rights guaranteed by the law of the land should come first, before any group asks to get a chance to pass their tin cups around and ask for special favors.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time in order to put in the RECORD some information with reference to the use of section 32 funds. There seems to be some misunderstanding about the purposes for which section 32 funds may be used and for which they have been used in the past. Particularly there seems to be the thought in the minds of some Members of Congress that the funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation may be used for exactly the same purposes as section 32 funds.

I have before me a letter signed by the Under Secretary of Agriculture, written at my request, outlining what the effect would be as far as programs during the coming year are concerned if section 32 funds are rescinded as provided in this bill. The letter reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., May 27, 1947.

Hon. CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. HOPE: This is in response to your inquiry concerning the effect of the rescission of section 32 funds for the fiscal year 1948 upon the continuance of the programs this Department has been conducting with section 32 funds.

We wish to make it clear to the Congress that if section 32 funds are rescinded for the fiscal year 1948, the Department's programs for the purchase and disposal of surplus agricultural commodities—other than the Steagall commodities for which price support is mandatory—will be discontinued. The most effective outlet for perishable commodities is by donation to welfare agencies and school-lunch programs. Such donations are specifically authorized in carrying out section 32 programs. Commodity Credit Corporation, however, has not been expressly authorized by the Congress to dispose of perishable commodities by donation to relief agencies and school-lunch programs. In fact, the corporation has not throughout the history of its operations ever made donations of commodities acquired by it. The Commodity Credit Corporation operations have in the main been restricted to storable commodities which can be carried through periods of surplus production for marketing at times when supplies are not in surplus. For this reason, Commodity Credit Corporation has not, except where the program was mandatory, carried out price support operations with respect to nonstorable commodities.

In the circumstances Commodity Credit Corporation would not feel warranted in undertaking perishable commodity programs which would involve virtually a total loss of the amount of money expended without express prior authorization of the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

N. E. DODD,
Under Secretary.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I have never been able to keep track of these section 32 funds very well. I would like to know who determines when, how, and why they are to be used the way they are.

Mr. HOPE. Under the provisions of the law it is left to the Secretary of Agriculture to determine whether the funds or any part of them are to be used for the particular purposes that are set out in the law.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. He has the decision as to where and what foods are bought? Is that right?

Mr. HOPE. Yes; within the limits of the law.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. As the gentleman has well pointed out, section 32, as we refer to it and as the gentleman has referred to it, is a continuing appropriation, and as such permanent law it is related to other programs that are authorized, including the legislation authorizing the imposition of import quotas and export subsidies. But to justify the imposition of import quotas or export subsidies, there must first be a program, and without section 32 funds in the case of wheat and corn and many other commodities, no program is authorized by any other law. So it is essential for a program to be authorized if section 32 is to be eliminated and section 32 is essential to be continued if there is to be a program for cotton, wheat, corn, and other similar products.

Mr. HOPE. Yes; I agree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. As I understand, they use these funds and they get new uses for agricultural products. Is that right?

Mr. HOPE. That is one of the purposes for which the fund may be used.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. And it is not only on an experimental basis, but they are making a business out of it; is that right?

Mr. HOPE. Yes; I think that is a fair statement.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that Mr. Ford, for example, uses an average of 32 pounds of cotton bats in each car and he gets 4 cents a pound subsidies? He is getting a $1.28 subsidy on every car that he produces. That has been set up as a permanent program and has been in operation for several years.

Mr. HOPE. There is a program to utilize low-quality cotton. I presume that is the program to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CARROLL. Will the gentleman give his opinion on the effect of these cuts in appropriations on the land-grant colleges and the Hope-Flannagan bill? I have a communication from the Colorado State Agricultural College in which they have indicated to me that the Colorado Legislature has appropriated its share of the fund for the Hope-Flannagan bill. I wonder if you have had an opportunity to analyze what it will mean to the land-grant colleges and to the Hope-Flannagan bill generally.

Mr. HOPE. I am up to date on what the various States have done toward meeting the matching requirements. Some of the State legislatures are still in session. Others have recently adjourned. So I am not familiar with what has been done. Of the $6,000,000 that was appropriated, $3,000,000 has been appropriated specifically for the purpose of going to the State experiment stations, to be matched by the States. I do not know whether the States have provided more money than is sufficient to match the Federal funds or not. I have no information on that point. I might say to the gentleman that I am somewhat disappointed that the bill does not provide at least $9,500,000 which would be the first year's increment of funds under this measure, but I believe that with the $6,000,000 appropriation a start can be made in this program, which I firmly believe is one of the most important that has ever been undertaken in the field of agriculture.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I want to outline the purposes for which section 32 funds are available and to point out some of the ways in which they have been used in the past:

The funds appropriated by section 32 are available, first, to encourage the exportation of agricultural commodities and products thereof by the payment of benefits or indemnities; second, to encourage the domestic consumption of such commodities or products by diverting them from the normal channels of trade and commerce or by increasing their utilization among persons in the low-income groups; and, third, to reestablish farmers' purchasing power by making payments in connection with the normal production of any agricultural commodity for domestic consumption.

The act of June 28, 1937, as amended—Fifteenth United States Code, 1940 edition, supplement 5, 713c—provides that in carrying out clause (2) of section 32, that is, encouraging domestic consumpiton by diverting from the normal channels of trade and commerce, agricultural commodities and products thereof may be purchased and donated for relief purposes. Section 9 of the School Lunch Act authorizes the donation of commodities purchased with section 32 funds to schools carrying out the school-lunch program or other institutions authorized to receive such commodities.

Under section 32, programs have been carried out for the purchase of fresh fruits and vegetables and other perishable agricultural commodities where such action was necessary to relieve price-depressing surpluses or to carry out the obligation of the Department to support the price of such commodities under the so-called Steagall amendment. The authority and funds provided by section 32 are used in such cases, because the most effective means of disposing of the commodities was by donation for relief purposes and to the school-lunch programs which is expressly authorized by the act of June 28, 1937, as amended, referred to above. As a general rule, surplus-removal programs with respect to perishable commodities are undertaken only where a known outlet exists, such as the school-lunch program, welfare agencies, and so forth. During the fiscal year—1947—approximately $20,000,000 worth of surplus vegetables alone have been purchased with section 32 funds. It is true that large surpluses, such as occurred during the late thirties, do not exist at the moment which need to be removed from the market. It is not possible, however, to accurately predict when surpluses may arise. Thus there existed even during the most critical period of food shortages in this country during and after the war local gluts of agricultural products, particularly perishable, such as green beans, spinach, cabbage, carrots, citrus, and other fruits. These local surpluses were removed with purchases made from section 32 funds. The Department was not only able to afford farmers in the local surplus areas badly needed price protection, but was also able to save badly needed food, which otherwise would have been wasted, by donating such food to welfare agencies and the school-lunch program.

Commodity Credit Corporation has not been expressly authorized by the Congress to donate commodities for relief purposes or to the school lunch program, and the Corporation has not during the 14 years of its existence ever made any such donation. In fact, Commodity Credit Corporation is expressly prohibited by law from disposing of any commodity below parity except under specified circumstances. In the case of a nonperishable commodity, sales below parity may be made if the commodity has substantially deteriorated; in the case of a perishable commodity, sales below parity may be made where there is danger of loss or waste through spoilage. In certain circumstances it may be difficult to determine that there is danger of loss or waste through spoilage so as to authorize CCC to dispose of perishable commodities below parity.

Inasmuch as CCC lacks express statutory authorization to make donation of perishable commodities and has not during the entire history of its operations ever made such donations, the rescission by Congress of the funds and authority which have been used for the purchase of surplus perishable commodities which can effectively be disposed of through donation to welfare agencies and schools would seem to indicate that Congress intended that such operations, where they were not mandatory, should be discontinued until section 32 funds and authority were restored—even assuming the existence of technical legal authority in CCC to purchase perishable commodities to support the price.

The rescission of section 32 will also force a termination of the Department's marketing abundant foods program, marketing-facilities program, and food-preservation program, which are carried out with such funds. Under the marketing abundant foods program the Department has encouraged the domestic consumption of surplus agricultural commodities by seeking to increase the marketing of such commodities through the usual food outlets, such as retail grocers, restaurants, hotels, and so forth. Under the marketing-facilities program the Department has sought to increase the domestic consumption of agricultural commodities by assisting in the development and improvement of marketing facilities in order to speed the flow of agricultural commodities from the producer to the consumer. Under the food-preservation program the Department has provided technical assistance and has promoted the canning of millions of cans of fresh fruits and vegetables during the periods of peak production, which would otherwise have been wasted.

Section 32 funds are used to pay export subsidies. While CCC has the authority to dispose of agricultural commodities or cause them to be disposed of at competitive world prices, its export programs have related to the disposition of stocks of commodities acquired by the Corporation in connection with its support-price operations. CCC does not have any stocks of cotton available to conduct an export program. Section 32 funds are used where the program does not relate to stocks of cotton held by CCC and a direct subsidy payment is involved.

The act of August 11, 1939—Fifteenth United States Code, 1940 edition, 713c—authorizes section 32 funds to be used for the purpose of diverting surplus fishery products from the normal channels of trade and commerce by acquiring them and provides for their distribution through these channels. That act also authorizes the transfer from section 32 funds to the Secretary of the Interior for use in promoting the free flow of domestically produced fishery products in commerce by conducting a fishery educational service, and to develop and increase markets for fishery products of domestic origin. The rescission of section 32 would terminate these fishery-product operations.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas yields back 2 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ZIMMERMAN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the action of the Committee on Appropriations in reporting to the House, H. R. 3601, a bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, came as a distinct shock to the House Committee on Agriculture, of which I have the honor to be a member, to the farmers of America and to the friends of agriculture.

I am in complete agreement with those who believe that the time has come to practice real economy in government, that a reduction in personnel in the various departments, including the Department of Agriculture, should be made wherever possible and that duplication of work, wherever possible, should be eliminated. However, no one expected the Committee on Appropriations to recommend the drastic, devastating cut of 32 percent for a department which serves the farmers of this Nation. I am sure that no such recommendation has been made for other departments in the Government.

The report of the committee on this bill is indeed very interesting and would indicate a purpose or a policy to reduce the Department of Agriculture to its status when set up in 1862 by a bill passed by Congress and signed by Abraham Lincoln. As an example of the declared policy of this committee, whose sole purpose is to appropriate money, I refer to a statement on page 5 of this report which is not only illuminating but which expresses the attitude of the party in power and this committee which is controlled by that party where it says:

> As we give thought to such a problem as soil conservation and to the saving of the surface of our land from the influence of erosion, we also have the responsibility of pursuing those policies which will prevent the erosion of that rugged individual character which has made the American farmer the greatest producer of agricultural commodities at any time or in any nation in the world's history.

What the committee meant by the term, "erosion of that individual character," it is a little difficult to understand in the light of the words which follow.

Just in what way is the American farmer being eroded, or in what way has he been eroded? We all remember the plight of agriculture back in the years of 1930, 1931, and 1932 when the American farmer was reduced to a state of poverty and bankruptcy. Farm prices were so low that he could not pay interest on his loan, pay the taxes against his land, or support his family.

Under the operation of the political party in power and the high protective tariff which that party sponsored and relied upon, the American farmer at that time truly represented a badly eroded individual. When the Democratic Party came into power in 1933, the first efforts of the administration were to do something for the American farmer. Legislation was enacted and has been enacted since that time to give the farmer a fair price for his commodity, to conserve and build up his soil, and enable him and his family to live in a fair state of decency and comfort. If a program which has brought these benefits to the American farmer is regarded as "the erosion of that rugged individual character," then I am sure the farmers of this country are not in agreement with the policy announced by this committee.

I opposed and voted against the rule adopted by the House today because I felt the adoption of such a rule would enable the Committee on Appropriations to further violate the rules of this House which prohibit the Appropriations Committee from legislating on an appropriation bill. The duty of recommending basic legislation for various objects and purposes is vested in the various legislative committees of the House and the sole duty of the Appropriations Committee is to appropriate money for the objects and purposes authorized by Congress. In this bill, the Appropriations Committee has gone out of its way to legislate on an appropriation bill—some of the most glaring being a virtual repeal of section 32 of the AAA Act passed by Congress more than 10 years ago; a drastic change in the present law providing for the inspection of meat; a change in the law passed for the operation of the Farmers' Home Administration; and a change in the basic law dealing with the operation and financing of rural electrification cooperatives. Under the Reorganization Act adopted by Congress last year, it was made the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to recommend to legislative committees changes in the basic law in connection with matters about which the Committee on Appropriations was called to act. I submit that no recommendation was ever made by this committee to the House Committee on Agriculture in order that they might take whatever action might be deemed necessary for the amendment or modification of these acts. If this practice is to be tolerated by this House, then the legislative committees of Congress might as well dissolve and their members give their time and attention to other congressional duties.

One of the greatest aids to agriculture in recent years was the enactment of section 32 of the act of August 24, 1935. The reasons for the enactment of section 32 is well understood. Under the tariff laws which our country had operated, the farmer was compelled to sell his products on a world market at world prices, while he was compelled to buy the things he needed for himself and family and in the operation of his business upon a protective market. In order to place the farmer in a comparable position with industry which enjoyed a protective tariff, it was considered just and fair that a part of the custom receipts should be set aside to stabilize and support agriculture commodities and thereby benefit the American farmer. Under section 32, 30 percent of our custom duties are set aside for what is termed a permanent appropriation for use by the Secretary of Agriculture in disposing of farm surpluses, encouraging domestic consumption and for other highly beneficial programs for agriculture. This act has been in force for more than 10 years and literally millions of dollars have been spent in aid of American agriculture. By its action, this committee seeks to take this fund from the Secretary of Agriculture and to deprive him of the uses for which the fund was created. To permit this to be done would certainly start a real erosion of the American farmer.

In the short time at my disposal, I would like to call attention to one more act of this committee which I think renders a distinct disservice to American agriculture. We all know that our soil is one of our Nation's most valuable resources, and its conservation should be one of the chief concerns of our Government. Since this program was inaugurated, we have made great progress, and we are now beginning to reap dividends from the investment made in this program. The great pity is that we did not embark upon such a program sooner. To stop spending money for the strengthening of our soil is a good deal like stopping medicine and food for a sick man, and I shall support an amendment to this bill at the proper time and place to provide adequate funds for this program.

Mr. Chairman, rural electrification has done more to brighten the homes of rural America than anything Congress has ever authorized and set up. The farmers of our Nation want and need this service and no reduction should be made for the support of this program. Our cooperatives have made prompt payments on all loans granted them for the establishment and expansion of this program, and we should make available the necessary funds to give the farmers of America this service at the earliest possible date.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to call attention again to the action of this committee in regard to our school-lunch program set up by Congress last year. Strong people as well as strong and fertile land make a strong nation, and no program inaugurated by this Congress has done more to build a strong, healthier citizenship than has our school-lunch program. I recall that during the consideration of this bill last year General Hershey, head of the Selective Service, stated that more than 40 percent of the young men of our country who were called to serve our country during World War II were found physically unfit for duty due largely to malnutrition during childhood and youth. Money invested in building a strong, virile manhood and womanhood is money well spent and is in reality an investment for the future. At the proper time and place I shall support an amendment to this bill to increase the amount recommended for this program, which is a serious reduction over the needs, and also to eliminate the restrictive language that has been coupled with the meager appropriation made by this committee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to several provisions of this bill which would be detrimental to the welfare of American agriculture. The provisions are those relating to soil conservation, the school-lunch program, price supports and surplus removal, rural electrification, and loans to small farmers.

Soil conservation takes a double blow in this bill. The first is aimed at the agricultural-conservation program, and the other is directed at the work of the Soil Conservation Service.

In passing the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1947, the Congress clearly pledged farmers a $300,000,000 agricultural-conservation program for this year. The language of the bill and the debate on it, March 8, 1946, permit no doubt of that fact.

The bill this year would repudiate that pledge and cut payments to farmers nearly in half. This action comes after—not before—a majority of farmers have carried out the practices for which payments are authorized. How can the Department of Agriculture handle this situation? It cannot do so fairly. It can pay on a first-come-first-served basis, which is unfair. Or it can try to collect part of the payments already made—in other words, put those farmers on the debt register.

The bill goes further. It would kill the program completely at the end of this year, repudiating the accepted principle that the public shares responsibility with the farmer for bearing the cost of conserving the soil resources on which civilization depends.

Let it be known, too, that killing the ACP wipes out the elected, nonpartisan farmer-committee system which helps formulate and administer agricultural programs. This weakens the commodity loan system and other programs. The Nation will thus lose an important means of achieving economic democracy. I plead with the House to keep its pledge for this year and to maintain the ACP next year at the level recommended by the President.

As if the blow at the agricultural conservation program and the farmer-committee system were not enough, the bill takes another cut at the Nation's soil-conservation effort. By cutting down the Soil Conservation Service, it will reduce when it should increase the value of the soil-conservation districts which the people have set up under State laws in every State of the Union.

They have gone through the long and often tedious legal process of establishing more than 1,800 soil-conservation districts because they want to do an effective job of soil conservation. The farmers run these districts themselves.

Almost every one of these districts has asked the Soil Conservation Service to provide it with technical assistance. The farmers recognize that expert assistance on an acre-by-acre basis is essential if we are to get permanent conservation. They want it. They ought to have it. They know they would not be faced with the terrific soil-erosion problem they face today if they had had this kind of expert help in the past.

If we cut the funds for the SCS, we are cutting down the scientific assistance to the farmers in soil-conservation districts. Some of the new districts will probably get no help at all.

I cannot believe this House wants to reduce this scientific and widely praised soil-conservation work. I hope this House will allow the full budget estimate of $44,860,000 for the Soil Conservation Service.

What the bill does to the school-lunch program is to reduce by considerably more than 50 percent the nearly $63,000,000 allocated to the States for food purchases this year. It also changes the matching provisions so that many States might not be able to receive the full amounts provisionally available for them under the new appropriation proposal. Payments by those children who can afford to pay for their share of the lunch costs could no longer be included in the totals of State "matching" money.

In some States, the amounts that would be available for school-lunch operations next year would be so small as to raise serious doubts about the continuance of the program on any basis.

Now a word about section 32 funds. Elimination of these funds, the equivalent of 30 percent of the previous year's customs receipts, would deprive farmers of protection against emergency situations in various commodities.

We need these funds to deal with local surpluses of perishable commodities, such as fruits and vegetables. We have such local surpluses somewhere every year. We have some now. We will have more. Without section 32 money, it would be impossible to put a practical floor under temporarily glutted fruit and vegetable markets.

The Government should have continuing access to these funds so as to make exports possible when certain farm products otherwise will not move in world trade. The funds have been invaluable in eliminating the cotton surpluses, for example.

We especially need to maintain section 32 in order to cushion the impact of price-depressing factors on the farm economy. We also need it in developing new uses, diverting some products to byproduct uses, and in getting supplies of food and fiber to the needy.

In the rural electrification field, the effect of the bill can be stated very clearly and concisely. It would deprive 135,000 farm families of electric light and power they could just as well have in the year ahead. This would be the direct effect of the bill in decreasing the funds which REA needs to do engineering and other work which must precede the extension of power lines. Do not slow down or stop this service which is second in importance only to the RFD service to the farmers.

The committee bill is especially hard on the small farmer who is short on resources. In calling for complete elimination of direct loans for farm purchase, the bill would order that deserving and qualified applicants—including veterans—be denied the opportunity to buy farms of their own. The demand for these loans has increased steadily, especially from veterans. On December 31, 1946, applications from 36,340 veterans were on file, as compared with 7,705 on the same date a year earlier. By denying these loans, the Department loses an effective weapon against farm land-price inflation, since these farms are purchased on a long-time earning capacity appraisal. And the bill would completely nullify section 505b, Public Law 346—the GI bill of rights.

The bill also would reduce funds for production and subsistence loans by $30,000,000. This means that many eligible applicants, including veterans, would be denied the only source of credit suitable to successful operations on their farms. With loan funds exhausted in most States, 14,600 of the veteran applications are still on file. To date, loans have been made to approximately 50,000 World War II veterans, and it would be discriminatory to refuse similar aid to other veteran applicants who filed too late to receive aid from past appropriations.

The committee bill would reduce funds for salaries and expenses by $12,000,000 and thus reduce the technical assistance to borrowers that frequently spells the difference between success and failure on these loans. There are now 1,200,000 borrowers with outstanding accounts of $700,000,000. FHA would have to close about 575 county offices, and increase the workload of remaining county personnel beyond the point where adequate assistance can be rendered borrowers.

I could cite other faults in this bill including the failure to provide funds to put into effect the scientific approach to the problems of distribution authorized by the Research and Marketing Act. However, this is merely a failure to advance the cause of agriculture and the general welfare whereas the cuts I have discussed represent absolute regression—positive detriment to American agriculture. The bill as it stands provides for an appropriation that is too low and a cost that is too high for the Nation to afford. I plead with you: Do not start us back on the road to soil destruction and depression.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. EVINS].

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation bill being considered here today will cut and reduce the recommended budget for the Department of Agriculture by $383,000,000 less than recommended by President Truman. Should this action be approved the Congress will in effect be cutting the heart from a sound and progressive agricultural program designed to bring about a self-sustaining American agriculture and a manifestation and development of this Nation's agricultural resources.

The economies proposed in this measure are to the detriment of the farmers of our country and all segments of our population. The bill drastically curtails the services of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Soil Conservation Service, the Farmer's Home Administration, the National School Lunch Program, the Rural Electrification Administration, the Production and Marketing Administration, and various branches of the Department of Agriculture concerned with scientific research and agricultural development and extension. I am in favor of economy—"constructive economy"—by eliminating waste and extravagance and useless personnel and have voted for measures in this session of the Congress to effect such economies where I felt that such could be accomplished without impairing vital and essential Government services. However, the drastic cuts that are here proposed, in my humble opinion, constitute a glaring example of false economy which is manifestly unfair not only to our farmers and the agricultural population of our country but also to every segment of our citizenship who are depending upon a successful and prosperous agriculture in America. Should American agriculture fail through the lack of coordination and support, all dreams of future prosperity and international peace may well end in chaos and confusion. The drastic reductions in appropriations proposed for the Soil Conservation Service exemplify a virtual wrecking of the soil-conserving programs, which is false economy in the truest sense. Our farms and tillable agriculture soil constitute the basic wealth of our country. Department of Agriculture statisticians estimate that between 1895 and 1930 a full million acres of top soil were lost each year and that more than 50 percent of the country's farm lands have been damaged by wind or water erosion and that this loss to the Nation has been about $4,000,000,000 a year. Since 1930, under the soil-conservation programs through contour planting and cultivation, terracing and various other soil-conserving and erosion-preventing practices, the wastage of our lands has been greatly reduced. Although the expenditures for soil conservation may appear to be great they are trivial compared to the ultimate gains which may accrue under these programs.

The majority membership of the Appropriations Committee has eliminated entirely all of the work heretofore performed by members of various county ACA committees in assisting farmers in statements of performance of prescribed conservation practices under which payments are conditioned. This elimination of assistance, basic in the field where most needed, is unjustified and constitutes an example of being penny-wise and pound-foolish. We cannot afford to let soil conservation slip back to a haphazard and unassisted condition contrary to the welfare and well-being of the present and future of America. This program is extensive and covers assistance in crop stripping, irrigation, cover cropping, restoration of eroded fields, terracing, draining, contouring, and other soil-conservation practices. Participating in the program are nearly 4,000,000 of the approximately 6,000,000 farms in the Nation.

The same situation and general principle applies as respects the programs of the Production and Marketing Administration as applied to cotton and tobacco production; to the Federal crop-insurance program which assures the investment of our farmer in his crop, and in the triple-A and Commodity Credit price-support programs as well as the Rural Electrification Administration, all of which aid in composing a well-balanced farm program.

Mr. Chairman, we want to maintain a well-balanced and profitable agriculture, and I urge that prior to the passage of this bill that amendments be adopted reinstating necessary funds which have been deleted, thereby providing for a continued strong and successful agriculture in America.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN].

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the farmers of this country have just begun to get their heads above water, and it seems to me that the Appropriations Committee has reported an appropriation bill to the House that will sink the farmers again. I feel that I am well qualified to speak on this subject, since I was born and reared on a farm and at a time when the farmers received only a very small percentage of what their produce was worth.

Through well thought out legislation by the Congress the Government has been in a position during the past 10 years to materially assist the farmer in getting what he is justly entitled to receive for his produce. The pending agriculture appropriation bill practically eliminates several items materially affecting the farmers.

First, the transfer of the Federal inspection fee from the Government to the packer only adds more expense as we all know that the packers will pass this additional expense on to the farmers.

The REA has just begun to recuperate from the war, as it was impossible for this organization to secure copper wire and other strategic materials to give the farmers the benefit of electric service during the critical war days. I sincerely hope the House will amend the present bill tomorrow when amendments are in order so that the REA funds will not be imperiled, also the fine work carried on by the REA cooperatives throughout the United States can continue uninterrupted. I sincerely hope that I will live long enough to see every farm home in the United States have electric service, which will also mean that they can have water works and all other conveniences afforded the people who reside in cities.

Funds for the Farm Security Administration, Commodity Credit Corporation, and other important items such as the AAA have been considerably curtailed under the pending bill. I shall vote for amendments to have sufficient funds included in this bill to carry on the above-named farm activities so that our farmers can continue to progress and not go backward. We are headed directly for another depression if we pass the pending legislation in its present form. Every Member of the House recognizes the fact that the farms are the backbone of our country and if they fail our entire economy is bound to fail.

We cannot continue to expect our farmers to operate at a loss and on the other hand guarantee industry a 10-percent profit on their investments and also continue to grant labor increased wages.

It is beyond my wildest imagination to understand how anyone could think we are economizing in Government expenses by curtailing the activities of the farmers and preventing them from having the tools necessary to raise food and other produce so necessary for not only our country but the entire world. We are sending billions of tons of food to every section of the world and it seems that we will be called on to feed the majority of the people of the world during the next few years.

We have recently made two or three huge appropriations to take care of suffering people in foreign countries and assist them in getting their governments back into operation. Therefore, I cannot understand why we should try to take away the few advantages we have recently granted our farmers under the name of economy.

Mr. Chairman, it is my sincere wish that we can amend the present appropriation bill when amendments are in order to the extent that every dollar the President has requested for the farmer shall be appropriated.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I have the highest regard for the distinguished gentlemen who are the authors of this appropriation bill, and I congratulate them for their splendid efforts to inject economy into the agricultural operations of our country. But I must remind them that the road to hell, also, is paved with good intentions, and it is my thought that false economy is more expensive in the long run than no attempts at economy.

During my brief period of tenure in this House I have heard repeated tributes to the superhuman job on the part of organized labor in producing the weapons of war with which our soldiers were able to repel the enemy; I have heard repeated tributes to American business enterprises for their splendid production efforts during the war; I have heard innumerable tributes and eulogies to our patriotic sons who fought and bled on foreign battlefields so that our Nation might continue to be the greatest nation on the face of the earth. These tributes are well founded, and their recipients are entitled to all the credit and praise that a grateful people might bestow upon them.

But our Nation has become great and remained great through the combined efforts of all of her peoples, and though I have yet in this Congress to hear of such lavish praise heaped upon the American farmer, nevertheless, without his contribution to the war effort, we would have been lost. It was he who labored through endless hours of back-breaking and thankless toil so that we who were in the service of our country both at home and on foreign soil, and those who worked in the factories to produce the guns would have food to eat and clothing to wear. The American farmer has always been the backbone of our Nation, and we should never stoop so low as to disavow that fact.

And yet, of all those who produced the weapons of war, and those who made it possible for us to weather the storm of the last great conflict, the American farmer has been the least paid and the most self-sustaining. His needs are small, and his demands are few. He receives the least amount of remuneration for his work per dollar invested and man-hour worked of all the trades or professions. And without his efforts we would all perish from the face of this earth.

I favor restoration of the cuts made by the committee in rural electrification appropriations. Nothing has meant more to the rural citizen of America than rural electrification; it has doubled the value of every farm that it has touched, and has brought the comforts of urban life to those who are most entitled to them, the American farmers.

Instead of cutting funds for this great enterprise, I think we should provide more funds in order that it may expand and give more service to more people. It is my dream that someday every farm family in America may be able to enjoy the comforts and benefits of electricity—and until that day comes, I am in favor of enlarging and expanding further this great program initiated for the farmer in recognition of his all-important contribution to American life.

It is an established fact that every living thing derives its subsistence from the top 6 inches of the earth's crust. Without this 6 inches of topsoil mankind would perish from the face of the earth, and vegetation would gradually disappear. Down through the ages of history, this soil has been washed into the valleys, and from there into the streams, and so on into the sea, and it was only after the situation was beginning to become critical that this important fact was discovered, and the science of soil conservation came into being. And today, through the efforts of our experts in the soil-conservation field who are working with those in the Triple A and other agricultural divisions, we are making rapid and noticeable progress in checking the loss of this fertility from our soils. One needs but to ride for 30 minutes from this city to see the results of this program.

The other day this Congress appropriated three hundred and fifty millions of our American dollars to be used to purchase food grown by American farmers to feed the starving people of Europe. We were drawing on our own dwindling resources to supply food for people who, through ignorance and neglect, failed to conserve their own natural resources for such emergencies, and who today are suffering because of the depletion and waste of these resources.

We seem to have plenty of money to send to Europe—but not enough to spend on our own future welfare. I cannot agree with such two-faced logic.

I want to see the section 32 funds restored to the farmers of America to whom they rightfully belong, and to see adequate funds given to our forestry and extension services and our school-lunch program.

Amendments to this bill will be offered to correct all of these injustices, and I sincerely hope that this Congress will see fit to restore these funds, at least to conform with the budget of the President.

It is high time that our American farmer assumed his rightful position in this country and ceased to be the scapegoat of every so-called political economy drive.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the authors of this report for their expressed appreciation of the importance of forestry to this country. As they point out on page 7 of the report:

> As a matter of fact, more and more, forestry is coming to be regarded as an annual crop with definite cash income benefits to farmers in all sections of the country.

That is very true—outstandingly so in my part of the country.

I want to give further credit to the report for the statement that—

> There is a growing interest in forestry as evidenced by the fact that more than threescore witnesses appeared to testify on one item or another in the Forest Service estimate.

A separate volume of the printed hearings is devoted exclusively to the testimony from scores of witnesses from both sides of the House. The time and effort devoted by the many members of the House in advocating various forestry measures are indicative of the importance of this subject, not only for the definite cash income benefits mentioned in the report, but also for the many other benefits which flow from a well-done job of forestry. You know what they are. I refer to the flood-control values, to the stabilization of communities were sustained yield forestry is practiced, to the peaceful and delightful recreation provided tens of millions of our city and rural dwellers within our widespread national forest system, and to the stimulating pleasure granted millions of sportsmen by the proper handling of the wildlife—most of which, by all odds, at least in the West, ranges throughout the national forests, and finally to the range forage made available to some 10,000,000 head of livestock which returned to the Treasury far more from national forest grazing fees than is met in administering them.

And now after reading those honeyed words in the report saying that something should be done about the forestry situation, what do we find in terms of definite recommendations? The answer is nothing but cuts in appropriations, excepting for fire protection. Turn to pages 59 and 60 of the report. Item after item after item—11 out of 12—is prefaced with a minus sign. That sort of double talk will do much more harm than good. For example, let me mention briefly 6 of the items with which I am personally well acquainted, although they are important not only in my district but Nation-wide:

First. A half-million-dollar cut is made in the project for general management and operation of the national forests. The report—page 19—says this is largely office work. This is the fund from which the forest rangers and forest supervisors are paid. Try following them over the mountains, working on forest fires, on timber sales, handling that 10,000,000 head of livestock, and doing the 101 jobs which we expect them to do. I have made such trips and want to assure you that those are far from being the swivel-chair office jobs implied in the committee report. The 8-hour day means nothing to these men during the field season. Overtime, from daylight to dark, but not on an overtime-pay basis, is customary practice. Rather than cutting this item, additional help should be provided these men. The dividend would be great in terms of less acres burned, more timber cut, and in other beneficial ways.

Second. Within the present month, Mr. TABER'S deficiency committee recommended, and Congress appropriated, an increase of $410,000 to increase the volume of timber sales on the national forests. The reason given was that such expenditures would return some $4 to the Treasury for each dollar spent. Now, this committee not only reverses the action of the Deficiency Committee by denying continuance of the $410,000 increase, but makes a further cut of $190,000 for timber-sale work. We recognized previously that it was a good business proposition to make an investment of this sort. The committee action in proposing this cut is, therefore, incomprehensible.

Third. I have mentioned that most of the big game and wildlife, especially in the West, range over our national forests. This is a valuable national resource which heretofore has been given at least some attention with the $163,000 appropriated for that purpose. Millions of sportsmen can testify to that. It is inconceivable, therefore, why the committee report—page 20—recommends that "the allotment—for the production of wildlife resources in the forests has been eliminated entirely." Note that word "entirely." We can, of course, eliminate the appropriation, but any of you who have been out in our forested country know that you cannot eliminate the hundreds of thousands of deer, elk, bear, antelope, and other game animals, and the many problems which arise because of their very presence. The complete elimination of this item is another of the incomprehensible features of this report.

Fourth. A fourth example—in brief—of the more serious cuts in forestry activities is the 50-percent reduction in forest resource investigations. This is the job of making an inventory of the standing timber in this country; what goods do we have on our shelves? Many a small-town storekeeper as well as the big industrialist realizes that an inventory of goods on hand is indispensable to a successful business. No such inventory is available as yet for large sections of the country. That is the way it is in my own State. Many of us believe that the amount of timber being cut there could be increased by hundreds of millions of board feet annually, and still not reduce the amount of our stocks on hand to a dangerous point. However, without an inventory we will not know if our stocks are being depleted too seriously. The committee report—page 21—says: "The work is largely academic, and lacks in real practical value." The practical woodsmen, the sawmill operators, and woodland owners will sharply challenge that statement. The Forest Service must have done a poor job in explaining to the committee what this project really is.

Fifth. Others will doubtless call to your attention that 35-percent cut in funds for the forest products laboratory and its field stations. The committee report—page 21—characterizes it as "academic or visionary." That was certainly not the reason why the Army and Navy people turned to this laboratory so frequently during the war years; nor the reason why the wood using industries give it their hearty support.

Sixth. Finally, among this list of incomprehensibles is the reduction of $2,500,000 for access roads; roads to make available for cutting hundreds of millions of feet of timber so urgently needed in the present housing crisis. As brought out during the hearings some $7,000,000 of the appropriation for "Forest development roads" is required for necessary maintenance. Consequently the committee report allows only $3,000,000 for new construction of access roads. This will be a reduction of almost 50 percent below the construction program under way this fiscal year. From personal observation I know that this work is being done efficiently and at reasonable cost. The returns to the Treasury from sales of national forest stumpage thus made available will more than liquidate the cost of these roads. With the need for more lumber as desperately great as it is, surely there should be no let-up in the access road construction program. To increase it would be much sounder from a cold dollar-and-cents point of view.

Other items in the Forest Service section of the bill also need further consideration. Quite probably all of them cannot be taken care of adequately at this time. I do wish to urge, however, that the House conferees study the real justification for these items more thoroughly and then join with the Senate conferees in converting the fine introductory words of this section of the report into the funds needed to actually put these words into effect.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if we are not to have another war, this is the most important of the appropriation bills that will be considered at this session of Congress. It has more direct, and immediate, and determining influence upon the national economy than any appropriation bill which will be considered in the Eightieth Congress. Notwithstanding its importance it is being cut nearly one-third lower than any other of the annual supply bills with possibly one exception, and certainly the greatest decrease in service to agriculture under the preceding year of any supply bill in the history of the Congress.

Mr. Chairman, we are entering upon a critical postwar period. There is a disconcerting similarity in the pattern of the agricultural graphs in every war in which the United States has been engaged; in the rise and fall of farm prices and farm prosperity during and following continental wars, even back to the Napoleonic era.

We observe in each instance an advance with alarming regularity in agricultural prices, agricultural income, and agricultural prosperity during the war, and then a collapse which leaves the country in the depths of a disastrous depression.

That was the situation in 1866, 1899, 1920, and that will be the situation in the readjustment which must inevitably follow this war unless steps can be taken, both legislative and economic, to reverse the trend.

With that in view, Congress has endeavored in the last two decades to provide legislative machinery and economic programs which will counteract the effect of the inexorable law of dislocated supply and demand, so far as its effects upon agricultural deflation and postwar retrogression are concerned.

The system of programs and projects provided for in this bill are the outgrowth of our efforts to achieve price stability, economic equality, and a progressive standard of living for American agriculture. Almost without exception they have been remarkably successful. They have standardized production and income and have supplied a buying power which has been reflected in the increasing prosperity of business and industry dependent on farm patronage.

For that reason any proposal which threatens the continued activity and effectiveness of this integrated system of supports and controls merits the most earnest and painstaking scrutiny and consideration.

Let us examine briefly, in the order of their discussion in the committee report, some of the activities most drastically affected by the indiscriminate restrictions and liquidations proposed in the pending bill.

That is in keeping with the times. Research has demonstrated its value in peace and war. But for research and the scientific developments which supported our troops in the field, the war would still be on, we would still be fighting—abroad and at home. Industry, quick to realize the dollar-and-cents value of this practical point of view, is making unprecedented allotments of funds for research. It is even more important that agriculture, with its need for new uses and markets and new methods and fields of distribution of agricultural surpluses, should follow suit. Pressing problems of supply, demand, prices, consumption, standardization, transportation, processing, packaging, and distribution require immediate and comprehensive study.

Accordingly, both Houses of Congress last year approved by practically unanimous vote the Hope-Flannagan research bill, and in response to that authorization an estimate was submitted to the House for an appropriation of $19,000,000 for that purpose. The committee, disregarding the mandate of the Congress, cuts the amount to $6,000,000, an amount so small as to render the project practically inoperative.

But perhaps the most disastrous effect of the bill is the denial of funds for the Production and Marketing Administration, generally known as the AAA. It has rendered the greatest service and it sustains the greatest cut of any agency in the bill.

In recognition and appreciation of the importance of the AAA program, Congress authorized it by an overwhelming majority in both branches.

In the last session of Congress authorization was made by an overwhelming majority in both branches, of a $300,000,000 agricultural conservation program for 1947. In conformity with that authorization, the Department issued a bulletin last August carrying this language:

> The provisions of the 1947 program are necessarily subject to such legislation as the Congress of the United States may hereafter enact; the making of the payments herein provided is contingent upon such appropriation as the Congress may hereafter provide for such purpose.

But the farmers of the country in view of the action of Congress in its emphatic authorization of the program and the long-established custom of the Congress to provide the funds to implement such authorizations, naturally considered the paragraph as a mere legal formality. No farmer seriously considered the possibility of any such contingency developing. In response to the announcement of the Department carrying this limitation, two-thirds of the farmers of the Nation have already started, and in many instances completed, conservation practices for this year and have laid plans to continue them during the coming year.

Now the committee proposes to take advantage of this fine print in their lightning-rod contract with the farmer and deprive him of the money he believes they have contracted to pay him. The farmer has made his contribution to the joint project and put up $2 to the Government's $1. He has performed in perhaps a majority of cases his part of the contract only to find that the committee here recommends that the Congress and the Government renege on its authorization enacted at the last session.

In the eyes of the farmer who has been cooperating with the Government in contracts of this character for years, and who has made such invaluable and indispensable contributions to the war program, this amounts to repudiation. And the denial of funds for the State and county committees destroys the agency which has given the farmer a voice in his own programs. It is liquidation, and with the committees thus summarily abolished arbitrary dictatorship is substituted for the democracy of the farmer-elected agency which has been their insurance against soil depletion and their guaranty of price stabilization.

I shall not burden you with my own views on the effect of the committee's recommendations on the conservation policies and practices which have been so universally approved by the Nation, but I should like to quote from an editorial on the subject carried in Sunday's New York Times, a newspaper of such eminence and fairness as to require no supplementary comments.

The following is an excerpt from the editorial page of the Times for May 25, 1947:

> The House Appropriations Committee used some noble language in reporting the Agriculture Department's 1948 budget on Friday.
> As we give thought to such a problem as soil conservation and to the saving of the surplus of our land from the influences of erosion we also have the responsibility of pursuing those policies that will prevent the erosion of that rugged individual character which has made the American farmer the greatest producer of agricultural commodities in any time or generation of the world's history.

It is quite true that the farmer's individualism may have been eroded by some aspects of the parity program. There is just criticism to be made of that program, as this newspaper has frequently pointed out. But it is hard to see how individualism can be restored or improved by the drastic slashes the committee has recommended in funds which are actually spent for conservation. The Soil Conservation Service recently estimated that a million acres of top soil were lost each year between 1895 and 1930; that 50 percent of our farmlands had been damaged; and that the cost had reached the appalling total of $4,000,000 a year. By way of comment the House committee cut the service's allowance from $44,860,000 to $38,673,000.

My friends, even in the city, where the paramount interest in agriculture is to secure sufficient production to meet daily needs and sufficient buying power to maintain urban industry, they realize the tragedy of cutting this vital and important appropriation at this critical time.

Then you will recall that Public Law 320, better known as section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, earmarks 30 percent of the customs revenue as a permanent appropriation to agriculture to encourage domestic consumption and export of surplus agricultural products, and to reestablish the farmer's purchasing power.

This law was put upon the statute books because of the general recognition that the tariff laws discriminated against the farmer; that they favored industry at the expense of the farm consumer; that they appreciated unduly and unfairly his cost of production and his cost of living. So, in order to offset that discrimination against the American farmer Congress enacted this law giving the farmer 30 percent of those same revenues to be used in maintaining farm prices, farm income, and the farm standard of living. It was one of the fairest provisions ever made and is in effect restitution. For the committee here to suddenly nullify the law, to in effect disregard the covenant under which it was enacted, is bad faith. You are continuing the advantages of the tariff to industry and to labor and you are discontinuing the little sop that is given to the farmer for the purpose of in some short measuse compensating him for that discrimination.

The remarkable thing is that the use of these section 32 funds has been a business success and has brought profit to the Government. If you eliminate the OPA subsidies, which were not for the benefit of agriculture at all, but solely for the benefit of the consumer, and if you confine the use of the section 32 funds to loans and price operations, the Government has made a profit on every dollar expended from the section 32 funds.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I hope for the accuracy of the record the gentleman is talking about the Commodity Credit Corporation credit and funds, not section 32 funds, because all the subsidies were handled out of Commodity Credit Corporation funds.

Mr. CANNON. Eliminating those expenditures which cannot be credited to the farmer because OPA subsidies were gratuities to the consumer and not to the farmer, the Government has made a profit.

The remarkable thing is that in the operation of the rehabilitation agencies and compensating agencies financed for the benefit of agriculture we discovered we were not only helping the farmer and helping the Nation but that the expenditures are good business investments. When we authorized HOLC and bailed out the banks and the insurance companies, everybody expected a huge deficit. But HOLC has paid out dollar for dollar. We are not going to lose a penny on it. As a matter of fact, it is so successful that they are coming in here with a proposal from money changers who want to get their hands on these good loans to make us sell this HOLC paper to private interests. So HOLC was not only a philanthropic success; it was also a business success.

Likewise, REA is a profitable investment. Some people have the idea that when you appropriate money for REA it is a gift or a grant. As a matter of fact, we are getting back every dollar we put in REA. We loan on the best security. Up to this time we not only have a negligible deficit but we have in many instances paid in advance.

As a matter of fact, practically all of these agencies we have created for the rehabilitation of agriculture have been as bread cast upon the waters and have returned to us manyfold.

I trust that any discussion of the school-lunch program is superfluous. But we have here the astonishing recommendation from the committee reducing the minimum amount required to $45,000,000.

Here is a phase that is frequently overlooked. When you appropriate $45,000,- 000 for children, they will not get the $45,000,000 in food. Under the statute there is a provision that out of each of these appropriations, $10,000,000 must be taken for equipment. Out of that $45,000,000, you will get only $35,000,000 for food. Of course, the key to the proposition of the committee is that they will not count the child's payments. Every child gets more than he pays for. Those who cannot pay are taken care of when otherwise they would go hungry. Why should such payments not be considered as matching funds? There is no reason in the world except a desire to liquidate this essential service to the children of the country. If we adhere to this requirement of not counting the money paid in by the children, there are only three States in the Nation qualified to meet these limitations—New York, Delaware, and Utah.

In many of the other States the legislatures do not meet until 1949, and even if they did it would be difficult to arrange plans to meet the situation.

Every authority, both educational and medical, says it is the best investment that we could make of American funds at this time.

Again, let me quote from Sunday's New York Times:

> The conservation of human beings is also important. A small item in this bill has been the school lunch program which the committee cut from $75,000,000 to $45,000,000. It is all important—

They are quoting the committee's report—

> It is all important, the committee observes, to turn our venture back to the States as soon as possible.

That is the principal argument made in favor of cutting the school-lunch program.

> The reason for the Federal subsidy is, of course, that some States cannot afford the cost. This particular economy may deprive many children of a hot lunch they really need.

The committee proposes to liquidate the provision Farmers Home Administration—that is the plan to provide in the country for the farmer what we have already accomplished in the city with the Federal Housing Administration and the HOLC. The success of the Home Administration program has been phenomenal. You recall that one reason for the adoption of this program was the appalling increase in farm tenancy. In the last report of the Department of Agriculture for May 1947 they show that in the South we had one-fifth fewer tenants in 1946 than we had in 1940 and we have the lowest farm tenancy in the history of the Nation.

According to the further report from the Department of Agriculture, the number of owner-operated farms has gone up 10 percent in 16 Southern States. Yet, this program is one of those that is hardest hit by this bill. Instead of providing $35,000 as the budget asked or $50,000, as we have today, or $25,000 as was originally provided by the committee, they in effect eliminate it.

The denial falls with greatest force upon the veterans and the small tenants. They say the veterans and tenants must be protected against themselves; that they are in danger of going out and paying too much for a farm. May I call attention to one thing that should be emphasized in connection with the Farmers Home Administration. A farm can be provided for an applicant only upon the concurrence of all committee men; they must make their estimate not upon present farm prices or current farm income, but they are required—and the requirement is rigidly adhered to—to make their estimates only on the long-time earning capacity of the farm and on the long-time average of prices. But the committee is denying these men the right to own their own farms, to have a loan with which to develop the farm they already own.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. If we should pass the Cunningham bill that provides for something similar to the Bankhead-Jones law for veterans, that would take care of that situation as far as the veteran is concerned, would it not?

Mr. CANNON. Of course, that is a contingency. The bill has not been passed and may not be passed. Here we have a law on the statute books under which we know we can provide for the ex-serviceman. Here is something we have in our hand.

A bird in the hand—is the noblest work of God.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. The Cunningham bill would not do anything more than we have got. We have already got basic legislation. That would have to go back to the same Appropriations Committee to implement it with money, and if they will not implement existing legislation, why, by changing the name, would we expect them to furnish the money?

Mr. CANNON. Of course. We should take advantage of such facilities as we now have for providing homes for veterans and tenants. Why fly to ills we know not of?

Mr. Chairman, then the report on crop insurance is certainly one of the most inadequate reports ever submitted by any committee of the House, certainly by the Committee on Appropriations, on any bill reported in the last quarter of a century. It does not touch the real situation, top, side, or bottom. And it comprises one of the most essential services rendered by the Government today. Today no business operates without insurance. Notify any manufacturing plant or any modern business this afternoon that its insurance is canceled as of 12 o'clock tonight and that plant will not open for business tomorrow until its policies are renewed.

You yourself would not drive out on the highway in an automobile without insurance. Every business in the country operates under insurance policies which provide complete coverage and protection from every possible risk, including unavoidable disasters cataloged as "the providence of God"—every business except agriculture. And no business is so subject to the vicissitudes of the unpredictable providence of God. The farmer operates under incredible hazards of fire, frost, and flood, drought and deluge, pests, insects, disease, and predators, animal, vegetable, and human—operating in the field, the feed lot, and the warehouse.

Your banker will lend you money on any asset. If it burns or dies or is stolen, your insurance protects his loan. But he cannot lend on the farmer's crops—regardless of the amount invested in them or their potential value, because the farmer can get no insurance to protect the collateral.

In this way the farmer was denied one of the most essential of modern business services until in 1938 Congress authorized the Crop Insurance Corporation. It was a new field, without actuarial statistics and no blue prints on which to predicate a practical basis of operation. As a result, it lost money steadily. Its premiums and conditions of contract were inadequate to meet the losses and costs of operation. When this became apparent, the law was revised and rewritten, and since that time has been a success on every commodity on which insurance had been provided under the original law.

All of this is completely ignored in the report of the committee. No mention is made of the success of the service, since the readjustment, a most astonishing omission.

Instead of differentiating between operations under the old law and the new law, the report lumps all losses of the original immature system and reaches the wholly unjustified conclusion that no crop insurance can be provided for agriculture under any circumstances.

Likewise the report fails to call attention to the fact that no losses have been incurred under the new law on any of its operations except those on one single commodity, cotton, on which there had not been sufficient time and data to establish a practical basis. Incidentally, the defect on that one crop was that we sought to insure the cotton producer a profit instead of insuring him against a loss. When we have had sufficient experience to develop a workable contract, the service to cotton can be made as practical and successful on that commodity as on the rest of the commodities on which the present law is showing an annual profit to the Government. For example, the Government made a profit on its insurance on wheat alone over the last 2 years aggregating something over $7,000,000, and it lost money on none of the several crops which it insured with the single exception of cotton, which was one of the crops recently brought under the provisions of the law without sufficient preliminary experience.

Now, because of the loss on that one commodity, the committee proposes to deny insurance to every other agricultural commodity. They propose to discontinue the service and institute an experimental service which is so inadequate and so poorly financed that it is evident that the real purpose is total liquidation and complete abandonment of all effort to provide for the farmer the service available to every other business.

The total of $1,000,000 recommended for administrative expenses in the report is a fraction of the amount needed for liquidation alone. The evidence is that some 450,000 crop insurance contracts are now in force with potential liabilities running into hundreds of millions of dollars. When the first law was rendered inactive in 1944, a total of $3,500,000 was provided for liquidation. Now only $1,000,000 is recommended for liquidation of a vastly larger establishment.

Under such circumstances the experimental crop insurance program which the committee suggests for 1948 could not even be started. There are no funds for liquidation much less for the initiation of a new program. The proposal of the committee is impractical to the point of absurdity. And the heartless abandonment of a successful program on all other commodities when only one is showing a loss, and on such an incomplete statement of the case, is to say the least difficult of justification.

I trust the bill reported by the legislative committee can be modified when it reaches the floor to provide for a continuance of insurance on those crops which have been self-sustaining and on an experimental basis on other crops with a view to establishing an actuarial basis on which such other crops can likewise be made self-sustaining as soon as experience justifies.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I think in fairness the gentleman should recognize the fact that the Department of Agriculture appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and asked that this be continued only on an experimental basis, and that legislation has been passed to that effect.

Mr. CANNON. I am familiar to some extent with the figures that have been submitted. They show no recent losses on any crop except cotton.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. That happened within the last week, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. But I ask my good friend who is an authority on agricultural problems, especially on those relating to dairying, if there is any reason why we should discontinue crop insurance on flax?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I am not in any position to answer that question.

Mr. CANNON. Can the gentleman suggest any reason at all why we should discontinue crop insurance on wheat?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I would discontinue it the way it has been operating. They lost about $7,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. No, they have not. That is the difficulty here. We do not have the statistics. As a matter of fact the Government made a profit of $7,065,000 on wheat for the years 1945 and 1946.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. One hundred million dollars has disappeared somewhere, has it not?

Mr. CANNON. No money has been lost under the new law except on one commodity. Something like $20,000,000 was lost on that one crop but the Government has made money on everything else.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. What commodity?

Mr. CANNON. The only loss this year has been on cotton and if that is being placed on an experimental basis, and eventually we will be able to service it as successfully and as profitably as the rest of the list.

But in the meantime what reason can the gentleman suggest for depriving all other agricultural products of the benefits of insurance?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I want to get the record straight. The legislative committee that is in such good repute today has already passed legislation doing what the gentleman is criticizing—putting it on an experimental basis.

Mr. CANNON. No such law has been enacted. It has not even been brought up for consideration in the House. And until some further provision is made why not continue to function under the legislation now in force and under which insurance is being successfully provided for the great majority of American farmers?

I am certain my distinguished friend from Wisconsin joins with me in the belief that we should be fair and accurate and logical and helpful in the provision of a service which means so much to farmers and to all business associated with their success.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion may I say that when this vast program implemented by this bill was begun, American agriculture was at its lowest ebb. The farmer was bankrupt. His farmland was being sold by the sheriff. His banks were failing at the rate of hundreds a day. Farm tenancy had increased until ownership of small farms throughout the country was practically nil. Our soil was eroding at such a rate that hundreds of thousands of acres of American arable land were being removed permanently and forever from production. Business was stagnate throughout the country because the farmers had no buying power. In many sections mobs of farmers were threatening sheriffs with the hangman's noose when they came to dispossess families from the farm. You could not borrow a dime on any farm in my State. Men outraged by confiscatory prices stopped milk trucks on the highway and poured out the milk. They invaded courtrooms and took judges from the bench. There was chaos, demoralization, destitution, and desperation throughout the rural areas. Farmers put their remaining possessions in wagons and drifted through the country as okies, hopeless, homeless, and helpless.

That was the situation in which agriculture found itself when we began the programs implemented by the appropriations in this bill. Under these services the whole situation has been retrieved. We have brought the farmer back. He is enjoying today under these programs the greatest prosperity the American farmer has ever known. He is making a greater contribution to the Nation than has ever been made by agriculture in the history of the world. We are producing this year one and one-quarter billion bushels of wheat. We are producing the greatest corn crop in American history. We are feeding America and the world as it has never been fed before from American acres. And we have raised the farm buying power and the American standard of living in both the city and the country.

Now, they here propose to put the ax to the root of activities which have made the Nation great, rich, happy, and prosperous.

Mr. Chairman, I want to balance the budget. I have brought in bills which made rescissions greater than ever made by any bill reported before or since. I have stood on this floor and urged economy which the House denied. I am for economy. But I refuse to cut so deeply, my friends, as to wreck the machinery. And again I want to quote the New York Times, a wholly disinterested commentator:

> Some other items in the committee's report will bear further examination. No one can argue that there are no possible savings in the Department's budget. If Congress can hack away what is actually deadwood, it should do so.

Now, that is a reasonable position. That is the position that we have always taken.

> But this is no year in which to cut out or hamper any activity which will save or improve the fertility of our soil, reduce farm production, or impair the well-being of people on the land. Agriculture just now is a booming industry, but it can collapse at this critical period in history, as it has done before, if we apply penny-wise and short-sighted policies to it.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. FOLGER. A few minutes ago the gentleman was giving us a true historical picture of the plight of the farmer when we were not giving attention to him in matters of legislation. One man said about that time, "Destroy your cities and leave your farms and the cities will spring up again as if by magic. Destroy your farms and the grass will grow in the streets of every city in this country." Did that not come to pass?

Mr. CANNON. No greater truth has ever been spoken. The strength of America is in her farms and in her farm people. That is what is at stake in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE].

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that the facilities of the House are hardly adequate to properly display these charts, but I trust you will bear with me, as I want to call them to the attention of the committee. Since I could not hang them here, I do not have them arranged in the order in which I wanted to comment on them, but we can at least begin with this one, which I consider very alarming.

This chart was just prepared this afternoon to show the trend of food production and of food consumption per capita of the United States. Food production is this broken line here. The food production per capita of the United States is up to 125 percent of what it was in 1925. The food consumption per capita is up to about 116 percent. Food production went up because our Nation asked our farmers to increase the production of food. The farmers responded. They increased the production of food. We now have an agricultural plant capable of and actually producing 125 percent of its normal production. We have not increased food consumption in the United States at the same rate. What does that mean? What does that mean to you? To me it means simply that now that we have passed the period when we closed this gap with sales to the military and to UNRRA there is a 10-percent margin between consumption and production. That means surpluses. To me that word "surplus" in agriculture means danger. It means losses to the farmer, and it means low prices. It means agricultural disaster.

If there ever was a time when we need to take care of our farm problems and when we need to beware of what is about to befall agriculture in this Nation, it seems to me that this chart which shows the ratio of agricultural production to American consumption should make it plain that that time is coming in the next few months, or at least in the next few years. Of course, as long as we continue to export 400,000,000 bushels of grain to Europe, we may postpone the evil day. But the agricultural plant has been increased in response to the needs of our Government, and only our Government can make the provisions to close that gap which now exists between production and consumption. Unless it is closed, there can be nothing but disaster in agricultural prices.

Now, what does this bill do for agriculture prices? For one thing, it reaches in and grabs out the support under surpluses. Section 32, the crutch on which agriculture has leaned for all these years, is rudely jerked out from under us, and we are told that just at the period when agriculture is facing the greatest surplus which it has probably ever faced, we are going to be without that support.

My friends, I wonder why we have a bill of this kind? I am not here to make any partisan charges. I am not here to lay the blame on any individual, but I wonder why we have this kind of thinking that brings in a bill of this kind; why we have a philosophy of government today that leads our Government to encourage the farmer to increase production and then pulls the props out from under him? I wonder if it is not due to the fact that there has been so much propaganda over this country to the effect that the farmer is robbing the American public; to the effect that the farmer is getting prices that are all out of line with what anybody else gets.

Let me show you a few more charts. Let us look at this chart. I think this is one of the most illuminating charts. It is just two little lines. It does not look like very much, but this shows the per capita food cost and the percentage of income in the United States from 1913 to 1946. Back in 1920, the actual food expenditures of the American people were about 33 percent of their income. They run now to about 23 percent of the national income. But they would not be that high if you follow the line of the cost of a given quantity of food, representing the average annual amount consumed. If the consumption had remained the same, you would find that the food that in 1920 took some 33 percent of the American national income can now be bought for some 17 percent of the national income. The American people are actually eating more, but even so they are doing it on a smaller part of their income.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. POAGE. What we are actually eating in the United States today is only costing us 19 percent of our national income, or less than two-thirds as much of the national income as we formerly spent for food. How can anybody claim that the farmer is robbing the public when the farmer is letting the man in the mill and the factory buy his food for 2 hours' work where he formerly had to spend 3 hours' work. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman by his charts is evidently trying to establish the fact that at the moment agriculture seems to be in a rather favorable position. If that is true, does he think that the payments that were made to agriculture, initiated back in the depression time, should now be continued at about those levels, or would he not believe that possibly some of that money might be saved for a rainy day?

Mr. POAGE. Of course, it is most unfortunate that the majority leader did not observe the first chart that I showed here, which I think shows as clearly as can be shown that we are faced with a gap between agricultural production and agricultural consumption that must inevitably lead to surplus, and an early break in agricultural prices, leading to agricultural disaster.

Mr. HALLECK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. POAGE. Yes, I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I was here and I saw the first chart you exhibited. I noticed the 10 percent that you pointed out. If we were not shipping so much food abroad, I do not know whether our consumers would go up to that 125 percent or not. There are many people who think that they probably would. I do not know what may ultimately happen to that.

Mr. POAGE. Undoubtedly, if the gentleman wants to break the price of agricultural products down to a low enough level, he can sell the consumption of the American farms at a bankrupt price. If that is what the gentleman proposes, then, of course, in spite of my statement that I did not intend to inject any personalities or any partisanship in this discussion, I must suggest that the leadership of the Republican Party has certainly deserted every claim to farm support, if that is what the gentleman proposes. Certainly the farmers of America are entitled to a living wage. That living wage has been fixed by this Government as parity. We are guaranteeing to the farmers only 90 percent of a living wage. How many of your laborers, how many of your capitalists will accept 90 percent of a fair return and think that they are being fairly treated? How can it be said that the farmer who is assured only 90 percent of parity is robbing anybody else? We are now told that the farmer who is getting 90 percent of a living wage as defined by law is destroying the economy of everybody else. Let us see just how the farmer compares with other groups.

It is true that realized net income of farm operators has increased substantially as a result of increases in both agricultural prices and in production. In spite of this fact, the preliminary estimates of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics show an average realized net income per farm operator in 1946 of $2,565 per year, or about $49 per week per family. This is the farm family's total return from farming, and includes the value of the home-produced food, as well as the rental value of the farm home. It includes the total return on the family's investment, the farmer's management, and his own labor and whatever labor other members of the family contribute to farm production. The average family had an equity of about $11,700 in farm real estate, machinery, motor vehicles, livestock, and crops on hand as of January 1, 1946. Interest on this equity at 5 percent would amount to $585 per year. Deducting this interest on the investment from the realized net income would leave but $1,980, or about $38 per week, as the income of the farmer and his family for labor and management. This compares with an average weekly wage of $47.47 per wage earner, for factory workers. When it is remembered that in a very large percentage of the cases there are at least two wage earners in the farm family, it will immediately become apparent how poorly farm income compares with the income of industrial workers, even at present prices.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman, I believe, is overexercised about section 32 funds. After all, Congress in the deficiency bill just last week restored entirely the lending power of $4,750,000,000 of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and that is one way we are taking care of the 90-percent-parity funds.

Mr. POAGE. Possibly the gentleman is overexercised, but I am one of those who saw the disaster which surplus farm production brought to this land. I have seen the terrible effect of these surpluses and I, for one, have not forgotten the lesson. I, for one, do not propose to take steps that are going to lead us into another catastrophe of that kind; and I do not believe the gentleman from Minnesota wants to. I am convinced by all the figures and by all the facts, that we are on the road to that kind of catastrophe; if we do not provide machinery now, to cope with the problem, but the gentleman offers no solution; the majority leader offers no solution except to take it out of the farmer's hide, reduce farm prices to such extent that you can sell your products for practically nothing. Get prices down, says the majority leader, and then maybe our farm products will be consumed. Sure, if you sell your cotton at 4 cents a pound it will be consumed. Certainly, if you break the price of corn down to two-bits a bushel it will all be consumed. Certainly if you break the price of cattle down to a nickel, then you can sell them. Then the Republican Party can say, "We have got full consumption." But if you are going to give to the farmer a fair price, even 90 percent of a living wage, then you have got to do something now about that gap that exists or we all know what will happen.

Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize again the fact that farmers, as a class, are still giving more to society and getting less in return than any other group.

I want to emphasize again the fact that support prices are not high prices. The prices that we have tried to maintain for farmers are far lower than the prices received by other groups. They are lower than the recognized living-wage standard; they are only 90 percent of parity. When we compare the gains made by farmers on one hand, and by industrial workers and capital on the other hand, we find that the farmer runs a poor third comparing wages, prices, and profits, during the period 1935–39 with the same items. In 1947, we find that:

Prices received by farmers in April 1947 were up 253 percent.

Prices paid by farmers in April 1947 were up 180 percent.

Farmers were, therefore, relatively better off by 73 percent.

Wages received by industrial workers in March 1947 were up 213 percent.

Since that time many wages have been increased 15 percent.

Prices paid by industrial workers in March 1947, 156 percent.

Workers were, therefore, relatively better off by 72 percent.

Profits made by corporations in 1946 were up 336 percent.

Prices paid for food by urban people in 1946 were up 190 percent.

Capitalists are, therefore, relatively better off by 146 percent.

When we take the comparison back to the base period of 1909–14 it is even more striking. I do not have the figures on corporate profits during this period, but I do have the figures on prices received by farmers as compared with prices farmers paid and the hourly earnings received by industrial workers as compared with the prices they paid. These figures show:

Prices received by farmers in 1947 were up 280 percent.

Prices paid by farmers in March 1947 were up 227 percent.

Farmers are, therefore, relatively better off by 53 percent.

Compared with this we find, using the same base period:

Hourly earnings received by industrial workers in March 1947 were up 557 percent.

Prices paid by industrial workers in March 1947 were up 227 percent.

Workers were, therefore, relatively better off by 330 percent.

Can it be charged that under these circumstances farm prices are unfair or too high? Can it be that the majority leader, or the subcommittee that wrote this bill, would seriously contend that we should remove the most effective supports to farm prices simply in order to give more fortunate and more prosperous segments of our society a further advantage?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. POAGE. If the gentleman will get me more time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I think we had better proceed to read the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Will the chairman permit me to yield for one extension?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH].

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, almost everybody knows it has taken nearly a decade of diligent effort to bring the farmers of this Nation to the present state of prosperity they now enjoy. Furthermore, many people know how serious and far-reaching the results have been when depressions have overtaken agriculture. In my opinion it is unwise to take any chance with the welfare of American agriculture which is so vital to so many people of this Nation and the world as a whole.

It is my sincere hope that the present agricultural appropriations bill will be appropriately amended to the end that our farm program, which admittedly has been a constructive one, will not receive a set-back which could be the forerunner of chaos in many of the aspects of agriculture.

Agriculture in its many phases has been benefited greatly by the rural electrification program. Highly pleased are the farmers who have received the advantages and benefits of this program. There are many other farmers in our area and throughout the Nation who desire the benefits of REA. It is my hope that this segment of our agricultural program will not be injured or unnecessarily delayed by the action of this Congress. Necessary funds to properly expand the REA program so that it will reach as many farmers as possible, of course on a sound basis, should be carried in this appropriation bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, there has been much discussion with respect to the rule under which this appropriation bill comes to the floor for consideration. I think it should be made clear, in deference to the committee in charge of this measure, that the rule does not put this House in a so-called strait-jacket. I have on many occasions opposed such rules that have been brought to this floor in the past. Such rules did not permit offering amendments of any kind. This bill is subject, as in the case of other bills, to amendment and debate. Any Member will have a chance, if he chooses to do so, to offer amendments from the floor to strike portions therefrom. Or he may offer amendments to add to this legislation if he feels he can get support for such amendments. I mention this, Mr. Chairman, only to further clarify a situation that seems to have become somewhat beclouded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, hereinafter referred to as the current fiscal year, namely.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. ROBERTSON] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the necessity of balancing the Nation's budget, and the elimination of unnecessary functions, duplication of service, and excessive personnel in all the administrative phases of our National Government. I am concerned, and gravely so, when I read the Agriculture appropriations bill, making extreme reductions in farm appropriations. We should move with great caution when we attempt to cut expenses which directly affect the farmers of the country.

The farmers of the Nation will express indignation over the tremendous slash in the $300,000,000 for the AAA conservation program specifically approved by Congress last year. It can be argued with good conscience that this is breaking the faith with millions of farmers. There is grave concern as to whether or not the reduction of administrative expenses to $15,000,000 will permit the State and county PMA offices to carry out their program successfully, and as well to handle commodity loans and other price-support functions vital to millions of farmers.

On the question of rural electrification I yield to the committee the right, without question, to cut administrative costs $1,600,000. I cannot with complete understanding see why the loan program, which is a self-liquidating program, should have been cut $25,000,000. This item should be reinstated on the floor without question.

Although there is a great demand for farm products today, and the problem of surpluses, generally speaking, is negligible, still in a nation with as gigantic a productive capacity as we have in the United States we can anticipate surpluses in the future. Now is the time for investigation and research in this field. Because of this, principally, I am alarmed over the complete elimination of section 32 funds for surplus disposal and the small appropriation allowed to carry out the program of the Hope-Flannagan Act, which was passed almost unanimously by Congress last year.

In our aspirations to find the real road to economy, we must not be led astray, especially when we deprive the farmers themselves of the benefits to which they are rightfully entitled.

I do not wish to convey the impression that I am just knocking everything accomplished by the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations. I feel that they very judiciously handled a great many phases of what was necessarily a complicated and detailed appropriation bill. I feel that the subcommittee is to be complimented for their treatment of many of these phases, and I think especially of the Extension Service, which has proved so important to the development of agriculture throughout the several States. Although a cut was made in the Soil Conservation Service, I am pleased that the cut was not so severe as to seriously cripple this organization, which offers technical advice to farmers of the Nation.

I regret that I am forced to disagree with the subcommittee, but feel I must, in the interest of the Nation's farmers.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HERTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3601) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those who have spoken on this side today may be allowed to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. POULSON (at the request of Mr. PHILLIPS of California) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Sunday Star.

Mr. NIXON (at the request of Mr. PHILLIPS of California) was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an article from the quarterly magazine Law and Contemporary Problems.

Mr. HORAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an excerpt.

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a newspaper editorial and in the other a magazine article.

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and include certain statements and excerpts.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, with the House meeting at 10 o'clock tomorrow, will we proceed immediately to the consideration of the pending appropriation bill?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Or will there be preliminary business?

Mr. HALLECK. My understanding is we will proceed immediately to the consideration of the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

LIMITING APPLICATION OF PROVISIONS OF FEDERAL LAW TO COUNSEL EMPLOYED UNDER SENATE RESOLUTION 46

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 107, and its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That nothing in section 109 or section 113 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 18, secs. 198 and 203), or in section 361, section 365, or section 366 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 5, secs. 306, 314, and 315), or in any other provision of Federal law imposing restrictions, requirements, or penalties in relation to the employment of persons, the performance of services, or the payment or receipt of compensation in connection with any claim, proceeding, or matter involving the United States, shall apply with respect to counsel to the special committee of the Senate serving under the provisions of Senate Resolution 46, Eightieth Congress, first session, adopted January 22, 1947: Provided, however, That nothing contained herein shall be deemed to limit, curtail, or augment any existing authority in such committee or its counsel to initiate, prosecute, maintain, defend, or otherwise dispose of any claim, action, proceeding, or matter, civil or criminal, on behalf of the United States.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REQUEST TO WITHDRAW PAPERS

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, April 21, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

If Thou, O Lord, shouldst mark iniquities, who among us could stand unafraid before Thee? For there is so much bad in the best of us, and so much good in the worst of us, that we dare not criticize each other. But Thou canst reprove us all.

Ere we begin our duties, cleanse Thou our minds and hearts. What no proper shame kept us from committing, let no false shame keep us from confessing. In this moment may we find grace to seek Thy pardon and find the joy of the Gospel of making a new beginning.

In the power of Christ our Lord and Master. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, May 27, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 107) limiting the application of provisions of Federal law to counsel employed under Senate Resolution 46 without amendment.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 107) limiting the application of provisions of Federal law to counsel employed under Senate Resolution 46, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

UNITED STATES PRINCETON UNIVERSITY BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] as a member of the United States Princeton University Bicentennial Commission, in place of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], resigned.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"Senate Joint Resolution 20

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing Congress to refuse passage of H. R. 2876, creating a Redwood National Park and a national-forest area in California

"Whereas H. R. 2876, now pending, proposes to create in the northwestern portion of California a Redwood National Park and a national-forest area, in addition to the parks and national forests now existing; and

"Whereas the purposes for which this national park and national-forest area are to be created are indefinite or not defined in H. R. 2876, while the disadvantages and disabilities which will accrue to the State of California and to the people of this State should this bill become law are at once apparent; and

"Whereas they accrue from the fact that this bill would take from private ownership and add to the public domain approximately 2,315,000 acres of highly valuable timber and other lands, thereby decreasing by more than one-half the taxable areas and approximately one-half of the assessed wealth of the counties of Del Norte, Humboldt, and Mendocino, and also by about 85,000 acres in Sonoma County, placing almost the entire lumbering industry of this part of California under Federal control and withdrawing from production of lumber more than 200,000 acres of redwood timber, as a result of which agriculture, stock raising, and general business in the area would also be seriously impaired; and

"Whereas the removal of such large areas of valuable lands from the assessment rolls would so reduce the tax revenue as to disrupt the local economy by placing an intolerable burden upon local government and the remaining property holders in the area, seriously affecting most adversely the economy of the entire State; and

"Whereas there is no reasonable basis for the creation of further national parks in this part of the State, since the State of California, aided by private donors, has acquired and preserved for all time 57,882.27 acres of the finest groves of redwoods and now administers for the public in the counties named above 43,184 acres of redwood parks and is still in the process of acquiring many additional thousands of acres for these parks, and has also acquired some 36,270 feet of ocean frontage, and has adopted numerous laws and regulations to bring about better logging methods, reforestation, and conservation, and for these purposes has within the last year acquired some 53,000 acres of cutover and virgin timber lands and has embarked upon a large program of experimentation and development of better reforestation methods and more adequate conservation controls which this legislature believes to be adequate and effective; and

"Whereas creation of the parks proposed by H. R. 2876 would conflict with and seriously hamper the State park and reforestation program of the State of California: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the passage of H. R. 2876 is highly undesirable for the reason that the provisions of the bill would accomplish no reasonable purpose but would seriously and most adversely affect the economic and cultural interests of the entire State of California; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Congress of the United States, particularly the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in the National Congress, and especially Mrs. HELEN GAHAGAN DOUGLAS, author of H. R. 2876, are hereby memorialized vigorously to oppose the passage of H. R. 2876; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate forthwith transmit copies of this resolution to the chairman and members of the House Committee on Agriculture and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

Two joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Senate Joint Resolution 3

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing Congress to increase Federal aid to the Veterans' Home of California, at Yountville

"Whereas there is a home for aged and disabled honorably discharged veterans of the United States, known as the Veterans' Home of California, situated at Yountville, Napa County; and

"Whereas the said home is supported jointly by the Federal Government and the State of California, the current Federal contribution being at the rate of $300 per annum for each veteran domiciled there; and

"Whereas the cost of food products and supplies and materials of all kinds entering into the upkeep and maintenance of the said institution now prevailing is substantially in excess of normal, due to World War conditions: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly). That the Congress and President of the United States are urged and memorialized to cause an increase to be made in the Federal aid to the said Veterans' Home of California, at Yountville, from $300 to $500 per capita, per year; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

"Senate Joint Resolution 10

"Joint resolution memorializing the President and Congress of the United States in relation to providing funds for a continued Federal-aid highway program

"Whereas the construction of an adequate system of interstate highways as authorized by act of Congress has necessarily been deferred during the war years; and

"Whereas our wartime experience has demonstrated that such a system of highways is both indispensable to our national defense and essential to our peacetime economy; and

"Whereas more and more motorists are traveling throughout the Nation transcontinentally and along the coastal regions; and

"Whereas such traveling imposes particularly heavy use of California's highways and bridges which were necessarily subjected to heavy use by military vehicles and vehicles engaged in the transportation of equipment and materials for the war effort during the war years; and

"Whereas the additional cost necessary to provide adequate national defense arteries, including heavier bridges and roadbeds should be borne by all the taxpayers of the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the President and the Congress of the United States are respectfully memorialized and requested to take such steps as may be necessary to provide continued Federal appropriations to aid the States in the development of an adequate system of interstate highways and Federal-aid highways on the basis of a long-range program of Federal-State cooperative activity."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 2

"Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to grant its consent to uniform taxation of certain Indian properties, which are taxed by the Federal Government and which are immune or claimed to be immune from State taxation

"To the Honorable the Congress of the United States of America:

"Whereas there remains, nontaxable, 2,785,477 acres of Indian-owned lands located within the State of Oklahoma; and

"Whereas by recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, there has been a general revision of the trend toward holding instrumentalities of the Federal Government free from State taxation; and

"Whereas the Federal Government itself imposes inheritance and income taxes against the trust funds and earnings of trust funds and all of the earnings from the sale of mineral resources, including oil and gas production from Indian lands and trust funds and securities held in the Treasury of the United States in trust for Indians; and

"Whereas as to the Five Civilized Tribes, the Supreme Court in the case of Oklahoma v. United States, has recently held that all personal property, all cash and securities held in trust by the Government for full-blood Indians and all real estate, except that real estate which is exempt from ad valorem taxes, either by act of Congress or by provisions in trust deeds or patents is subject to the inheritance, gift, and transfer tax laws of the State of Oklahoma; and

"Whereas there are many other tribes of Indians, the taxability of whose property is still in doubt and will result in a large amount of litigation; and

"Whereas it is within the power of Congress to make provision for the taxation of such Indian properties and the income therefrom should be the subject of State taxation; and

"Whereas in the absence of such action on the part of Congress, the State is put to much expense, trouble, and inconvenience in trying to impose taxes on the same properties which are taxed by the Federal Government; and

"Whereas as stated by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the above-cited case, as follows:

" 'Congress cannot have intended to impose Federal income and inheritance taxes on the Indians and at the same time exempt them by implication from similar State taxes.

" 'Congress has passed laws under which Indians have become full-fledged citizens of the State of Oklahoma. Oklahoma supplies for them and their children schools, roads, courts, police protection, and all the other benefits of an ordered society. Citizens of Oklahoma must pay for these benefits. If some pay less, others must pay more. Since Oklahoma has become a State it has been authoritatively stated that tax losses resulting from tax immunity of Indians has totaled more than $125,000,000. If Congress intended to relieve these Indians from the burden of a State inheritance tax as a consequence of our national policy toward Indians, there is still no reason why we should imply that it intended the burden to be borne so heavily by one State.

" 'Restricted cash and securities and lands not specifically exempt by acts of Congress from direct taxation and miscellaneous personal property and insurance, all belonging to members of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma held not exempt by any existing legislation from State estate taxation': Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oklahoma (the House of Representatives concurring therein):

"SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to immediately pass a uniform act in which the rights of the States to tax the same properties belonging to restricted Indians, which is taxed by the Federal Government, and that such act be made to apply alike to all Indian tribes and individual restricted Indians located within the State of Oklahoma.

"SEC. 2. Provided, That nothing herein is intended to levy any tax on the allotted or selected homesteads of any restricted Indian and provided that the State disavows any purpose or intention of providing any tax lien against any restricted real estate of Indians within the State of Oklahoma, which would result in the levying of any process or execution against such properties as would interfere with, or molest the rights of occupancy and enjoyment thereof by such Indian citizens of the State of Oklahoma.

"Adopted by the senate the 3d day of May 1947.

"Adopted by the house of representatives the 7th day of May 1947."

A petition of the members of the Valdosta (Ga.) Townsend Club, No. 2, praying for the enactment of the so-called Townsend plan to provide old-age assistance; to the Committee on Finance.

A resolution adopted by the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association, New York City, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation to exempt from income tax pension payments paid to former municipal employees; to the Committee on Finance.

A resolution adopted by the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees, at its eighteenth regular and fourth quadrennial convention, Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring the enactment of Senate bill 1048, to raise the minimum-wage standards of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Senate Concurrent Resolution 12

"Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to appropriate funds to pay losses suffered by the cotton farmers of Oklahoma which losses were covered by Federal crop insurance

"Whereas many cotton farmers of the State of Oklahoma have unpaid claims against the Federal Government arising under the Federal crop-insurance program of the United States; and

"Whereas these farmers borrowed money from banks to plant and cultivate their cotton crop of 1946, which loans are long past due because of the failure of said crops and because of the failure of the Federal Government to pay the Federal crop insurance thereon; and

"Whereas said farmers have been advised that the reason for the failure of the Federal Government to pay said claims is that the appropriation therefor has been exhausted: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-first Legislature of the State of Oklahoma (the House of Representatives concurring therein):

"SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States of America be and it is hereby memorialized to immediately make an appropriation and pass the necessary laws to pay the 1946 cotton crop losses of the farmers of the State of Oklahoma, which losses were covered by Federal crop insurance.

"SEC. 2. That the secretary of the senate be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to each of the following: To each member of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the United States Senate, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the United States House of Representatives, the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, the Department of Federal Crop Insurance, Washington, D. C., and the Agriculture Adjustment Administrator, Washington, D. C.

"Adopted by the senate April 8, 1947.

"Adopted by the house of representatives the 14th day of April 1947."

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition signed by 101 citizens of Winfield, Kans., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 265, to prohibit the transportation of alcoholic-beverage advertising in interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PROTEST AGAINST LIQUOR ADVERTISING

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I have received petitions signed by several hundred people in Connecticut, strongly advocating the passage of Senate bill 265, to prohibit the transportation of alcoholic-beverage advertising in interstate commerce, introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. These petitions have been submitted to me by Mrs. Norma Burgess Moore, president of the Connecticut Woman's Christian Temperance Union. I should like to have it appear that these petitions have been received and that a note has been made of them in the RECORD. I will give to the clerk a notation of the number of the petitions, so that they may be referred to the proper committee. I do not think they should be printed in the RECORD, bebecause they are quite lengthy and would occupy a great deal of space.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the petitions presented by the Senator from Connecticut will be received and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The following report of a committee was submitted:

By Mr. MALONE (for Mr. REVERCOMB), from the Committee on Public Works:

H. R. 1412. A bill to grant to the Arthur Alexander Post, No. 68, the American Legion, of Belzoni, Miss., all of the reversionary interest reserved to the United States in lands conveyed to said post pursuant to act of Congress approved June 29, 1938; without amendment (Rept. No. 209).

CONSTITUTION OF THE INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION INSTRUMENT OF AMENDMENT—REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the Constitution of the International Labor Organization Instrument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States, adopted in Montreal in 1946, and I submit a report (No. 208) thereon.

The annual conference of the International Labor Organization will be held in Geneva, beginning June 19. This report provides for the acceptance on the part of the United States of the amended Constitution of the International Labor Organization. The amended constitution in nowise changes our relationship with the International Labor Organization. I am sure there will be no objection to the acceptance of the amended constitution. Therefore, Mr. President, at the first opportunity I shall ask for the consideration of the joint resolution and accompanying report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received, and the joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES, RELATING TO ASSETS OF WHOLLY OWNED FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, following conversation earlier in the current session of Congress between the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Government Corporations, Mr. FERGUSON, and myself, the staff of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures was requested by the senior Senator from Virginia to compile the assets of the corporations which are wholly owned and operated by the Federal Government.

This compilation has been made, and it reveals that the Federal Government's wholly owned and operated corporations are holding assets totaling more than $15,500,000,000.

While this study is somewhat in the nature of a follow-up to the Corporation Control Act of 1945, which was sponsored by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, it actually was undertaken with a view to the necessity for retrenchment in all phases of Federal activity. The study was designed primarily to develop information from which appropriate committees of Congress might determine whether these corporate agencies are holding assets which might be liquidated and the proceeds applied to the costs of Government.

Exclusive of Government corporations of mixed ownership, and those in liquidation, the assets of 20 active wholly owned corporations, and their subsidiaries, total $15,698,089,707. These assets, largely in terms of book value, may be summarized as follows:

Cash on hand, in banks and on deposit	$1,250,935,984
Accounts receivable	499,792,291
Loans receivable	3,719,370,798
Deferred charges	39,266,137
Real property	3,095,267,469
Plant and operating equipment	5,206,769,133
Furniture and fixtures	81,172
Inventories of goods and commodities on hand	1,378,209,602
Investments	486,673,013
Miscellaneous assets	21,724,108
Total assets	15,698,089,707

The study under discussion was confined entirely to assets, but for the information of the Senate, the President's budget for the fiscal year 1948, estimates liabilities of the corporations at $14,161,000,000.

In view of the interest in this matter, which has been indicated by the chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations for Government Corporations, I submit a draft of a report on Assets of Wholly Owned Federal Government Corporations, Fiscal Year 1947 to the Senate and request that it be referred to the Senate Appropriations Committee for its information and use if desired. If more detail should be required, the entire file of information on which this report is based is available to the Appropriations Committees of the Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and will be printed.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATIONS, 1948—MINORITY VIEWS (PT. 2 OF S. REPT. NO. 201)

Mr. HAYDEN submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on Appropriations on the bill (H. R. 2436), making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes, which were ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. BUCK, from the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Charles A. Robinson, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the District of Columbia Redevelopment Land Agency for the unexpired term of 3 years from March 4, 1947.

By Mr. TAFT, from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

Hugh L. C. Wilkerson, and sundry other candidates for promotions in the Regular Corps of the Public Health Service;

Kenneth W. Chapman and Elmer J. Herringer for promotions in the Regular Corps of the Public Health Service;

Charles P. White, and sundry other candidates for appointments and promotions in the Regular Corps of the Public Health Service; and Henry C. Schumacher, and sundry other candidates for appointments in the Regular Corps of the Public Health Service.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LODGE (for himself and Mr. MCGRATH):

S. 1356. A bill providing for the incorporation of the Franco-American War Veterans; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAPPER:

S. 1357. A bill for the relief of Miss Ida L. Rollins; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. O'CONOR introduced Senate bill 1358, to extend for 1 year the time within which application may be made for benefits under the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946, which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 1359. A bill providing for the administration by the Bureau of Land Management under the act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269) of certain lands in certain western States, valuable for grazing, acquired by the United States under various relief and emergency acts; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. WHERRY:

S. 1360. A bill for the relief of Eric Seddon; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MCCARTHY:

S. 1361. A bill to amend the United States Housing Act of 1937 so as to permit capital grants for low-rent-housing and slum-clearance projects where construction costs exceed present cost limitations upon condition that local housing agencies pay the difference between cost limitations and the actual construction costs; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

VETERANS' TERMINAL-LEAVE PAY

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference and printing in the RECORD a bill. I also ask unanimous consent to present for printing in the RECORD an explanatory statement I have prepared relative to the desirability of extending the time within which veterans of the armed services may apply for terminal-leave pay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1358), to extend for 1 year the time within which application may be made for benefits under the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946, introduced by Mr. O'CONOR, was received, referred to the Committee on Armed Services, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946 is amended by striking out "September 1, 1947" wherever it appears in such section and inserting in lieu thereof "September 1, 1948."

The statement presented by Mr. O'CONOR was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR HERBERT R. O'CONOR

One point on which I am confident every Member of the Senate of the United States will be in full accord, is the desire to see that the veterans of our country have full opportunity to avail themselves of all the benefits which their grateful country has provided for them. One of these benefits which has unquestionably been of outstanding assistance to thousands of men and women as they resume their civilian careers, has been their terminal-leave pay, the primary purpose and function of which were to tide over the period of their reentry into gainful occupation.

The purpose of this bill, as of course every Senator understands, is to provide financial remuneration to all members of the services who did not enjoy the full amount of leave to which their length of service entitled them.

In many cases this was because the men were constantly on duty in the field where there was little or no opportunity to secure leave.

Under Public Law 704 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, section 5, it is provised that enlisted members of the armed forces, discharged prior to September 1, 1946, and former enlisted members of the armed forces, discharged prior to the date of enactment of this act, shall be entitled to be compensated for such days of leave to which they were entitled but which were not granted them. Provision is made in the act that if application is made to the Secretary of War not later than September 1, 1947, he shall be paid the amount to which he shall be entitled.

My investigation and inquiries have shown me that a large number of former service people have not, up to this time, made application for the pay due them.

On checking with the various services I am advised that the following situation exists:

Army estimates are that approximately 1,000,000 veterans have not applied. Of this number, we are further advised, at least 300,000, who will have sizable amounts due them, will not have made application by September 1, of this year.

With regard to the Navy, advices are that some 300,000 former Navy personnel have not as yet applied for their terminal-leave pay. In addition to these, some 13,000 applicants who have filed have not received their terminal-leave pay because their applications have been improperly filled out or the return addresses are incorrect.

The figures quoted for the Navy include the eligibles in the United States Marine Corps but do not include some 100,000 veterans of the Coast Guard who have not made application and who sooner or later might be expected to want the benefits of this law.

Inasmuch as the Congress is expected to adjourn before the expiration date, September 1, 1947, and in order to protect the interest of those men and women who, for one reason or another, will not have filed their applications for terminal-leave pay, I have prepared a bill, which I will submit herewith, to extend the period for filing terminal-leave pay applications until September 1, 1948.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PUBLIC LANDS COMMITTEE TO MAKE REPORT ON STUDIES AND INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the Committee on Public Lands finds it necessary to ask for a short extension of time within which to make a final report on Senate Resolution 315. We are asking for an extension to June 15, 1947. It means no additional expense. The time is necessary in order to prepare the report.

Therefore I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution and request its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 118) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority granted to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys under Senate Resolution 315, Seventy-ninth Congress, agreed to July 30, 1946, relating to studies and investigations of matters referred to such committee as heretofore extended, is hereby further extended to June 15, 1947, for the purpose of allowing additional time in which to make a report to the Congress.

RECLASSIFICATION OF CERTAIN SALARIES IN THE POSTAL SERVICE—AMENDMENT

Mr. BALDWIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 808) to amend the act entitled "An act to reclassify the salaries of postmasters, officers, and employees of the postal service; to establish uniform procedures for computing compensation; and for other purposes," approved July 6, 1945, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and ordered to be printed.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR CHAVEZ BEFORE SOCIETY OF NATIVES OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

[Mr. CHAVEZ asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by him before the Society of Natives of the District of Columbia, which appears in the Appendix.]

OUR STAKE IN GERMAN ECONOMIC RECOVERY—ADDRESS BY M. S. SZYMCZAK

[Mr. VANDENBERG asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Our Stake in German Economic Recovery," delivered by Hon. M. S. Szymczak before the Economic Club of Detroit, Mich., on May 19, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY EDWARD KEATING BEFORE COLORADO MINING ASSOCIATION

[Mr. MCCARRAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address entitled "Have We a 'Labor Problem'?" delivered by Edward Keating, editor of Labor at the annual meeting of the Colorado Mining Association, at Denver, Colo., on February 8, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

WOOL AND RECIPROCITY—EDITORIAL FROM THE WASHINGTON EVENING STAR

[Mr. HATCH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Wool and Reciprocity," published in the Washington Evening Star for May 27, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

COMMITTEE MEETINGS DURING SENATE SESSION

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia may meet at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare or a subcommittee thereof be privileged to sit this afternoon during the session of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME-TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1), to reduce individual income-tax payments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] to House bill 1.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Capper	Fulbright
Baldwin	Chavez	George
Ball	Connally	Green
Barkley	Cooper	Gurney
Brewster	Cordon	Hatch
Bricker	Donnell	Hawkes
Bridges	Downey	Hayden
Brooks	Dworshak	Hickenlooper
Buck	Eastland	Hill
Bushfield	Ecton	Hoey
Butler	Ellender	Holland
Cain	Ferguson	Ives
Capehart	Flanders	Jenner
Johnson, Colo.	Millikin	Taylor
Johnston, S. C.	Moore	Thomas, Okla.
Kem	Morse	Thomas, Utah
Knowland	Murray	Thye
Langer	O'Conor	Tydings
Lodge	O'Daniel	Umstead
Lucas	Pepper	Vandenberg
McCarran	Reed	Watkins
McCarthy	Revercomb	Wherry
McClellan	Robertson, Va.	White
McFarland	Robertson, Wyo.	Wiley
McMahon	Russell	Williams
Magnuson	Saltonstall	Wilson
Malone	Smith	Young
Martin	Sparkman
Maybank	Taft

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent because of illness in his family.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is absent on official business.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are detained on public business.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATION OF ROBERT A. LOVETT TO BE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to submit a unanimous-consent request which I apprehend will lead to no discussion. I have talked the matter over with the majority leader and the minority leader, and the request has their approval.

On the Executive Calendar is the nomination of Mr. Robert A. Lovett, of New York, to succeed Dean G. Acheson as Under Secretary of State. M . Acheson will leave the service the latter part of next month, and it is very essential that Mr. Lovett should be promptly confirmed so that he can move into the State Department at once to familiarize himself with the tremendously widespreading duties involved in his assignment. The nomination has the unanimous approval of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

All Senators know of Mr. Lovett's antecedents, and I am sure there is no possible objection to the confirmation of his nomination. Therefore, as in executive session, I am asking unanimous consent that the nomination of Mr. Lovett to be Under Secretary of State be confirmed, and that the President may be notified at once of the confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that, as in executive session, the nomination of Robert A. Lovett to be Under Secretary of State be confirmed, and that the President be notified at once. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified forthwith.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME-TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following new section:

SEC. 7. Family partnerships, partners not contributing to partnership funds.

Section 3797 (a) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence as follows: "The fact that he is related to another member, or that his interest in such syndicate, group, pool, joint venture, or organization may have been obtained through gift or loan from another member, or without the contribution by himself of any money or other property, shall not affect a member's status as a partner: Provided, That the amendment made by this section shall be applicable with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1938."

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, the pending amendment, offered by me, if agreed to and finally enacted into law, will correct in part the injustice which I sought to correct in full by the amendment which I previously offered, and which was rejected yesterday. In the course of the debate and discussion of the amendment which I offered yesterday, it was frequently pointed out on the floor of the Senate by various Senators that in non-community-property States, notwithstanding that the husband may desire to make his wife a full partner by voluntarily giving to her a half interest, or any other interest he may choose, in his business and in his property, and in consummation of which he executes the necessary legal documents and papers under State law so as to constitute her his business partner and the owner of a one-half interest, or any other designated and specified interest, in his property and in his business, which he is entitled to do under the law of the State, so she may share in the income in proportion to the interest she thus acquires, and notwithstanding that such procedure is legal, notwithstanding that it is the only way in the non-community-property States that a husband who desires to do so can give his wife the full benefit of community-property status which she would have if they were both citizens of a State in which there was in effect a community-property law, the Internal Revenue Bureau still will not recognize that legal transaction for the purpose of income-tax collections.

Mr. President, the Internal Revenue Department recognizes the community-property law of community-property States and permits the husband and the wife to split their incomes for taxpaying purposes. That results in a discrimination against the husband and wife in non-community-property States. But when the husband in a non-community-property State undertakes to comply with the law of his State by executing the legal documents necessary to give full force and effect, legally and otherwise, his purpose to make his wife a partner in his business so that she may share his income equally with him, the same Internal Revenue Bureau which recognizes the community-property State law so as to give a tax advantage to one who lives in a community-property State, refuses to recognize the partnership laws which are in effect in my State and in 37 other States of the Union under which a husband in any of those States may associate his wife with him as a legal partner.

Mr. President, as I have stated, the pending amendment will only correct in part the major evil which I sought to correct yesterday by the amendment presented by me then, which was rejected by the Senate. I say the pending amendment will only correct the evil in part. Let us consider a professional man, a lawyer or a doctor, who desires to associate his wife with him in his profession. If the lawyer's wife is not also a lawyer, or if the doctor's wife is not also a doctor, then he could not effectuate such an arrangement as I have referred to, because there would be no conveyance of property. The wife may not be licensed to practice medicine or to practice law, and therefore the husband could not convey to her a half interest to form an association for the practice of law or for the practice of medicine because she could not meet the legal requirements to obtain the license necessary to participate in such a partnership. So such individuals could not take advantage of the pending amendment by forming a partnership.

But, Mr. President, there have been many partnerships formed in the non-community-property States by the husband either giving to his wife an interest in his business, or, in many instances, by the wife actually investing her own money, her own capital, her own earnings in her husband's business. Yet she is not recognized as a bona fide partner by the Internal Revenue Bureau because the Bureau says that notwithstanding she put her own money into the business, notwithstanding she bought an interest in the business, just as any individual not having any relationship to the husband by blood or marriage could do—notwithstanding she does that, neither she nor the husband, in spite of the fact that they have paid a gift tax on the transaction, can obtain the benefit that is given to citizens of community-property States for tax purposes unless she actually works in the business, helps manage the business, and gives her time and supervision to it just as if she were an employee.

Mr. President, that position is wrong. We who condemn it were chastised a bit yesterday on the floor of the Senate by the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. I shall not undertake to quote his words verbatim, but he chastised us for the position we took, and said, "You ought to pass community-property laws in your States, and then you would have every advantage we now have." Certainly that is true, Mr. President, but we have passed a law which is quite as binding as are the community-property State laws. We have just as much right to pass a partnership law as does the State of Texas to pass a community-property law, and the operation of our law makes just as legal the transfer of property by the husband to the wife as do community-property State laws which compel the equal division of property and income between husband and wife. Yet our law is not recognized by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. President, I want to say, with respect to the remarks of the able Senator from Texas, that if it be true, as he contends, that under community-property law the wife is recognized as an equal partner, and is entitled to half the earnings of the husband by reason of the fact that she may supervise a home and do the work for the partnership that is required to be done as a housewife, then why should the Internal Revenue Bureau say that if the wife lives in a non-community-property State she cannot have the same recognition unless she leaves her home and goes out and works in her husband's office or in his factory or on his farm or in some business in which he may be engaged? Why can she not still remain just the wife charged with the household duties? When has it become the prerogative of the Government of the United States to say where a man's wife may work or may not work before she may become a partner with her husband in any business enterprise?

My amendment will correct that situation, Mr. President. All we are asking is to eliminate such an evil. I do not see how the Senate can consistently deny that relief to us. Of course, the adoption of the pending amendment will not by any means have the impact of loss of revenue that the adoption of the amendment which was acted upon yesterday would have had. No one can estimate exactly, or within reasonable approximation, what the loss of revenue would be under the pending amendment, but certainly, Mr. President, the loss in revenue will be in no sense as great as the loss which would have occurred had the amendment under discussion yesterday been adopted.

The principal objection raised against the amendment acted on yesterday, and the reason which many assigned for voting against it, was that the Government could not stand the loss of revenue which would result from it, in addition to the loss of revenue which will result from the passage of H. R. 1, as amended by the Senate. This amendment does not involve that much loss. The amendment merely provides that the laws of my State and of 37 other States in the Union shall have the same status, the same force and effect, and the same recognition by the Bureau of Internal Revenue for purposes of tax collection, as have the laws of community-property States for the benefit of husband and wife in the payment of their income taxes.

I do not believe that anyone can successfully defend the position of opposition to this amendment except possibly on the ground that it would cause a slight loss of revenue in the Federal Treasury during the next year and the years to come. Mr. President, the small amount of revenue which might be involved is not so precious or so necessary as to warrant the lawmakers of this Government in disregarding a sacred obligation to enact laws which are honest and which do equity among the citizens of the Nation. Any Senator who desires to oppose the amendment has the right to do so; but I could not with good conscience take such a position with reference to the citizenship of any other State.

Mr. President, I wish to revert to the amendment which was rejected yesterday. The vote has already been taken. I have no quarrel with any Senator who voted against it. I am somewhat disappointed although I did not expect the amendment to be adopted. However, in view of the arguments and reasons assigned pro and con, and the discussion by the ablest Members of this body, I find that there is but one valid reason given why that amendment was not adopted. I think it was because it was felt that the Treasury at this time could not stand such a loss of revenue, and because there were other inequalities and inequities in the tax law which ought to be removed.

The vote on the amendment was 29 for and 51 against, with 6 other Members of this body paired in favor of the amendment, making a total of 35 Members of this body, more than a third, who have gone on record as favoring the correction of this flagrant inequality and injustice. That large number gives me hope and encouragement. Furthermore, yesterday a number of Senators gave expression to the hope, the purpose, and the intent that in a general tax revision bill this serious problem of flagrant discrimination shall be given early consideration with a view to removing it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I should like to emphasize again the things which were said on that subject yesterday. Since yesterday I have read the Senator's remarks, and I congratulate him on having made a most able presentation of his viewpoint.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the Senator. Let me say for the RECORD that a number of Senators have spoken to me personally about this matter, both during the course of debate and since the vote was taken yesterday. Although they could not support the amendment yesterday because they felt that the impact of loss of revenue would be too great, they have assured me that at the earliest opportunity, when a general revision bill is presented containing a provision similar to the amendment whch I offered yesterday, it will have their support.

I make reference to that fact because I want the people of the 38 States affected to know that, notwithstanding the vote of this body yesterday was adverse, there have been expressions on the floor of this Senate and in private conversation by a number of Senators, of assurance that consideration of the problem will not be unduly delayed. Mr. President a sufficient number, together with those recorded in favor of the amendment, have so expressed themselves, as will insure its passage. I want the people who are bearing this burden to know this Senate has now pledged relief. I want to give them encouragement, as I review the record which was made yesterday and the assurances which have been given by Senators who felt that under the particular circumstances at the moment they could not vote for the amendment, that they are conscious of this travesty upon justice, and that as speedily as possible they will make a diligent effort, as honest legislators, to correct this injustice.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to join in what the Senator from Colorado has just said about the able argument made by the Senator from Arkansas yesterday. Both yesterday and today he has pointed graphically to a situation which, in my opinion, requires correction. I emphasize the point that there should be no difference between the community-property States and the non-community-property States in making the necessary adjustments. I shall vote against the Senator's amendment today, partly for the same reasons which actuated me in voting against the amendment which he offered yesterday. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], chairman of the committee, has assured us that his committee will consider these questions. The people of the community-property States are at present suffering from some injustices which we think should be corrected. I am very anxious to have the whole subject explored, so that all the inequities and injustices may be corrected. I do not want the rights of the community-property States, which we conceive to be fundamental and vested rights, destroyed; but I am anxious that the rights of citizens of other States be accorded to them upon as nearly an equal basis as possible. I am happy to join the Senator from Arkansas in trying to reach such a solution.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I thank the Senator. I believe that that is the sentiment which prevails generally in this body. The only reason I am offering this amendment now and insisting upon it is that there are a number of citizens in my State—and I am sure the same situation is true in other States—who today cannot adjust their business affairs because of the fact they have conveyed an interest in their property to their wives, their daughters, or their sons, and the conveyance has not been recognized by the Treasury or Revenue Department. Their whole tax problem is in a state of flux. They do not know how to make adjustments. They do not know how to plan their businesses; what their tax liability will ultimately be. They know that they are entitled to relief, and they have been hoping that this Congress will give them relief. I am making a plea today to afford relief to those who have operated under the law and have done a legal act, having in mind a worthy objective, according to those who live in community-property States. I think we can all agree on that proposition. I am only asking that they be given that recognition now. I believe that it is deserved. To grant recognition to this extent certainly would not upset or dislocate to any appreciable extent the financial and fiscal affairs of the Government.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that, to my mind, there is much more reason for supporting and adopting this amendment than there was for supporting and adopting the community-property amendment offered yesterday. I shall try to show why that is so. This amendment does not disturb the question of community property in any other State; it has no effect on it. It goes directly to the very basis of the support of the community-property law as recognized by the Government, and that is the law of the State. On partnership recognition the amendment goes directly to the sanctity of the laws of the States in which statutes exist which authorize doing business under partnership arrangements.

Moreover, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, I should like to see whether he agrees with me on the point I am about to mention. This amendment, in my judgment, will not in the least affect any existing income source of the Government or any reasonably anticipated income source, because the Bureau of Internal Revenue has only begun to go into this field as a sort of windfall proposition resulting from two Supreme Court cases which have recently been decided. So that any income that comes from their present policy, as I understand and as I have been reliably informed, is neither anticipated income nor existing income; and this would be the time for the Congress to say it will recognize the laws of the various States with reference to the partnership situation without affecting either the anticipated income or existing income to the Treasury Department.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In other words, if the Congress acts now it will be able to prevent the major harm that will result from this policy, because many persons have not yet paid the tax. The tax has been made a charge against them, but it has not been paid and is at the present time in controversy.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. That is exactly the situation; and if we delay until next year there will be a history of windfall income for this year, and next year we may be faced with the proposition that we are cutting down anticipated income which was received this year.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator is quite correct about that, and I thank him very much.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Let me again say, Mr. President, that this particular amendment represents a fundamental principle which I can support; namely, it recognizes the valid laws of the States so far as these arrangements are made.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In other words, the Senator recognizes a matter of simple justice. The Internal Revenue Bureau has no moral right, and I say it has no legal right, to recognize the validity of the laws of one State pertaining to property and fail or refuse to recognize the laws of another State that so operates as to place the citizen in the same status in both States.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. If the Senator will yield further, I will suggest that what the Internal Revenue Bureau is doing today, based upon certain decisions of the Supreme Court which apparently gives that agency some authorization, is to deny certain individuals rights under the law because they happen to be blood relatives of someone, which rights are given to persons who do not happen to be blood relatives. The Senator has a right to form a partnership under almost any condition. He may manage the partnership, and if I happen to be a relative of his, a member of his family, generally speaking the Internal Revenue Bureau holds that it is a heinous crime for him to have such a relative in the partnership, and therefore will not recognize the validity of the situation for income-tax purposes, but it will if we are strangers.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In other words, Mr. President, I can give half of my business to someone who is not related to me, can pay gift tax on it, and the Treasury Department recognizes it as valid. But if I choose to give it to a member of my family it is questioned as being a tax fraud, and the revenue department collects all taxes from me as the head of the family.

I am now happy to yield to the able Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I simply desire to assure the Senator that while I did not vote for the community property amendment submitted yesterday, I am not lacking in sympathy with the objective and purpose of it. If the Senator will pardon me, I think that I have perhaps struggled with this question as long as has any other Member of the Senate. For a number of years I have tried to correct this inequality. At the time when we were making an effort to correct an inequality that the people of the non-community-property States believed they were suffering as compared with married taxpayers in the community-property States, we were in a period when increased revenues were urgently demanded, so that every time the subject came up we were reminded of the fact that we could not reduce the revenues and that any correction of this inequality would result in some loss of Treasury receipts. Therefore the Treasury favored the direct attack upon property; that is, they favored taxation of the property in the community-property States as if it were the property of the earner or the head of the family. They undertook to make that fight in 1941, when every day's delay in the passage of the tax bill meant a loss of about $3,000,000 to the Treasury. We were met on the floor with what was apparently an incipient filibuster. It was not fully developed, but it had all the earmarks of developing into a full-sized filibuster. After a little while we were simply compelled to recognize that revenues were being lost to the Treasury. There was an extreme uncertainty, namely, whether or not the amendment could be adopted by the Senate within any reasonable time, and we were also confronted with the question of whether or not the House conferees would agree to accept it. Even before that, but at that time particularly, I called for an amendment in line with the amendment which the Senator from Arkansas so eloquently and earnestly urged yesterday. I have believed for a number of years that the only way finally to correct this inequality or inequity which does exist between married taxpayers in community-property States and married taxpayers in non-community-property States was by such an amendment, or a similar amendment. There are some difficulties involved.

Let me remind the Senator that the question of family partnerships has developed out of the very condition which he discussed yesterday, to wit, in the non-community-property States the head of the family felt that he could make a gift to his wife, either of money or of other property, or a direct interest in his business, which would be valid under the State law, and that he would have the right to operate that business as a partnership. The disposition to do that was at least stimulated by, but was not wholly due to, the fact that in the community-property States there was an actual division of property.

After the passage of the Income Tax Act in 1913, after the Supreme Court held that the original income tax act was unconstitutional, Congress undertook to treat community property in community-property States as if all of it—that is, all of it that had been accumulated after the marriage of the husband and wife—were the property of the husband, on the theory that he had certain definite control, management, and so forth, over it. Some collections were made, but finally in a certain case the Supreme Court held that the property of one taxpayer cannot be taken to pay the tax of another taxpayer, and that in the community-property States there is an absolute ownership and property right in the wife, and that her property cannot be taken to pay the taxes of the husband.

No one could quarrel with that decision, in my opinion; it was and is a sound decision. When we get into the family partnership cases, although the distinguished Senator from Iowa has pointed out two or three decisions of the Supreme Court of recent origin, nevertheless those cases were commenced several years ago, as a matter of fact. It takes some time for a case to go through the lower courts or through the tax court and the lower courts, and then into the Supreme Court of the United States.

So the Treasury has been making an attack on the so-called family partnerships, so far as I know, in all of the States, perhaps including the community-property States, if they happened to involve property that the wife had inherited separately or that the husband had inherited prior to the marriage, before coverture. The Treasury has very vigorously pushed the cases against the so-called family partnerships. I think, and I have said so to the Treasury, and I have said so openly in the hearings in the Finance Committee, that they have gone entirely too far. They do not recognize the fact that a valid partnership may exist for perfectly good reasons, therefore being based upon a valid consideration even at common law, where the wife's real money contribution to the partnership derived originally as a gift from the husband. If the husband makes money and pays all the taxes due upon that money, and if after having paid his taxes he wishes to give the wife an interest in a partnership business or give her the money which she puts into that partnership business, there should not be laid down in those cases the narrow test which our courts, I regret to say, have recognized, to wit, whether the wife actually contributed anything by way of work or by way of attention or by way of management of the business. That ought not to have been the test.

Although the Treasury is right in some respects, it is wrong in other respects in these partnership cases. The Treasury is right to the extent that if it recognized all the so-called family partnerships, it is perfectly possible that the result could be to wreck or destroy the revenue, because any taxpayer could say, "I have created a family partnership, and I am the owner of only one-half or one-third or one-fourth of an interest in this business, because the wife and the kiddies have an interest in the business which I have given them." Some of the partnerships of course are not bona fide partnerships; but I believe that the Treasury has gone entirely too far in its insistence upon its right to tax all such partnerships. The Supreme Court has not held, as I understand, that any family partnership is taxable to the husband as the sole owner; it has not gone to the full extent of saying that the wife does not have a separate and severable interest in the partnership which she can assert; but the Court has said that each case depends upon its own facts, and the Court has very nearly precluded the possibility of the existence of a bona fide partnership where the wife's interest in the partnership property was derived from a gift from the husband.

As I have said, in my opinion, they have gone too far. I think the real remedy is not to undertake to say, however, that every partnership recognized by the law of the State must be recognized by the taxing authorities of the Federal Government. I think that probably would simply torpedo the revenues—to what extent, no one can tell, because taxpayers are very quick to take every advantage of any possible loophole.

Mr. McCLELLAN. To what extent could it go beyond the community-property law?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know that it could go beyond the community-property law; but I think the amendment which the Senator offered yesterday is a proper amendment to the bill which already is under consideration by the House Ways and Means Committee and on which several days of hearings already have been held. I think to handle the matter in that way is the proper manner of reaching the question, so that if husband and wife in any non-community-property State wish to treat their property as community property and wish to file separate returns, they may do so.

The question of the inheritance or estate tax is somewhat related to that, because it evidences the desire of the Treasury to tax the income from property held in the community-property States and the earner of the income, rather than to recognize the right of the wife under the community-property laws existing in such State. But it is not necessarily related to the Senator's amendment. In other words, the Senator's amendment might properly be directed to the new tax-revision bill, and I think it should be directed to it; and so far as I have the slightest influence in the matter, I am perfectly willing to identify myself with the Senator in connection with that bill, which presumably, at least, is to be reported to the House of Representatives early in 1948—in January, if possible—and then is to be brought over to this body as soon as it is passed by the House of Representatives. To that bill this will be a perfectly valid and proper amendment, although I think it may result in the loss of revenue. But at the same time I believe that in that general revision of our revenue laws we should make this correction, which undoubtedly does operate as a very great hardship on the States and especially on the taxpayers in all the non-community-property States, and, in addition, especially is it an aggravating and irritating circumstance in the States that adjoin or are adjacent to the community-property States.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I wish to thank the able Senator from Georgia for his remarks. I know of no Member of this body or of the House of Representatives who can speak with greater authority upon tax problems, and I am happy to have this assurance from him. I know that the people of the United States, and particularly the citizens of the non-community-property States, will rejoice in the statement the able Senator from Georgia has made and the assurance he has given that he, too, will devote his efforts and his great influence toward securing the passage of legislation which will correct this evil.

Mr. President, I did not mean to consume nearly so much time, and I shall conclude by saying again to the people of the Nation that their Congress has, in my judgment, by the vote cast yesterday and by the statements made on the floor of the Senate by responsible, able, conscientious Senators and legislators, clearly shown that they now can hope that in the not-far-distant future the Congress will resolve this problem and will rectify the gross injustice that has so long been imposed upon them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN].

Mr. McCLELLAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN].

Mr. McCLELLAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, the question of the taxability of the incomes of family partnerships is an exceedingly complex one. It is perfectly apparent that when we are dealing with the subject of gifts, and especially family gifts, there have to be some standards for determining whether they are bona fide. If we were to adopt the laws of the States and say that we would follow the complexion which State law puts upon family partnerships, of course the States would at once go into an orgy of partnership law which would, in the end, deprive the Federal Government of all revenue from all partnerships having a family aspect.

I do not know of any subject that has greater temptation for evasion than family partnerships, and I do not know of any subject where there has been more arbitrary treatment of the citizen. Since the Tower and Lusthouse decisions have come down, it seems to me that the Treasury, in practice—I am speaking of the practice as distinguished from its rules, regulations, and instructions—has been especially harsh to taxpayers who find themselves involved in family-partnership income-tax questions.

But here is the central problem: If there could be written into the law the complete definition of a valid family partnership, one that would not allow administrative discretion, of course that would be a perfect thing to do, and a highly desirable thing to do. But the difficulty is, when the field of fraud is touched, all experience shows the impossibility of employing rigid definitions and limitations. Human ingenuity is such that it climbs over such walls. So, no matter what may be done here, if the Senate were prepared to do anything today, legislation would be passed that would still allow a large area of administration. When that area of administration exists, there is bound to be a certain amount of arbitrary action. We cannot legislate sense into thickheads, or into arbitrary heads, or into overzealous heads. We can delimit the field in which men with heads of that kind may work, but this subject must be approached with utmost care.

It is perfectly evident that if all the head of a family had to do, in order to halve his income, would be to create a family partnership, and if there were no real test of what constitutes a family partnership, we should at once suffer a great loss of revenue.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is exactly what takes place in community-property States by law, is it not?

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is exactly what we settled yesterday. There is no point in rehashing that debate.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I merely want to call attention to the flagrant injustice which now exists, and to what happens in 10 States.

Mr. MILLIKIN. So that, if we should adopt a profligate amendment today, we would be approving something of which we disapproved yesterday.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. May I suggest to the Senator that the amendment in no way suggests a new conception of the method of doing business. The fault in the present administrative activities comes from a reversal of attitude of the Bureau, based on the Tower and Lusthouse decisions. I submit the department has gone much further than the Tower and Lusthouse decisions. The amendment only reiterates that a properly established partnership, legal where created, is just as legal today as it has been for the last 200 years in this country. So that the amendment sets up no new machinery, no new method of doing business. It merely recognizes something that has not only existed, but which, until substantially the past 12 months, has been recognized continuously by the Internal Revenue Bureau as a proper business device.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest that the distinguished Senator has argued the futility of the amendment. If it does nothing to change the law, then there is no point in the amendment.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I say that it does something to change the arbitrary approach now being taken by the Internal Revenue Bureau. I think the law is sound, and I think the law should be that such partnerships are recognizable; and they have been, in the past. For some peculiar reason, at the present time, this new retroactive effort, based upon a Supreme Court decision or two, is being widely put forth to the detriment of many hundreds, if not thousands, of people throughout the country, who have been led to rely upon their business organizations in the past, because they have been passed and approved, sometimes by the closure of the case by the Internal Revenue Bureau itself. They now find themselves confronted with a change of policy, in which the Internal Revenue Bureau says, "We will go back, now, 5 years, and we will charge the head of the family with the individual income tax on the income of the business for as much as 5 years past, because we have changed our attitude and our policies, and we now have what we believe to be authority under the Supreme Court cases to do so." It is posing very seriously the question of bankruptcy for hundreds of people who have heretofore been perfectly adequate in their provision.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator knows that I have especially concerned myself with that problem and with the specific cases which are in his mind. I am inclined to believe that the Bureau has been arbitrary in interpreting the decisions of the Supreme Court. I am inclined to believe that there has been some injustice. What I am trying to say is that, when an effort is made to define by law what is a valid and what is an invalid gift, and when we commence to shorten up the test of what is a valid or an invalid gift, presently all gifts can be made valid and taxation avoided. What I am asking for is that we have the opportunity to go into this question and see if we can draft a sound law which will draw a line between legitimate gifts and legitimate family partnerships, and those that are not legitimate.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I may say that the Senator and his committee were not only extremely courteous but they apparently were interested in the specific problem, when they granted me the privilege of appearing before them and presenting it, some weeks ago. I realize that there may be certain practical reasons in the mind of the committee, leading them to determine that this is not the exact time or place to take the proposed action. Therefore, while I intend to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, and I have a similar amendment submitted by myself, I am perfectly willing at least to give more weight to the judgment of the Senator from Colorado, that perhaps this particular time may not be the proper time. So, as I have said, I am going to support the amendment but I again say the Senator from Colorado may be right. Nevertheless, I submit to the Senator from Colorado, both as a Senator and as chairman of the Finance Committee, that in connection with this matter, at least in certain phases of it, today there is a great abuse. The taxpayer is being mistreated in many instances. I do not mean to say that the Internal Revenue Bureau is deliberately trying to mistreat taxpayers; I do not mean that; but in the zeal of the Internal Revenue Bureau to do their work well by collecting every last bit of revenue available, I think they have overstepped the bounds of good judgment and good administrative practice. I should like to ask the Senator if I am not correct in believing that not only the Senator but other members of the Finance Committee consider this a serious problem, and one that must have and that should have immediate corrective attention, if possible.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I answer the question unequivocally in the affirmative. I may say that for my own part I have commenced to make studies of this situation. I am commencing to receive reports about it. I have memos and briefs on the subject, all of which impress upon my mind that we are not dealing with a simple subject, that we are obliged to exercise caution, and that we must study and sift a very wide field of tax law. The subject ramifies into trusts. It ramifies into the law of estates. It ramifies into the general law of gifts. It covers, I should say, perhaps the most complex and difficult field in the law of taxation.

I want to answer the Senator's question again. This subject is closely related to the community property subject. It will go along with that subject in the prompt consideration which it will receive from the House Ways and Means Committee, and I can give the same assurance as to the Senate Finance Committee. I am not at all happy as to what is going on in these cases, but what I am doing is groping for a really effective remedy, which will separate the just from the unjust, which will protect the honest family partnership, and which will prevent an evasion in the field that will seriously impair Federal revenues if we allow that sort of thing to happen.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield to me?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I agree with what I understand to be the idea the Senator is advancing. I agree that matters of far-reaching importance should have the benefit of substantial and complete study, if possible. I say to the Senator, however, that at this time in connection with legitimate gifts between members of the family there are being enforced regulations which in my judgment are doing violent injustice to many individuals. I will say further to the Senator that under no circumstances would I support a provision which would open the door to the evasion of taxes on the part of individuals. Any matter of tax adjustment on property must be tax adjustment within the full legitimacy of the law and the rights the law gives to the taxpayer and to the citizen, and under no circumstance do I want to set up a subterfuge nor support the setting up of a subterfuge. I feel, however, that at this very moment injustices are being done and in many instances will continue to be done under the present policies unless some corrective legislation is carefully considered and passed to deal with such injustices.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Iowa. All Senators will recognize that we are dealing fundamentally with what is a gift. It is hornbook that one cannot make a gift and keep any strings on it. The investigation by the Department and by the Bureau into these taxes concerns itself with the questions: "Was this colorable? Is this a sham? Did this donor make a phony gift?" The proof of that comes from a vast number of circumstances that bear on "What strings did he keep?" Now, if we should pass a law which provides that we may not look into that question, then obviously the family income will be split and our revenues will be dealt a most serious blow.

All I am asking is that we be given sufficient time in connection with the next general revenue bill to sift the subject thoroughly, so that we can come up with the best measure possible, one which will allow the legitimate partnerships, past and future, to continue, and which will make it possible to stop tax evasion where there is a sham and a pretense and a corrupt intent to defeat the taxes levied by the Congress. That is all that is in my mind.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I do not like to prolong the debate, but I should like to observe that according to the reports I have received the Internal Revenue Bureau today is going far beyond the question of sham and fraud in the transfer of property between members of the family. If such transfer represents sham and fraud, then it should have no defense. But where there is incontrovertible proof that the donor has divested himself completely of all authority and dominion over the gift, and where title has completely and irrevocably vested itself, if you please, in the donation, the Bureau still examines into such a gift and takes the position that there is, for tax purposes, no transfer of title, regardless of how complete the transfer has been and how actual it has been. I think that in those fields the Bureau has overstepped the reasonable contemplation of the law.

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is another example, I will say to the Senator, of the arbitrary enforcement of law. I should like very much to participate in evolving an amendment to our code which will draw the line, which will minimize administrative discretion. That is our problem. We cannot approach it hastily. We cannot draw up legislation dealing with it on the Senate floor. Such legislation requires considerable study, a considerable examination into ramified subjects, and I am asking that we be given the opportunity to approach the job from that basis.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I merely suggest to the distinguished Senator from Colorado that if the amendment should go into the bill it seems to me that there would be little chance that the bill would ever be approved, because the President could very well say, "I do not know what this will do to the revenue."

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I am very glad to have that contribution from the Senator from Georgia. The Senator is in a much better position than I am to make that observation and I am glad he has made it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] who is necessarily absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent because of illness in his family and is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH]. If present and voting the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] is detained on official business.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is absent on official business.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are detained on public business.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] is detained on official business at one of the Government departments.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are unavoidably detained.

On this vote the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY].

If present and voting, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 54, as follows:

So Mr. McCLELLAN's amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I sent to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. Increase in personal exemption.

(a) Subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 25 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"(A) In the case of a single person or a married person not living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $750.

"(B) In the case of the head of a family or a married person living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $1,500. A husband and wife living together shall receive but one personal exemption. The amount of such exemption shall be $1,500. If such husband and wife make separate returns, the personal exemption may be taken by either or divided between them."

(b) Sections 51 (a), 58 (a) (2), and 142 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended, are amended by striking out "$500" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$750."

(c) The amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946.

Amend the tables contained in sections 400 and 1622 (c) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code to conform to the above amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN].

Mr. McCLELLAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I make the point of order that this amendment cannot be considered, because it interferes with the committee amendments which have already been adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's point, as the Chair understands it, is that the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas is inconsistent with amendments already adopted by the Senate. Is that the Senator's viewpoint?

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is the substance of it. We have agreed on the rates and on the withdrawal tables. This amendment would go directly to rates and would change withdrawal tables; it is inconsistent and is contrary to what the Senate has already done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair's opinion is that consistency is not a parliamentary question. There is much to be said for the Senator's viewpoint that there is a collision between the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas and the action already taken by the Senate, as a result of which, if the Senator were attempting to present his amendments to that section of the bill dealing with rates of exemption, it obviously would not be in order. The Chair is unable to rule an amendment, which is a separate section being attached to the bill, is out of order when the only ground upon which he can decide it to be out of order would be its inconsistency, which is not, in the Chair's opinion, a parliamentary prerogative.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I have already made reference to the amendment which I shall now discuss in my remarks on other amendments and also at the time I gave notice that I would offer the amendment when the bill reached the floor. It simply proposes to raise personal exemptions from the present level of $500 for single persons to $750, and from $1,000 for the heads of families to $1,500.

Mr. President, I have said over and over again that I think that is the point where tax relief ought to begin, namely, with people in the low-income brackets, the low-wage earners, the people who are having a struggle to provide the actual necessities of life. I believe this is the way to do it. A reduction of taxes at the bottom level by an increase in personal exemptions affects everyone all the way across the board. The man making $100,000 a year receives some relief and some benefit, and the man in between gets his proportionate relief according to his earnings and his ability to pay. Many a man is struggling today to live on a comparatively decent standard. We take $96 in taxes now from a married man with $1,500 income. If he earns only $1,500 that $96 will go a long way toward providing some of the necessities we are now compelling him by taxation to do without. It is obvious that we should start reducing taxes by helping those at the bottom of the lalder who have the hardest struggle. We should do that rather than take the committee bill which helps the middle and upper bracket income groups primarily and the most.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator have an estimate of what it would cost the Treasury if his proposal should be adopted?

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is estimated at $3,000,000,000 annually and it will remove from the tax rolls between 8,000,000 and 9,000,000 taxpayers who come between the $1,000 and $1,500 brackets.

Mr. ELLENDER. How much would it add to the pending measure.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It would simply add that much. Of course the measure will go to conference.

Mr. ELLENDER. So that instead of approximately $3,000,000,000 it would be approximately $6,000,000,000?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Unless in conference the other tax reductions now made in the bill were cut down.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to make the comment that I think this is a very worthy amendment. It is a well known fact, is it not, that at the present time our scarcities are in goods which it takes a lot of money to buy? The big fellow can buy them. They are automobiles, and things of that kind. Surpluses are showing up in textiles and products which the ordinary little people want to buy. If we want to head off a depression the thing to do is to put money into the pockets of the little fellows so that they can buy the things that are in surplus, and not give money to the big boys who want to buy something that is in short supply.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will say to the Senator that the effect of this amendment would be to place approximately $100 more purchasing power in the hands of a husband and wife whose income is $1,500 a year, and the amount is in proportion for higher incomes.

I do not wish to argue the question further. There is no need for argument. Each Senator is capable of determining for himself the equities of the amendment, and whether it is the proper way to begin reducing income taxes. I believe it is and I shall vote accordingly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent because of illness in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay"; and the Senator from Rhode Island, if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business. He is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART]. If present and voting, the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay"; and the Senator from Tennessee, if present, would vote "yea."

So Mr. McCLELLAN's amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I send forward an amendment which I desire to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment, which the clerk will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. —. Section 23 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to deductions from gross income) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows:

"(bb) Capital expenditures for trade or business: At the election of a taxpayer, all expenditures (subject to limitations prescribed below) paid or incurred during the taxable year for the acquisition, construction, or improvement of any real or personal property to be used in a trade or business. Total deductions under this subsection in any 1 year shall not exceed $125,000 or 50 percent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefits of this subsection, whichever is the lesser. If in any year expenditures deductible under this subsection are less than the total of such expenditures, the balance may be added to the expenditures of the immediately succeeding year and be considered for the purposes of this subsection as having been made in such immediately succeeding year. Such expenditures shall be allowable as deductions only under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary."

SEC. —. Section 24 (a) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to items not deductible from gross income) is hereby amended to read as follows: "Any amount paid out for new buildings or for permanent improvements or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate, except as provided in section 23 (bb);".

SEC. —. Section 113 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to adjusted basis for property) is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (H), and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and by adding after subparagraph (H) a new subparagraph to read as follows:

"(I) for expenditures deducted under the provisions of section 23 (bb)."

SEC.— The amendments made by sections —, —, and — of this act shall be applicable only with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I shall not take up the time of the Senate to any great extent to explain the amendment. For weeks past it has been before the Senate, because several weeks ago I presented the matter to the Senate, and also presented it to the committee at the time the committee was considering the pending bill.

The amendment is intended to afford the small businessman an opportunity to build his own business by his own efforts. In other words, under the amendment he could plow back into his business 50 percent of his net income and have credit for that, or he could plow back into his business $125,000, whichever might be the lesser sum.

The object is to encourage small business in America. Today the large concerns, the powerful companies, have no particular trouble in getting money with which to build their industries, or improve them. They are in touch with the banks or with the underwriting concerns, or other financial lending institutions. But the poor man, the one who is going along on a shoestring, who is living on his earnings, and improving his business by his income, has no such access. If he goes into the market to borrow money he jeopardizes his standing, because he may find himself taken over by his larger competitors.

All the amendment does is to provide an opportunity for the small businessman or small business institution in the United States to use 50 percent of the net income in improving the business, so that the output may be greater. If there ever was a time when our country required a greater output and greater production, it is now. How can we encourage greater production unless we encourage the individual or the small business to produce more. And by giving the small businessman opportunity to increase his capacity, to improve his plant, or to improve his business, we encourage production.

Mr. President, one might talk for hours on this subject, but what I have said states the whole case in a nutshell, and I am going to ask the Senate at this time to give me a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], on which he requests the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent because of illness in his family and is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH]. If present and voting the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay".

So Mr. MCCARRAN'S amendment was rejected.

EQUITABLE ADJUSTMENT OF TAX BURDEN BETWEEN COMMUNITY-PROPERTY AND OTHER STATES

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate voted upon the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], which purported to equalize the income-tax burden between those who dwell in non-community-property and community-property States.

The chairman of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], pointed out that this amendment was offered to a bill which was, in effect, not a revenue measure but a tax-reduction measure, and that the adoption of the amendment would upset the entire schedules of reductions set forth in the committee bill. This might well delay the matter of tax reduction beyond the time when it could be made effective in the present calendar year.

Many of us in the non-community-property States are vitally interested in the adoption of legislation which will equalize the present inequalities due to the difference in property laws in the various States. We voted against the amendment, however, because we thought that our choice was a choice between tax reduction to become effective July 1, and delay, by the adoption of a Senate amendment which might be defeated in the House and so might prevent any tax reduction whatsoever this year.

The chairman of the Finance Committee pointed out that his committee was already studying the problem. He indicated that he hoped amendments might be made to the revenue laws which would eliminate the inequities and that such legislation might be ready for the present session, or, at the latest, for the next session.

Therefore, for myself and on behalf of the senior Senator from Massachussetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the junior Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], and the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], I am offering a resolution which would require the Finance Committee to report to the Senate on this matter not later than March 1 next year, and would further require the committee to submit a specific provision to be included in the next revenue measure—by amendment if necessary—which would, in the opinion of the committee, be a fair solution to this existing inequity.

This resolution is not intended to indicate any lack of confidence in the chairman's statement. Rather it is intended to support his good purpose and intention and to assist him and the committee in dealing effectively with this problem by indicating that it is the will of the majority of the Senate that action abolishing these inequities be forthcoming at the earliest possible time.

It is apparent that an attempt to adjust this inequity in a bill designed solely to reduce taxes could only add confusion and delay. The whole subject is one that properly should be treated in a revenue act as such. It is the purpose of the resolution to express the sentiment of the Senate that legislation adjusting the inequities between non-community- and community-property States be included in the next revenue measure.

I submit the resolution and ask for its appropriate reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 119) submitted by Mr. BALDWIN (for himself, Mr. SALTONSTALL, Mr. IVES, and Mr. FLANDERS) was received and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Finance, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study for the purpose of (1) ascertaining the extent to which the property laws of community-property States cause an inequitable distribution of the burdens of the Federal income tax among the citizens of the various States, and (2) devising methods of removing the inequities resulting from the effects of such laws upon the administration of the Federal income tax laws. The committee shall report to the Senate, not later than March 1, 1948, the results of such study, together with its recommendations as to means of correcting such inequities, including the form of amendments to the next appropriate revenue bill to accomplish such purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate the attitude of the Senator from Connecticut and his colleagues, with which I am in sympathy. I voted against the amendment offered yesterday because I did not believe that it was appropriate on this bill to add $800,000,000 or more to the amount of reduction carried in the bill. I earnestly hope that at an early date we may be able to correct the injustice to which our attention has been called. But the Senate has no original jurisdiction of the subject. It can only deal with it after the House of Representatives which, under the Constitution, must pass revenue bills first, has passed such a bill and it has come to us.

I note that the resolution would direct the Committee on Finance to report not later than March 1 of next year. Unless the House has in the meantime sent a bill to the Senate to which we could attach an amendment of that sort, neither the Senate nor its Finance Committee would have any jurisdiction to deal with the matter originally. I am sure the Senator is familiar with that provision, but it may not have occurred to him that if he is requiring the Finance Committee to report to the Senate by March 1 next, and its report should contemplate a bill of some kind, the Senate would not have any jurisdiction to consider it unless and until the House had acted.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I am glad the senior Senator from Kentucky has brought this matter to my attention, so that I may discuss it now very briefly. That point was raised and considered when we prepared the resolution. However, in the face of the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Finance stated not once but several times on the floor that the committee was considering the matter, and that it was prepared to consider it in connection with the next revenue bill, and having in mind the fact that it is highly probable that before next March 1 rolls around there will be an appropriate revenue measure to which to attach the amendment, it seemed to me appropriate for the Senate to consider the resolution and at the proper time go on record as to its position with respect to this very important matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that, and yet it might place the Senate in the rather incongruous position of being asked to express its attitude respecting the matter before it could do so in a constitutional way, by adding an amendment to a House bill if there was no provision in the House bill dealing with the subject. We would, of course, have ample opportunity to do so if there was nothing in the bill as it came to us on that subject, but if our committee were required to report to the Senate on it before a House bill had come over it could only be a gesture or an expression of opinion on the part of the Senate and would have no legal force.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. It is my understanding that it is not contemplated by the resolution that if a House bill is not before the Senate for consideration we should attempt to prepare a bill contrary to the Constitution. In that event, I assume the Senator will want us to make recommendations on the subject, and be prepared when a bill shall come over to the Senate.

Mr. BALDWIN. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut. I wish I could share his optimism that the Senate, during the life of the Eightieth Congress, is likely to have another opportunity to vote on removing this injustice to the non-community-property States. The issue has been delayed and bandied back and forth in the Senate for the past 14 years to my certain knowledge. There never does seem to be any appropriate time for the Senate to take a square open and shut vote on eliminating this injustice. We have had amendments seeking to correct this injustice in bills considered by us before this time. But there has never been the appropriate time. For 14 years to my knowledge we have been trying to get a chance to vote on the proposition. Yesterday was the first time we have been able to even get the matter before the Senate on a roll call vote. I did not desire to wait fourteen more years for another chance to register my opinion and I therefore seized the opportunity presented yesterday and did what I could by my vote to eliminate this injustice. I do not delude myself with the idea we will have another opportunity by March 15 next.

If this matter follows the course which has been pursued for years—and very diligent efforts have been made to force it to a vote—no action will be taken. The Finance Committee reported out a measure some years ago which contained a provision in slightly different form from the amendment offered to the pending bill, and brought it on the floor of the Senate, but encountered a filibuster which threatened to defeat the entire tax bill and prevent the collection of excise taxes. They were forced to drop the community-property provision from the bill. I apprehend that if we have a tax bill next spring revising the excise taxes and changing the income taxes we will be confronted with the same old argument that the hour is not yet ripe to correct an injustice of 26 years standing and it will again be shelved.

I do not think we can afford to reduce taxes drastically at this time but if any reduction is to be had, equalization with the community-property States should come first.

Mr. LUCAS obtained the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. I should like to make a few remarks dealing with the community-property-State laws. I wish to say that it seems to me the Senate is not the place where the community-property question should be considered. I am not a lawyer, and I may be wrong in my conclusion, but if my understanding is correct, the States can enact genuine legislation if they want to, and give their women the same benefits accorded women in the community-property States. They can enact legislation which would permit women to participate in the benefits of community property so far as taxation is concerned. So I think the question should more properly be referred to the States themselves for consideration.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I simply wish to say that I joined with the Senator from Connecticut and other Senators in submitting the resolution which has just been presented to the Senate, for the reason that Massachusetts and the citizens of that State are also intensely interested in the subject of community property. I voted against the amendment which was under consideration yesterday because I thought this was not the proper time to consider the matter, but I join with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] in hoping that next year we can consider this subject on its merits.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME-TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which is at the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That this act may be cited as the "Individual Income Tax Reduction Act of 1947."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois wish the amendment to be read?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The amendment proposed by Mr. LUCAS is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That this act may be cited as the 'Individual Income Tax Reduction Act of 1947.'

"SEC. 2. Increase in personal exemptions.

"Section 25 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to credits of individual against net income) is hereby amended by striking out '$500,' wherever appearing therein, and by inserting in lieu thereof '$600,' and by striking '$1,000' and by inserting in lieu thereof '$1,200.'

"SEC. 3. Income of husband and wife.

"So much of section 12 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the computation of surtax) as precedes the table therein is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(b) Computation of surtax.—

"'(1) Separate return: Except in the case of a joint return by husband and wife, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the surtax net income of every individual a surtax determined by computing a tentative surtax under the table set forth in paragraph (3) of this subsection, and by reducing such tentative surtax by 5 percent thereof.

"'(2) Joint return: In the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the aggregate surtax net income of the husband and wife a surtax determined—

"'(A) by computing a tentative surtax under the table set forth in paragraph (3) of this subsection upon an amount equal to one-half of such aggregate surtax net income;

"'(B) by multiplying the tentative surtax ascertained under subparagraph (A) by two; and

"'(C) by reducing the amount ascertained under subparagraph (B) by 5 percent thereof.

"'(3) Surtax table: The table referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2) is as follows:'.

"SEC. 4. Standard deduction.

"Section 23 (aa) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the optional standard deduction for individuals) is amended to read as follows:

"'(1) Allowance: In the case of an individual, at his election a standard deduction as follows:

"'(A) Separate return with adjusted gross income $5,000 or more: Except in the case of a joint return by husband and wife, if the adjusted gross income is $5,000 or more, the standard deduction shall be $500.

"'(B) Joint return with adjusted gross income $5,000 or more: In the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, if the aggregate adjusted gross income of the husband and wife is $5,000 or more, the standard deduction shall be $1,000 or an amount equal to 10 percent of such aggregate adjusted gross income, whichever is the lesser.

"'(C) Adjusted gross income less than $5,000: If the adjusted gross income is less than $5,000, the standard deduction shall be an amount equal to 10 percent of the adjusted gross income upon the basis of which the tax applicable to the adjusted gross income of the taxpayer is determined under the tax table provided in section 400.'

"SEC. 5. Reduction in surtax on individuals.

"Section 12 (b) of Internal Revenue Code (relating to rates of surtax) is amended by striking everything after the colon and inserting in lieu thereafter the following:

"'If the surtax net income is:	The tentative surtax shall be:
Not over $2,000	15 percent of the surtax net income.
Over $2,000 but not over $4,000.	$300, plus 17 percent of excess over $2,000.
Over $4,000 but not over $6,000.	$640, plus 21 percent of excess over $4,000.
Over $6,000 but not over $8,000.	$1,060, plus 25 percent of excess over $6,000.
Over $8,000 but not over $10,000.	$1,560, plus 29 percent of excess over $8,000.
Over $10,000 but not over $12,000.	$2,140, plus 33 percent of excess over $10,000.
Over $12,000 but not over $14,000.	$2,800, plus 38 percent of excess over $12,000.
Over $14,000 but not over $16,000.	$3,560, plus 42 percent of excess over $14,000.
Over $16,000 but not over $18,000.	$4,400, plus 45 percent of excess over $16,000.
Over $18,000 but not over $20,000.	$5,300, plus 48 percent of excess over $18,000.
Over $20,000 but not over $22,000.	$6,260, plus 51 percent of excess over $20,000.
Over $22,000 but not over $26,000.	$7,280, plus 54 percent of excess over $22,000.
Over $26,000 but not over $32,000.	$9,440, plus 57 percent of excess over $26,000.
Over $32,000 but not over $38,000.	$12,860, plus 60 percent of excess over $32,000.
Over $38,000 but not over $44,000.	$16,040, plus 64 percent of excess over $38,000.
Over $44,000 but not over $50,000.	$20,300, plus 67 percent of excess over $44,000.

Over $60,000 but not over $70,000.	$31,320, plus 73 percent of excess over $60,000.
Over $70,000 but not over $80,000.	$38,620, plus 76 percent of excess over $70,000.
Over $80,000 but not over $90,000.	$46,220, plus 79 percent of excess over $80,000.
Over $90,000 but not over $100,000.	$54,120, plus 82 percent of excess over $90,000.
Over $100,000 but not over $150,000.	$62,320, plus 84 percent of excess over $100,000.
Over $150,000 but not over $200,000.	$104,320, plus 85 percent of excess over $150,000.
Over $200,000	$146,820, plus 86 percent of excess over $200,000.'

"SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make such changes in the tables in section 400 (optional tax table) and section 1622 (withholding tables) as may be necessary to reflect the reduction in taxes provided for in the preceding provisions of this act.

"SEC. 7. The amendments to the Internal Revenue Code made by this act shall become effective with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1947."

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like at this time to address a question to the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee. Some time ago, as the Senator will recall, I had printed a proposed amendment to the pending bill which would have operated to make more flexible the provisions of the revenue bill with reference to personal holding companies, so as to avert some very great hardships which have been visited upon small personal holding companies by reason of the owners not having the information that they constituted a personal holding company under the provisions of the law. I think I understand aright the attitude of the chairman; but may I at this time inquire what his attitude will be toward the inclusion of such a provision in any general revision of the revenue laws which may be proposed at the next session?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Florida appeared before the Senate Finance Committee, as did one of his constituents, and both of them made a very interesting presentation of the subject. Considerable interest was aroused by those presentations. I shall be very glad to take it upon myself to bring the subject to the attention of the House Ways and Means Committee and urge that committee to give it a thorough sifting. We shall do the same thing on the Senate side. I do not like to promise action of any kind on the part of either of the committees, but there was considerable interest in what the Senator had to say. Let me repeat I shall take it upon myself to bring the question to the attention of the House Committee on Ways and Means, and will also bring it to the attention of the Senate Committee on Finance.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill and the amendments thereto which have been adopted. I wish to say at the outset that this amendment is not an ill-considered tax measure. According to the expert testimony the loss to the Treasury under my amendment in the nature of a substitute would be somewhat less than under House bill 1.

Before speaking briefly on the three features involved in the substitute, I invite the attention of the Senate to H. R. 1 as it now stands amended. I have read the bill with some care—difficult as that task is—and I have serious doubts whether there are very many Senators who thoroughly understand the bill which we have been considering for some time.

About 2 years ago we attempted to simplify the income tax laws, and I think the Congress of the United States did a very good job in its simplification efforts. Now, under the guise of a 10–20–30 bill—which sounds like one of Kresge's stores—we have, not a further simplification, but a bill of confusion so far as the taxpayer is concerned. Why do I say that, Mr. President? I respectfully invite attention to page 5 of the bill. This is what we find:

(1) In the case of taxable years beginning after December 31, 1947, the combined normal tax and surtax under section 11 and subsection (b) of this section shall be the aggregate of the tentative normal tax and tentative surtax, reduced as follows:

If the aggregate is:	The reduction shall be:
Not over $200	33⅓ percent of the aggregate.
Over $200 but not over $279.17.	$67.
Over $279.17 but not over $50,000.	24 percent of the aggregate.
Over $50,000 but not over $250,000.	$12,000, plus 19¼ percent of excess over $50,000.
Over $250,000	$50,500, plus 15 percent of excess over $250,000.

In no event shall the combined normal tax and surtax exceed 76½ percent of the net income of the taxpayer for the taxable year.

Instead of having a reduction of 30 percent, 20 percent, or 10 percent, about which we have been talking, we have figures which will require the services of a lawyer if the taxpayer is to file a correct income-tax schedule next year.

In search of enlightenment, I turned next to the report itself, and I find further complications which leave me somewhat puzzled. Instead of a 20-percent reduction across-the-board, we find that taxpayers have been classified into five sets of brackets, with different rates of tax for 1947 and 1948. The five sets of brackets appear to have been determined on with mathematical accuracy. The only bracket which breaks at an even figure is the bracket from zero to $1,000. The next bracket is a bracket from $1,000 to $1,395.83. This, mind you, is the figure for 1948 only. For 1947, the bracket breaks not at $1,395.83, but at $1,327.60. Somewhere in the shuffle, there is a difference of $68.23, which is floating free. This bracket is the notch bracket. If a taxpayer is in this notch area, then he enjoys a flat reduction of $67 in tax.

The next bracket ends at $79,728.40. The one after that ends at $302,395.60. I must say that I stand in awe of drafters of legislation who can come within 60 cents of accuracy on an income of more than $300,000. Moreover, the person who is lucky enough to enjoy an income of $300,000 will find that under the committee bill he enjoys a 20 percent reduction for the calendar year 1948 on the first $79,728.40 of his income, a 15 percent reduction on the next $223,000 of income, and a reduction of somewhere between 10.52 percent and 10.53 percent on the remainder of his income. I think it is pretty clear that we have come a long way from a 20-percent reduction across-the-board, and I think that in justice to the Senate, before the bill becomes law we ought to have an explanation of what sort of gyrations the drafters of the bill went through to give us this complicated measure.

I use this argument because 2 years ago we spent an unusual amount of time in attempting to simplify the income tax laws so that the taxpayer would have a better grasp of them and an easier time in filling out income tax schedules.

I seriously contend that under H. R. 1 as amended the taxpayer will once again find himself in chaos and confusion as the result of the variety of the percentages he will have to consider, and that before he can file a proper income tax return, under this bill, he will have to consult a lawyer or an accountant or some other person who understands tax legislation.

It seems to me that if we are to give the taxpayer a reduction we might also be good enough to give it to him without tears. I am, of course, aware that the great bulk of taxpayers are able to file a very simplified return and that in many cases the collector of internal revenue will compute the tax for the taxpayer, if his income is under $5,000. But the fact remains that every taxpayer has the option of computing his own tax and not leaving it to the collector to figure out, and it is perfectly natural that if the taxpayer can find a way of reducing his tax by computing it himself under Form 1040, he will try to do so, and I think a vast proportion of taxpayers figure their taxes under the simplified table and under the more complicated form to find out which way will give him cheapest results. The Revenue Act of 1945 gave each taxpayer a reduction of 5 percent. This made for a fairly simple income tax return form. Under the new bill, we will be going back to the situation in which the taxpayer will be irritated not only at having to pay the tax, but at the form outlined by the Treasury Department and the Government.

I am also very much impressed with the fact that all of the elaborate scheme of the Senate version of H. R. 1 could have been accomplished in a much simpler way that would have removed all of the confusion inherent in the bill. That way would be to reduce the percentages in the surtax net income brackets by the appropriate amount with perhaps the splitting up of the brackets into smaller sizes if deemed advisable.

I pause now to ask whether it would not have been possible to accomplish exactly the same results by the method I have suggested.

Our individual income tax structure has from the beginning been built on the principle of ability to pay. I have searched in vain in the majority report for a single reference to this doctrine. The foundation for the bill rests on the need to stimulate managerial incentive and to attract capital into risk enterprises.

That was the theory of H. R. 1 which came from the House to the Senate. Tax relief was made retroactive to January 1, 1947. Every expert who appeared before our committee and every other person knows that there is no incentive from the standpoint of risk capital in a retroactive tax measure. Yet H. R. 1, costing the Treasury $4,900,000,000 as it was reported by the House and came to the Senate, was heralded to the country as being a bill that would accomplish that very thing. The bill which is now before the Senate, which becomes effective as of July 1, will not, in my opinion, have the desired result, so far as incentive is concerned, in causing industry to risk its capital, as claimed by the proponents of the bill.

My bill, Mr. President, seeks to revise the tax structure as of January 1, 1948, and during the next six months it will give everyone in the country an opportunity thoroughly to arrange his business affairs in line with what he desires to risk, and give an opportunity to consider and study carefully the tax law which would take effect on January 1, 1948.

Mr. President, the emphasis is on the crushing load of taxation on those in the upper-income brackets. I submit that this load is just as crushing and considerably more devastating at the lower levels. The simple expedient of raising exemptions is the method we ought to use in distributing any tax reduction we are now able to give the American people.

It is a strange thing that in the beginning the House of Representatives adopted a tax measure that was based on the theory of a 20-percent cut across the board. Everyone admits that this is only a temporary tax expedient and that sooner or later we must write an over-all tax bill to take care of the many inequities which have been disclosed to exist in our tax structure. But, Mr. President, instead of reducing taxes by reversing the method pursued when it became necessary to increase the revenue in order to carry on the war, they adopted the method of a 20-percent cut across the board. When I say they failed to reverse the method followed during the war I mean simply this: We all know that in 1939 the exemption for married people was $2,500, for single persons, $1,000 with an additional $400 for each dependent. At that particular time there were less than 5,000,000 people on the income tax rolls, and in order to produce revenue with which to fight a global war we broadened the base and placed millions of people on the tax rolls who had never in the past paid a dime in tax for Federal purposes. We increased the number on the tax rolls until today between 47,000,000 and 48,000,000 people file income tax returns every year.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THYE in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The bill as passed by the House and the amendment adopted by the Senate do not contract the tax base. The base is left as it was throughout the war, is it not?

Mr. LUCAS. Precisely so. It is not contracted at all. That is one of the things I am inveighing against in this argument and in the bill which I am introducing as a substitute for the pending measure. No one can convince me that we have to keep 47,000,000 persons on the tax rolls in order to make good citizens of them. John W. Hanes, former Under Secretary of the Treasury, and Roswell Magill, former Under Secretary of the Treasury, took the cold, blunt position that it was necessary, in order that the people might realize they had a stake in their Government, to keep them on the tax rolls. I dispute and challenge that theory. I understand that we have to have a broader base in order to collect the taxes necessary to take care of the expenditures of Government at this particular time, but I seriously challenge the argument that it is necessary to keep that many people on the tax rolls simply to make good citizens of them, simply to advise them, through the tax collector, that, after all, they have a stake in their Government. A revenue collector goes into a small community and finds an individual who is paying $10 in taxes. Under H. R. 1 he will pay $7. All he gets is a 30 percent decrease in his taxes; it does not make any difference how many dependents he has, he will get the same credit for dependents as he would under the present law. All he gets is a 30 percent reduction. He will still be paying a tax bill. Every Senator knows that when we continue to keep these two-bit and fifty-cent and $1 taxpayers on the tax rolls it costs more money to collect the tax than the Government would lose by removing them from the rolls.

Mr. President, my amendment would simply increase from $500 to $600 the exemption for dependents, and from $1,000 to $1,200 the exemption for a married couple. Think of it, Mr. President. The adoption of that amendment, providing that slight increase in exemptions would take 4,800,000 people off the tax rolls. Moreover, 4,800,000 people would be taken off the tax rolls without doing violence to the school of thought which believes that people should stay on the tax rolls. The adoption of the amendment would cost the Treasury of the United States $1,500,000,000. I shall never be able to understand why the House did not thus increase the exemptions of the taxpayers in the lower brackets.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. It is quite obvious that the House felt that the revenue from taxes could be decreased a certain amount, and they wished to give the greater benefit to the taxpayers with the large incomes.

Mr. LUCAS. Exactly. It is the same old story of taking care of those in the higher-income groups, while permitting the people in the lower-income groups to get the worst of the arrangement. Certainly the House should have adopted the simple device of at least increasing the exemption from $1,000 to $1,200, and thus providing relief to the people in that group by taking many of them off the tax rolls. Furthermore, everyone knows that when 4,800,000 persons are taken off the tax rolls a certain number of persons will be removed from the pay roll of the Treasury Department, because it does not take a very brilliant mind to understand that it is necessary to employ a considerable number of persons in order to handle 4,800,000 income-tax returns. The majority party have been telling the people that they wanted to take at least 1,000,000 people off the Government pay rolls, and yet when they have an opportunity to take a great many people off the Treasury Department or Internal Revenue Bureau pay roll by pursuing the method I have advocated, we find that they do not adopt it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The bill without the Senator's amendment violates the proper basis and principle of income taxation, which is that taxes should be based on ability to pay. Is not that true?

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, the Senator from Alabama is correct. Every sane tax measure is based on ability to pay.

Certainly when the Congress provides for the payment of income taxes by taxpayers at the very bottom of the income scale, it is violating the real basis for taxation, which is ability to pay. We have heard for years from Senators on the other side of the aisle about the snoopers and others who were sent out by the Government to harass and annoy the American people. Senators cannot tell me that when the Government keeps 4,800,000 people on the tax rolls, in order to collect a small amount of taxes from them, those people are not going to be annoyed by the revenue agents in the respective communities where they live. So, Mr. President, violence will again be done to the principle which the majority party have been preaching for so long.

Mr. President, I have been referring to the first provision. Let us see who supported that provision at the hearings before the Finance Committee. The first person to whom I wish to refer is Randolph Paul, formerly General Counsel to the Treasury Department, and one of the leading tax lawyers of the United States. He recently wrote a book on taxation. At page 522 of the printed hearings we find that he said:

> The relatively modest $100-per-person increase in personal exemptions and dependency credits contained in the Lucas amendment means an additional ability to buy food, clothing, and shelter. Not only do the lowest incomes sorely need increased power to buy the necessities of life, but the Nation as a whole will benefit if they have increased power since the market for consumer goods will be correspondingly enlarged.

Mr. President, the people who need relief most are those in the low-income groups, who have the mass buying power, and who spend their money as fast as they earn it. They are the ones whom Mr. Paul says should have the relief, although they will not get it under House bill 1 unless it is amended as I propose.

I read further from the hearings:

> For the income group under $5,000 the Lucas amendment provides relief where relief is needed most—in the case of the family with children. The average or typical American family—a man, wife, and two children—with an income of $2,500 a year, now pays a tax of $95. Under the House bill this family would pay a tax of $67, but under the Lucas amendment the same family would pay a tax of $17.

Of course, Mr. President, those are figures that cannot be disputed. Obviously the major tax relief should be afforded to families having an income of $2,500 or less.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I wish to call particular attention to the fact that in that case the Senator from Illinois is dealing with the average American family, which is composed of a husband, a wife, and two children, with an income of only approximately $2,500 a year. Of course, the Senator from Illinois knows that that family of four persons, having an income of only approximately $200 a month, has many other taxes to pay. They do not pay them directly, but, of course, they have to pay the taxes just the same, even though they pay them indirectly. Is not that true?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Alabama is correct.

Mr. HILL. They have to pay all kinds of taxes.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. It is only rarely that only the ad valorem tax has to be paid. Most of the States impose various taxes, and the Federal Government has imposed taxes called excise taxes. Moreover, the Senator from Illinois knows as well as every other Senator does the terrifically high prices which have to be paid in the United States. Yet, instead of granting the relief which the Senator from Illinois proposes for the average American family of four, with an income of approximately $200 a month, the bill before us proposes that the largest part of the relief be given to those who make the large profits from the high prices which prevail in the United States today. Is not that true?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Alabama that in my opinion those in the lower-income groups do not get what they are entitled to, under the bill as it came to the Senate, when what is done for them is compared with what is done for families in the middle- and upper-income groups. That is the point I made all the way through the hearings before the Finance Committee, and it is the point I am trying to stress today on the floor of the Senate, although I know that it is useless to do so. Nevertheless I make that point now.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Senator's point is that under the bill the attempt is to give the relief at the wrong end of the scale—to give it to those in the higher income groups, instead of giving it to those in the lower income groups, who are most in need of tax relief.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the bill as passed by the House were to become law, the greater part of the relief would be given to those in the higher income brackets, with the result that the taxes they would have to pay would be approximately the taxes they had to pay before the war. Of course the Senate Finance Committee has reported the bill with certain amendments; but I have been speaking of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. By examining the graphs which have been prepared by the Treasury Department experts, we can see exactly what would have happened in the event that the original bill had been enacted into law.

At the hearings Mr. Paul further said:

> If an identical family has an income of $5,000, it now pays a tax of $589. Under the House bill it would pay a tax of $471, but under the Lucas amendment it would pay a tax of $445.

In other words, the families with incomes of $2,500 or less are the families which would be materially aided by a small increase of $100 in the exemption for dependents and an increase from $1,000 to $1,200 in the exemption for a married couple.

Mr. President, I submit that if anyone is to get any tax relief at this time those who have the buying power, those who spend the money, should get the relief afforded by reduced taxes. The Senator from Alabama will be interested in what was stated by a witness who testified before our committee. He said:

> H. R. 1 ignores the plight of the 92 percent of the families in the United States with total family income of less than $5,000. It ignores the fact that more than half the families in the country are still living today on less than $2,000 a year.

Just think of that, more than half the families in the United States of America are today living on incomes of less than $2,000.

> Why not grant urgently needed tax relief to those groups, whose standard of living has been drastically hit because of price rises?

I do not know what these prices are at the present time, but here was the testimony submitted before our committee some 30 days ago with respect to rises in the prices of some of the necessities of life.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, 40 percent of the income of the families in this latter group (of $2,000 or less) must go for food, for which retail prices have increased 31 percent in a period of 10 months.

Coffee increased 49 percent, bread 25 percent, meat 60 percent, milk 32 percent, lard 72 percent, oleomargarine 73 percent, drug products now cost 67 percent more than they did in June 1946. Soap increased 62 percent, cotton goods 39 percent more, household paint 60 percent more, leather 63 percent more.

Why do I cite those figures? Definitely to demonstrate the need for giving these people a fair break, a fair shake, in any income-tax reduction, because of high prices which have greatly increased since OPA went out of existence.

Mr. President, speaking of high prices, well do I remember how the majority on the other side of the aisle told the American people, just about a year ago, "All you need do is to get rid of OPA, get rid of the black market, and you will see prices rise from 20 to 25 percent in the next 30 days, and then, after the 30 days, you will see the prices go back to where they were under OPA."

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Of course, the Senator saw those on the other side of the aisle during the last session, day after day, as I did, as they threw their torpedoes into the OPA. Is not that correct?

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. It was those torpedoes which finally blew up and destroyed the OPA. Is not that correct?

Mr. LUCAS. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. HILL. That is why there are these outrageously high prices today.

Mr. LUCAS. There is no doubt about that at all, I will say to the Senator from Alabama.

I wish now to call attention to prices. The index shows that prices rose constantly after the failure to extend OPA in June, and went up until March, then leveled off in March, and remained at those levels to this time, and all the predictions of a decline in prices made by the majority party when they got rid of OPA failed to come true. The housewife today, those in the galleries who are housewives, who have to buy the clothes they wear and the things they need for the table, well realize that prices are tremendously higher than those they were paying a year ago today. Yet because of a constant drive against OPA, a constant drive against regimentation in a reconstruction period, a constant drive for political reasons, the OPA was broken down, the American people are suffering today as a result of what was done.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in speaking about people with low incomes a little while ago the Senator referred to the taxes they have to pay, Federal excise taxes, as well as State, county, and municipal taxes. I call the Senator's attention, if I may, to this statement by Mr. Paul:

It is sometimes forgotten that practically every citizen pays substantial excise taxes.

All the citizens in the lower income groups, the Senator said, have to pay, as Paul says "substantial excise taxes, which have a relatively heavier impact upon the low-income groups than upon the higher income groups."

In other words, so far as the people in the low-income groups are concerned, the excise taxes are much more oppressive, they bear down upon them much more heavily, cost them much more than do the excise taxes on those in the higher income groups. Is not that true?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator's statement is correct. The argument that is presented, that we can make a good citizen out of an individual by placing his name on the tax roll, is a lot of economic bunk.

Mr. HILL. Did not this Government exist for some 140 years before we even had an income tax?

Mr. LUCAS. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. And has it not been only in more recent years that, because of the necessities and the compulsions of war, we have had to put the people in the low-income groups on the tax rolls? Was there any question about good citizens in this country before they were put on the tax rolls?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Alabama is correct. Let me remind him also that the average citizen in every community pays school taxes, city taxes, county taxes, taxes for municipal purposes. He is tax conscious—do not worry about that—as the result of what he has to pay in his local community, in addition to the hidden Federal excise taxes which he has to pay.

Mr. HILL. Of course, he pays a State income tax; does he not?

Mr. LUCAS. In most States he does.

Mr. HILL. He pays very heavy State and local sales taxes. The sales taxes today are very heavy.

Mr. LUCAS. There is no doubt about that. So far as I am concerned, the argument about keeping on the tax rolls in order to make them tax conscious is merely a lot of economic poppycock.

Mr. HILL. I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that whenever one wants to do a bad thing he tries to cloak it, and give it the semblance of respectability, by announcing some good purpose for it. Is not that true?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct. I desire also to emphasize what I have said with respect to those in the lower-income groups by reading a short statement made by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, who is assistant director of the research for the CIO of America. He testified before our committee. He does not like the split-income feature, because it does not reach the lower-income groups. But he wrote this to the committee:

Your bill, with the exception of the splitting-of-income provision, while it does not go near far enough, is far superior to H. R. 1.

In other words, they want more exemptions, and they are entitled to more exemptions. The country would have been better off had relief been centered on those in the lower-income brackets, primarily because of the high prices which now prevail.

Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, wrote a letter, in which he said—and this comes from the American Federation of Labor:

In a period of general prosperity total tax revenues should be kept at a high level. An increased share of the Federal revenue should be applied toward a reduction of the national debt. The forces of inflation are strengthened at such a time if unwise tax cuts are made.

The national income is now at an all-time high. In the current year the Federal Treasury is to achieve a surplus. While this surplus is likely to be small, its achievement so soon after the vast wartime expenditures and at a time when peace is not yet fully concluded is indeed significant. Under these circumstances the American Federation of Labor believes that tax cuts should be made with extreme care, bearing in mind their ultimate as well as their immediate effects.

* * * * *

The American Federation of Labor is unqualifiedly opposed to any proposal for an across-the-board percentage reduction in individual income tax. We believe that this method for reducing individual income taxes is in direct opposition to the principle of progressive taxation, which labor strongly and insistently supports.

* * * * *

As between H. R. 1 and the Senate substitute for H. R. 1, therefore, we believe that the substitute measure more nearly meets the requirements of a sound tax policy, because it provides more relief to those in the lower-income brackets at a somewhat smaller loss in revenue.

As between H. R. 1 and the Lucas substitute, "we believe that the substitute measure more nearly meets the requirements of a sound tax policy, because it provides more relief to those in the lower-income brackets, at a somewhat smaller loss of revenue."

Mr. President, anyone reading the testimony by the spokesmen for the two great labor organizations of America will understand something about the mass purchasing power of the consuming public. I think I have said it before, but I repeat: The exemption feature of the amendment would cost one and a half billion dollars of revenue.

The next proposal deals with the splitting of family incomes. I shall not discuss that, because it has been thoroughly discussed here within the last 2 days. I shall only say that in my opinion there was never a more glaring inequity in the tax structure than that which exists today between community-property and non-community-property States. I hope the time will come, and very soon, when those inequities will be removed and the entire country placed upon a uniform basis.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator has been quoting from different organizations. I notice that the American Farm Bureau Federation, which is the great national organization of farmers, has very emphatically endorsed the particular proposition which the Senator has just been discussing.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct. The Honorable Edward O'Neal, president of the Federation, wrote me a letter on the subject, which I have placed in the RECORD. He is definitely in favor of a bill that will split family incomes and place husband and wife upon a uniform basis throughout the country. Bernard Baruch wrote a letter strongly endorsing that feature of the bill. In fact, there was not a single witness who testified, including witnesses for proponents of the measure, who did not believe this to be a good feature to be embraced within a tax bill, at some time. But the strong proponents of the House bill, such as Mr. Hanes and Mr. Magill, thought the matter should be delayed a little while longer.

Mr. HILL. I spoke of the declaration by the American Farm Bureau Federation. In connection with this matter, I should like to call attention also to the fact that the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America declares as to the proposal by the Senator from Illinois, in a letter addressed to him under date of May 2, as follows:

> As to your proposal for the splitting of family incomes, certainly this would rectify one of the most glaring injustices in the present tax structure, and I think it is worthy of the most serious consideration.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator. That was the trend of the testimony throughout the hearings before the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator is a member of the Finance Committee. I wonder if he seriously believes that, were this opportunity of rectifying the injustices to be passed by, there would be any likelihood of a change in the tax structure next year, in accordance with the suggestion, since it would still at that time cost from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000?

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to think so, Mr. President; but, knowing what has happened here for the last 26 years, I shall never believe it, until I see it written into a law and signed by the President.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I cannot imagine that we are at all likely to have an opportunity at any time in the near future of reducing taxes on a similar scale, such as the opportunity we now have. It is an opportunity to bring taxes down. When taxes are lowered under the pending bill, it will become progressively more difficult thereafter to obtain any further reduction. I am sure there will be minor adjustments, but, if the present opportunity is lost, in my opinion there will not be one chance in a thousand that a change will be made next year. The Republicans will come in then and say, "Oh, we would love to do it, but we cannot afford it." Under the pending bill, and under the present conditions, they obviously can afford it. Actually, the people who would benefit under H. R. 1 are to a great extent the same people who would benefit under the splitting of family income, although the benefit is distributed in a slightly different way, through the higher exemptions and the splitting of family income. Is not that true?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct. I concur in what the Senator says. Here is the danger in writing the tax bill for next year. It is all very well for the House Ways and Means Committee to sit down and talk about inequities in taxation, and to have lengthy hearings; that is a fine thing. Election year is coming along in 1948, and I think it is a good thing, from that angle.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It sounds good.

Mr. LUCAS. It sounds good. It is a sound proposition to do that, from every angle. But this is my fear—no one knows what is going to happen between now and this time 1 year from now. We have already witnessed a very serious situation from the standpoint of foreign affairs, compelling us to appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars by way of a Greek-Turkish loan. No one is able to say what may happen. As the Senator suggests, there may or may not be a tax bill next year. If I were a gambling man, I should gamble that there will not be a tax bill next year, in view of conditions that exist in this country and the conditions that exist throughout the world. There are many who favor the universal military-training bill. That, alone, would cost $1,500,000,000, according to estimates made by the War Department. It is probably a worthy measure. In any kind of emergency which may arise, expenditures would immediately increase, and it would be difficult to find the necessary votes to reduce taxes next year.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Unfortunately, I did not hear the beginning of the Senator's discussion. Did he discuss the timing of the bill, or the appropriateness of a tax reduction of the size proposed at this time?

Mr. LUCAS. I said that my substitute bill seeks to start the reduction of taxes on January 1, 1948.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator has already discussed that?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; I have. That would afford an opportunity, between now and that time, to study the whole fiscal problem of the Government, and to observe conditions throughout the world. Should anything serious occur, we could take appropriate measures.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. May I suggest that by following that procedure, the Treasury might be better off by from one and a half to two billion dollars. In that connection, the argument made in justification of H. R. 1, namely, that it would give a greater incentive to production, a greater incentive to new business, and so on, seems to me to be completely erroneous. Of course, business is very good at the moment. It is not a lack of production or a prospect of unemployment that is facing the country. It is a lack of consumption, if anything, that is to bring on the anticipated recession, is it not? So, while none of us is opposed to giving an incentive for production, it is the timing of the bill that is basically wrong, it seems to me. Under different conditions the bill would be a very good one; for example, if there were unemployment and a lack of investment. As a matter of fact, investment conditions are very good at the moment, are they not?

Mr. LUCAS. If I understand the Wall Street Journal and other leading financial papers, they are about as good now as they have been in a long time. So far as I am able to ascertain, there is no one who is suffering, whether he is in a corporation or in a partnership, or is conducting a business by himself. In other words, greater profits are being made at the present time than at any other time in the history of the country. Profits of corporations are at an all time high. The individual citizen in America is better off today than he has ever been before.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. It seems to me the purpose is not to try to stimulate greater and greater inflation at the present time. Our real objective should be to stabilize production as nearly as we can at the present level, because, for at least some time, that will continue to be a very satisfactory level. If incentives are provided to further production at higher prices, inflation will be accelerated and there will be a recurrence of what happened at the end of the twenties; the policy followed will bring about a repetition of the same thing that happened at the end of the twenties.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator knows that in 1945 we passed a tax bill which cost the Treasury Department $6,000,000,000.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I opposed that bill.

Mr. LUCAS. By that bill we repealed the excess-profits taxes. By that bill, in my judgment, we provided the incentive for big business to do the very things that many say the pending bill will do. The pending bill does not touch corporations at all. I contend that there is absolutely no incentive whatsoever in the pending bill. It is simply the cutting of a juicy melon and passing the pieces around to the people over the country, and the little fellow in the lower income brackets is not going to receive very much.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Illinois has expressed doubt as to whether we can have a tax-reduction bill in the next session of Congress. Certainly, he doubts that if such a bill were passed it would involve much tax reduction. The same doubt has been very well expressed by the distinguished junior Senator from Arkansas. In that connection I should like to call attention to the fact that the only avowed candidate for the Republican nomination for President next year, 1948, has just returned from a trip through Europe where he has seen at first hand the conditions, where he has seen the needs of the people. He comes back to us and declares that we should devote 10 percent of all our production of food, of goods, of materials, of everything else for the rebuilding and rehabilitation of the countries of Europe, in the hope that by that method we may be able to build peace in this world. If we are to follow such a program certainly the 10 percent of our production will have to be paid for out of the Treasury, and that means that it will have to be paid for with taxes taken from the pockets of the people. Certainly with such a program as that confronting us we cannot look with much optimism toward any substantial reduction in taxes at the next session of Congress. Is that not true?

Mr. LUCAS. I agree with the Senator. This further should be said in connection with the Senator's observation. The pending tax reduction bill is based upon a false theory. It is based upon contemplated revenue arising from the national income in the fiscal year 1948.

Mr. HILL. Which no one has any assurance will be maintained at the present level.

Mr. LUCAS. That is true. No one has any assurance of that; and a tax bill cannot be passed now upon the basis of reduction of expenditures. We know that to be true the way things are now going. It will be necessary to have a national income of at least $170,000,000,000 during the coming fiscal year in order to carry out the pledges the party in the majority in Congress have made to the people of the country, namely, to give them a three and one-half billion dollar tax reduction, pay $2,600,000,000 on the national debt, and still have some surplus remaining.

Mr. HILL. Of course, $170,000,000,000 is the highest national income this country ever had, an income which a few years ago the most optimistic person never even dreamed of. Is that not true?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct. It is the highest income in all our history, and it may be the highest income we will have for a long, long time.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In that connection, I wish to say that the people who are supposed to know, and I think are the best judges of the future of business, that is the people who invest in securities in New York, certainly by their action indicate that they do not believe the national income is going to stay at $170,000,000,000 a year. I wonder whether in the back of their minds they do not know that the kind of financing that it is proposed now and the kind of policy that has been followed during the last few months in approaching the Nation's fiscal problem assure that we are not going to have a continuation of a $170,000,000,000 national income.

Mr. LUCAS. It may be one of the factors that move them to do as they are doing. I do not know what factors are entering into the decline on the stock exchange at the present time. But there must be some reason for the decline. Some of the smart boys who deal on the stock exchange may be looking into the future and may be figuring that now might be a good time to get out. I do not know. No one can tell, of course, what is in store for the future.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. But ordinarily one would think that if a bill were going to have the effect that this bill is supposed to have by way of incentive to business and all that, with the evidence that has been given here of the strength of the proponents of the bill—and it looks as if the bill will be passed—the market would go up, in view of that exhibition of strength for the bill, if the bill will really have the effect its proponents say it will have.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not know about that. I simply do not want to make any comment upon that matter.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Along the line of what has just been stated respecting the financial condition of the Nation, what effect does the Senator think the pending bill will have on the national income in view of the fact that the bill proposes to help those receiving large incomes but does very little to help those receiving small incomes? Will it have a tendency to increase our national income or not?

Mr. LUCAS. There is much food for thought raised by the Senator's question. Some argue that taxes can be reduced and that more revenues will result from the reduction in taxes by reason of stimulating incentive for individuals to invest in business and to make more money and thereby bring more tax revenue into the United States Treasury. I do not agree with that theory at all. Such a result might occur once in a great while. But when taxes are reduced by three and one-half billion dollars, which is what the Government will lose by the passage of this measure, I do not think there is any way to make up that loss in revenue.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Is it not true that if there is a reduction made in the taxes of those receiving the smaller incomes, say $2,000 a year or $3,000 or even up to $4,000 a year, the result will be to put into circulation the money thus saved to the small taxpayers?

Mr. LUCAS. That is where the stimulation of buying power comes. The mass of buying power comes from those receiving such incomes. The man in the lower-income bracket who receives a reduction in his taxes spends the dollars thus saved to him. We have to have a follow through on that policy in order to have a large national income.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Is it not true that economic experts agree that such a policy would stimulate purchasing power to the seventh degree?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not know about that.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have seen the claim made that purchasing power is stimulated by such action seven times.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not want to enter into a discussion of that matter, because I am not sufficiently familiar with it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to address myself to section 3 of the Senator's substitute amendment. I understood the distinguished Senator from Illinois to say a few moments ago that he had received a written statement from several outstanding authorities on taxation, and other distinguished Americans relative to the wisdom of this provision. I ask the distinguished Senator if he has inquired of the Treasury Department or the Internal Revenue Bureau as to their attitude respecting section 3 of the substitute amendment?

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator refer to the splitting of family incomes?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. The Treasury Department advised the Committee on Finance—and the committee has been working on this problem for some time—that they are definitely in favor of having such action taken at the proper time. They do not state any definite time for action, but they take the position that they do not believe that this is the time to reduce taxes.

Mr. WHERRY. Testimony to that effect was read into the RECORD yesterday by the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. I am intensely interested in knowing whether the Senator from Illinois has been in communication with the Treasury Department or has had any discussion with the Department as to its attitude, and as to whether or not the Department would cooperate and aid if possible in the consideration of such legislation in connection with the tax bill we talk about which will be submitted to Congress at the beginning of the next session.

Mr. LUCAS. The tax bill which is right around the corner?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes, the tax bill which is right around the corner. Can the Senator from Illinois say anything for the record that will be of help to those of us who are interested in seeing that this particular kind of legislation is adopted by the Senate?

Mr. LUCAS. I cannot add anything more that has been said. I have had no personal conversations with the Secretary of the Treasury about this matter. The only thing I did was to have one of the Treasury representatives, Mr. Surrey, come before the committee with a full explanation, which can be found in the hearings. I think it is a very fair explanation. He took no position. The Treasury Department took the position that it was not in favor of tax reduction of any kind at this time. However, like the Senator from Colorado, the Department is very sympathetic toward the splitting of family incomes on a uniform basis throughout the country.

Mr. WHERRY. I know that the Senator has had considerable experience with various Government agencies, and especially the revenue agency. I am looking for a light somewhere, if we can find it, that may be helpful, in the way of a definite assurance. During the past 3 or 4 years I have been told by several officials that they felt that this was legislation which should be enacted at some time.

Mr. LUCAS. I think I can give definite assurance that that is the attitude of the Treasury Department. I do not make that statement on the basis of direct conversations, but it is based upon what the Secretary of the Treasury stated before the committee and upon inference. I am sure that the Treasury representatives will cooperate if and when we get around to drafting a bill.

Mr. WHERRY. If the substitute which the distinguished Senator has offered should be adopted, what would be the cost in revenue so far as concerns the particular section which we are discussing?

Mr. LUCAS. The total loss in revenue occasioned by the three sections would be approximately three and one-half billion dollars.

Mr. WHERRY. I am speaking of the second section. What would it cost?

Mr. LUCAS. I wish I knew. I have heard a great many figures in that connection during the past 2 or 3 days of debate, and I confess that I am somewhat puzzled. In the hearings it was definitely testified that the cost would be $752,000,000. Yesterday the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] used the figure of $800,000,000. Then in the last burst of speed before we voted on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, the distinguished Senator from Colorado made the statement that it would cost $1,000,000,000. Someone had revised the figures again.

I have always had a little trouble with the experts. They can never be pinned down. The Senator knows that in the practice of law one can find experts to testify to almost anything. I do not make that statement with respect to the staff, because they are a competent group. But we can get the Treasury and the staff to agree on scarcely any set of figures. I believe that the experts ought to try to get together when they are trying to advise the Congress and the country on an important tax measure of this kind.

I am glad that the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] was voted upon yesterday, because I am satisfied, if we had delayed a vote until today, another $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 would have been added to the estimate of loss in revenue.

Mr. WHERRY. Does not the Senator feel that even though the McClellan amendment was rejected yesterday, that fact should not be interpreted as a reflection of the sentiments of many Senators who, if the amendment had not involved a loss in revenue, would have voted for it? Is that interpretation correct?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator's interpretation is correct so far as the Senator from Illinois is concerned. I will say to the Senator that so far as I am concerned I will join with him, when an appropriate tax measure is before us, in an effort to see that enough Democrats and Republicans get together to place all the citizens of the country on a uniform basis so far as splitting family income is concerned.

Mr. WHERRY. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Illinois that I believe that the principles involved in the second section of his amendment should be adopted by the Senate. As I stated yesterday in colloquy with the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], I think there is no answer to the principle involved in such a proposal. It ought to be adopted. In my opinion every Senator feels that it is fair, and that so long as the present situation continues there will be an inequity. I hope that another tax bill is just around the corner. It seems to me that the first business to be considered in connection with such a measure is legislation which will accomplish what the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Arkansas attempted to do in similar amendments.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator was good enough to vote for the McClellan amendment yesterday. I understand pretty well the situation with respect to party solidarity in connection with tax bills and other measures. I think it was commendable for the Senator to leave his party and vote for the McClellan amendment. I think the time has passed when either party should attempt to hold in line Members on one side of the aisle or other on such a question as this. The Senator from Nebraska, who is one of the leaders on the other side of the aisle, ought to take the bull by the horns, so to speak, and see if we cannot persuade some Republicans to go along with us the next time.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I should like to ask if the loss of revenue was estimated on the basis of the present law or on the basis of the bill now pending, which provides for a reduction of between 20 and 30 percent, or upon the basis of the Senator's amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. LUCAS. There are two different questions. As I understand, House bill 1, as amended, would cost the Treasury approximately three and a half billion dollars.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am speaking now of community property. As I understand, there would be a reduction of between 20 and 30 percent if the committee version of the bill now before the Senate were enacted, estimated on the basis of the present law. If the Senator's amendment were adopted, might not the loss in revenue because of the community-property feature be less?

Mr. LUCAS. I am not prepared to answer that question. It would be necessary to consult the experts.

The third significant provision of the bill is the reduction by two points of the surtax rate in each surtax net income bracket. This has the effect of giving each taxpayer a reduction of 2 percent of surtax net income. This proposal, in contrast with the reductions contained in H. R. 1, gives a more equitable amount of savings in dollars to all taxpayers rather than relating the savings directly to the amount of taxes paid.

Mr. President, the three proposals included in my amendment can be understood by everyone. There is nothing complicated about it. It follows the well-defined pattern of the tax structure which exists at the present time. The cost of the three proposals would be approximately $3,500,000,000.

Yesterday I voted for the amendment offered by the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN]. If that amendment had been adopted, there would have been an additional cost of between $800,000,000 and $1,000,000,000, which would have represented an increased benefit to those in the upper- and middle-income brackets. They are already pretty well taken care of.

The other amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas would cost the Treasury approximately $3,000,000,000. So, if those amendments had been adopted we should have had a tax-reduction measure involving a heavy loss in revenue. Nevertheless, I supported the first amendment.

The three proposals contained in my amendment would cost a total of $3,500,000,000 if adopted. I am asking that my amendment be substituted for the bill now before the Senate. I believe it is a better, sounder bill, from the standpoint of equity and from the standpoint of honest taxation, in line with the ability of the taxpayer to pay. It follows the pattern that we have been following for years on the question of exemptions. It does not do anything other than what seems to me to be fair and just. If we are to have a tax-reduction bill, I think this is the kind of bill we ought to have.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gurney	Murray
Baldwin	Hatch	Myers
Ball	Hawkes	O'Conor
Barkley	Hayden	O'Daniel
Brewster	Hickenlooper	Pepper
Bricker	Hill	Reed
Bridges	Hoey	Revercomb
Brooks	Holland	Robertson, Va.
Buck	Ives	Robertson, Wyo.
Bushfield	Jenner	Russell
Byrd	Johnson, Colo.	Saltonstall
Cain	Johnston, S. C.	Smith
Capehart	Kem	Sparkman
Capper	Kilgore	Taft
Chavez	Knowland	Taylor
Connally	Langer	Thomas, Okla.
Cooper	Lodge	Thomas, Utah
Cordon	Lucas	Thye

Ecton	McMahon	Wherry
Ellender	Magnuson	White
Ferguson	Malone	Wiley
Flanders	Martin	Williams
Fulbright	Maybank	Wilson
George	Millikin	Young
Green	Moore

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRICKER in the chair). Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the adoption of the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. MILLIKIN, Mr. WHERRY, and other Senators requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I should like to address a question to the Senator from Illinois, the sponsor of the amendment. As I understand from section 7 of the proposed amendment, its provisions would not become effective until January 1, 1948. Is that correct?

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Furthermore, it would replace and strike out all of the committee's bill?

Mr. LUCAS. Precisely; that is correct.

Mr. REVERCOMB. It is a substitute measure, and would not become effective until January 1, 1948?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I will say to the able Senator that I am very much impressed and very favorably impressed with the idea of increasing exemptions, but from my own viewpoint, I feel that I should make this statement, that I do not want to support any amendment that defers the benefits of any tax bill beyond July 1 of this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. On this vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who is absent because of illness in his family, is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay," and the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea."

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], who is absent on official business, is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART]. If present and voting, the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay," and the Senator from Tennessee would vote "yea."

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], who is necessarily absent, is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is absent by leave of the Senate.

On this vote I announce the following pairs: The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]. If present, the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea," and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER]. If present, the Senator from Tennessee would vote "yea," and the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 58, as follows:

So Mr. LUCAS' amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I have certain technical observations on the pending tax bill, and also on the Lucas amendment, just voted upon. The subject matter is much longer than I thought it would be at the time I made the research. I know how anxious the Senate is to dispose of the bill tonight; therefore, I shall not burden the Senate with these long observations, because so much has already been said, much of it being repetitious, but expressing my views on the pending legislation. I therefore ask unanimous consent that I may place this matter in the RECORD at this point following the vote on the Lucas amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The question of tax reduction, debt retirement, and reduction of Federal expenditures was discussed in a preliminary way in the early days of the present session, when we were considering the legislative budget for the fiscal year 1948. Since that time H. R. 1 has been reported out of the House Ways and Means Committee, passed by the House, sent to the Senate, and after lengthy hearings before the Senate Finance Committee has now come to the floor for discussion.

Last Wednesday the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] congratulated the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], on the way he handled the hearings before that committee. I want to join the Senator from Georgia in extending my compliments to the distinguished chairman. I did not have an opportunity to attend all of the hearings, but I know that the public, the witnesses, and those Senators who did have the opportunity to sit in on some of the testimony were most favorably impressed with the committee's attitude and came away from the hearings convinced that open hearings on this vital part of the Nation's business are far preferable to the old procedure of executive sessions.

H. R. 1, as amended by the Senate committee, has the practical effect of making tax reductions effective July 1, 1947, and follows a modified version of across-the-board percentage cut in taxes. In my mind the bill now before us raises two major questions, first, "Does the economy demand tax reduction effective July 1 or is it reasonably safe to begin such reduction on January 1, 1948, instead?" and second, "Is the modified across-the-board principle of percentage reduction the equitable way of achieving the objectives claimed by its proponents to be inherent in H. R. 1?"

The majority argues that tax reductions are needed for two major reasons; first, to increase, or bolster mass purchasing power; and second, to restore incentive for venture capital and to promote additional mangerial initiative. The major question I stated a few minutes ago, namely, "Does the economy demand tax reduction on July 1, rather than January 1, 1948?" relates directly to these two objectives which the majority party allegedly is seeking to accomplish by H. R. 1 as amended.

There are two collateral considerations which of necessity permeate our entire discussion of tax reduction. These are Federal expenditures and the tremendous national debt. As I proceed with this discussion I will mention the problems involved in these two considerations at the appropriate intervals.

I am firmly convinced that tax reductions must be made. The taxpayers of this Nation cannot go on indefinitely carrying the heavy burden imposed upon them by wartime rates. I am equally convinced that Federal expenditures can and must be reduced below their present postwar level. I am further convinced that the national debt of $258,000,000,000, which is approximately one and a half times our total national income, must be retired on a long-term, planned basis.

Insofar as I have been able to ascertain from p rusal of disscussions in the House Ways and Means Committee, by reports of what transpired in hearings before the Senate Finance Committee, and from discussion of tax, debt, and legislative budget questions on the floor of the Senate, those responsible in the Congress have not yet devised a comprehensive plan for revising our total tax structure, nor have they worked out a long-range policy for management and retirement of the public debt. Until the respective committees of House and Senate have addressed themselves to these major problems, and are ready to report a studied, factual, and comprehensive program to the Congress, I am opposed to tax reduction, because without the kind of basic planning I visualize reductions such as those represented in H. R. 1 are piecemeal nibblings at the problem and may well have the effect of destroying our present golden opportunity of achieving a complete overhauling of the tax structure. The same argument applies to the problem of debt retirement. The Senate passed a resolution providing for the application of $2,600,000,000 on the national debt out of any surplus revenues which may accrue during the fiscal year 1948. This is a laudable declaration of intent, but it does not in any way represent a considered judgment on the part of the Senate as to what our long-range debt-retirement policy and program should be.

I don't pose as an expert in tax matters or fiscal policy. To me, however, the proposal made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] in Senate Join· Resolution 90, which has been before the Senate since March 18, calling for a study of the relationships between municipal, State, and Federal fiscal programs, makes sense. Action on that resolution has not yet been taken by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, although there has certainly been ample time for it to do so. The House Ways and Means Committee is currently undertaking a study of this over-all problem. For my own part, it is folly to attack such complicated and important problems on a piecemeal basis as represented by H. R. 1.

What I have just said in regard to the necessity for planned action is germane to the first question I mentioned at the opening of my remarks, "Is July 1 the imperative time to institute a substantial reduction in individual income taxes?" I wish now to pursue that question a bit further as it relates to the objectives which the majority leadership alleges to be inherent in this tax bill. You will recall that these objectives are first, to increase mass purchasing power, and second, to provide additional incentive for venture capital and managerial initiative. In this regard these two questions come to my mind, "Is it necessary by July 1 to inject additional purchasing power into the arteries of commerce?" and "Are venture capital and managerial initiative so stifled by present tax rates that unless relief is granted by July 1 the entire economy will suffer from financial anemia?"

The need or lack of need for additional purchasing power in the economy can best be judged by what is happening to sales in various commodity fields of consumer goods. Recent reports in Business Week and other publications designed especially for businessmen state that trouble spots are beginning to appear at certain points in sales of consumer soft goods. The movement of textiles across the retail counters of the Nation has slowed down, the pipe lines are pretty well filled, and some textile mills have already felt the impact. A similar situation prevails in the shoe industry. A very substantial part of the 1946 pack of canned goods is still in the hands of brokers and wholesalers, and these distributors are experiencing resistance from retailers against the high prices at which these 1946 lines must sell if their present owners are to avoid serious inventory losses. I will not attempt to give an encyclopedic account of each item in the soft goods field where retail and consumer resistance is being felt. There are, however, numerous other specific items of soft goods which are presently experiencing sales difficulties.

It is readily understandable to me, and I am sure to all Senators on the floor, that consumer resistance to prices in the soft goods field is inevitable in view of the fact that, as Mr. Lionel Edie pointed out to the committee in his testimony on April 30, the index of agricultural prices reached a peak of 183 in April as compared to the 1926 level. Whereas it is true that agricultural prices are not a complete reflection of all items in the soft goods category, they are indicative of what has happened to prices in this field.

I leave this point with the statement that there are indications in soft goods lines of definite consumer resistance and inventories are beginning to accumulate. There is a very serious question, however, as to whether additional purchasing power, left in the hands of consumers through tax reduction, will have any material effect upon this situation. It is more probable that price readjustments will have to take place before the volume of sales will again turn upward. By giving the proponents of H. R. 1 the benefit of the doubt, let us assume that additional purchasing power in the hands of the masses of our people would serve to stimulate sales of soft goods.

I would like to direct your attention now for a moment to the situation in durable goods lines. Here prices are still firm, and some economists, including the Mr. Edie to whom I have already referred, anticipate that prices will go still higher in some lines. There are two major reasons for this: First, industrial prices did not go up as high during the war and reconversion period as did agricultural prices. The index as compared to 1926 stands at 133. In 1920, 2 years after the close of World War I, the index of industrial prices as compared to 1926 was 150, 17 points higher than the present level. Industrial prices, due largely to the effectiveness of OPA controls, did not rise as precipitously during World War II as they did during World War I, and hence the possibility of a sharp downward tend is not as imminent. Further, the informed estimates are that they will rise somewhat, in the orderly adjustment which must take place between these and agricultural prices.

The second major influence on these prices is to be found in the relationship between production and demand. Many durable goods were either entirely out of production during the war or were produced on a limited basis. There is still a tremendous accumulated demand for durable goods in all lines. A very few, such as table-model radios, are experiencing some sales difficulty. Producers have a long way to go, however, before they satisfy the pent-up demand for durable goods. There are some basic shortages which further bear on this question. Production of steel is proceeding vitally at full-plant capacity and avaliability of steel is a controlling factor in the production of most durable goods. Copper is extremely short and supplies of aluminum and other light metals, according to the most recent report of the Civilian Production Administration, are still inadequate.

Just a few words now about heavy capital goods and construction materials. All of us from the West are aware of the critical shortage of boxcars. The junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is more fully informed on this question than perhaps any other single Member of the Senate. The basic difficulty in the boxcar shortage is lack of steel. In recent testimony before the Appropriations Subcommittee on the Department of the Interior the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] will recall statements made by virtually every expert in the field to the effect that delivery dates on heavy equipment like generators, transformers, and conductors are presently being quoted by manufacturers as from 18 months to 2½ years following placement of the order. These facts are germane to our present discussion, because the proponents of H. R. 1 are basing their contention that tax reductions are essential on July 1, partly, on the alleged necessity for bolstering purchasing power.

Opponents of the July 1 date, on the other hand, have asserted as one point in their argument that this reduction will have an inflationary effect. My own belief is that the additional purchasing power will not have a material effect in the direction of bolstering soft goods prices, but that it will have a definite tendency to force consumer durable and capital goods prices to higher levels. Or, to put it another way, there is no need on July 1 to inject into commercial arteries the additional $3,200,000,000 represented by the tax reductions in H. R. 1.

Referring back to the first part of my remarks, I stated that the proponents of H. R. 1 argue that tax reduction on July 1 is necessary to provide additional incentive for venture capital and managerial initiative. Let's examine that argument for a moment. I think we can best judge the validity of this assertion by reference to what is happening in the economy by way of capital investment and payment for managerial initiative as represented by corporate profits.

In the hearings before the Senate Finance Committee the distinguished chairman of that committee [Mr. MILLIKIN] quoted a very interesting set of figures, which are at least a partial reflection of what is happening in the economy by way of capital investments. He pointed out that in 1938 businessmen plowed back into their enterprises approximately $11,000,000,000; in 1941, $19,000,000,000; in 1943, at the peak of the war, $1,800,000,000; in 1945, $9,100,000,000; but in 1946, under present tax rates, $32,100,000,000. As measured by this plowback businessmen last year, under the rates of taxation which H. R. 1 seeks to cut on a straight percentage basis, certainly were not deterred in venturing their capital.

What I have just recited concerning plowback investment by businessmen demonstrates willingness of these men to invest in existing enterprises. Now how about investment in new enterprises? Are businessmen unwilling to risk capital in new ventures under present tax rates, as asserted by the proponents of this bill? Or put it another way—Must we reduce taxes on July 1 to induce businessmen to launch new enterprises—would it be disastrous to wait until January 1, 1948? Well, let's look at the record to see whether new ventures are being launched and if so, at what rate.

The latest data I have been able to obtain bearing on this question came from the Department of Commerce. The figures show, and I use round numbers, that from a low of approximately 2,830,000 firms in 1943, the number increased to 2,923,000 in 1944, to 3,224,000 in 1945, and to 3,550,000 in 1946; a net increase of about 700,000 firms between 1943 and December 31, 1946, and over 100,000 more than the prewar peak of September 1941. The number of new enterprises launched by the businessmen of this country certainly tends to contradict the contention that managerial initiative is being stifled by current tax rates.

I regret that I do not have current figures on the number of new firms being launched, but I do have some related data which further bear out my contention that the Nation will not suffer economic collapse if tax reductions are initiated on January 1, 1948, rather than on July 1. I quote now from the United States Department of Commerce April issue of Survey of Current Business.

"Based on reported actual outlays by a representative sample of business firms, expenditures for new plant and equipment in 1946 amounted to $12,100,000,000 (exclusive of agriculture). This total was almost double the $6,600,000,000 investment in 1945. Expenditures for new plant and equipment increased in each quarter of 1946. In the first half of the year they were at an annual rate of $10,000,000,000, this rate increasing to $14,000,000,000 in the second half of the year.

"Present indications from reports of business firms on their anticipated expenditures are that the annual rate of $14,000,000,000 of outlays for new plant and equipment will be maintained in the first half of 1947."

I recognize that there are other indices which are needed to round out the picture on this point, but certainly the funds businessmen plow back into their own enterprises and the number of new enterprises launched are a measure of the confidence they have in their ability to earn a satisfactory return on that investment. May I emphasize again that the total plow-back investment in 1946 was almost twice as great as that in 1941 and almost three times as great as that in 1938, that the number of new enterprises launched in 1946 was at the highest rate in our history, that the outlay for new plant and equipment in the first half of 1947 will be over two times the 1945 rate, and that this tremendous investment was achieved under tax rates which the proponents of the pending bill assert are so high as to stifle the incentive to invest.

In 1946 corporate profits after taxes were running at the rate of approximately $12,000,000,000, over three times the $3,500,000,000 rate obtaining in 1939. One might well ask the question, "How much incentive do businessmen have to have to induce them to put forth their best efforts in managerial initiative?" If three times the 1939 rate is not sufficient, what should it be? Four, five, six times? And if that is the amount of incentive that is required, what must they charge for their products and how much additional purchasing power would the majority party have to inject into the commercial stream to satisfy this insatiable appetite?

From time to time in the committee hearings on H. R. 1 it was asserted that prices are high because business and industry are being taxed so heavily by the Federal Government. It is true that taxes must be considered as a cost of doing business and that the finished article must bear its proportionate part of those taxes. It seems to me that it would be helpful in weighing the validity of this argument to attempt a rough calculation as to what part of the price for goods and services generally is represented by taxes.

In 1946 corporate earnings before taxes amounted to between twenty and twenty-two billion dollars. Let's assume for purposes of illustration that profits before taxes represent about 10 percent on gross sales. Since gross corporate earnings in 1946 were $22,000,000,000, that would mean that gross sales aggregated roughly $220,000,000,000. Corporations paid roughly $11,000,000,000 in taxes out of earnings. This is about 5 percent of gross sales. If we were to eliminate corporation taxes entirely, therefore, the effect upon aggregate sales prices would be about 5 percent. Again I recognize that these are very rough calculations, but I do want to point out that the argument that the present high level of prices is due to taxation certainly needs some careful analysis before we accept it as gospel.

I already have dwelt to some extent on the contentions, pro and con, that tax reduction on July 1 will or will not be inflationary. In his speech on Wednesday, May 21, the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. MILLIKIN] addressed himself to a point made by the Secretary of the Treasury in committee hearings. The Secretary maintained that July 1 is not an appropriate time to institute tax reductions. The Secretary either stated or implied that this reduction would tend to put pressure under prices and would not materially expand the output of goods and services. The chairman disagreed with this point of view, stating that we now have 2,400,000 people unemployed, whereas during 1943 we had less than 700,000 unemployed. He cites present unemployment as evidence that we are not using our manpower and plant facilities to capacity. I agree that this bit of evidence taken by itself might lead one to agree with his conclusion. There are a number of additional factors, however, equally germane to the point, which must be considered in concert with this statement.

Before I mention some of these additional factors, however, I would like to point out that students of the subject maintain that in a peacetime economy of full production, it is inevitable that from two to two and a half million people will be unemployed. Economists maintain that this is frictional unemployment—people shifting from one job to another, people temporarily out of work because of plant overhauling, and people who for a temporary period are simply not interested in finding or holding a job. I am not prepared to argue this point vehemently, but am inclined to the view that the experts in the field know whereof they speak.

I mentioned that there are factors other than this frictional unemployment which have a direct bearing on the issue. I won't attempt to enumerate all of them, but do wish to cite at least two indexes which tend to indicate that our industrial machine is rolling at substantially full capacity. Production of steel in past weeks has fluctuated between 90 and 95 percent of capacity as compared to an average of 97 percent in 1941. Production of automobiles, production of railway cars, which I have already mentioned, and a host of durable consumer and capital goods are directly dependent upon the availability of steel. Electrical energy is currently being consumed at approximately 150 percent of the average 1941 rate. Other sources of industrial energy, coal and oil, are being produced and consumed at approximately 130 percent of the 1941 rate, and the Federal Reserve index of physical volume of production, using the 1935–39 average as 100, in the month of April was 185. None of these factors alone, nor even all of them together, prove conclusively that we are utilizing our industrial machine to capacity, but they certainly provide significant evidence pointing in that direction.

The study I have made of the problem, although I admit that that study is not exhaustive, certainly warrants these conclusions: The infusion of $3,200,000,000 provided by H. R. 1 will not have a material effect in the direction of bolstering prices in consumer soft-goods lines. It will place additional pressure under the prices of consumer durable goods, and it is not needed as a hypo to venture capital and managerial initiative. In addition, there is evidence that the basic limitation on expanded production is not lack of capital and initiative, but rather is shortage of manpower, materials, and industrial energy.

I now wish to discuss as briefly as I can the second question I raised at the opening of my remarks: If July 1 were the time to institute tax reductions, is H. R. 1 the equitable way to doing it?

H. R. 1 partially destroys the progressivity of the graduated income-tax scale. The rate schedule has grown up over the years as a reflection of a basic concept in Federal tax policy, namely, the ability to pay. At the outset I wish to have it understood, that I realize that ability to pay in and of itself, is not the sole criterion in a sound tax policy. There are other factors such as this: The tax paid by the individual should be in proportion to the benefit he receives from services performed for him by the Government. Tax experts in the Senate such as the distinguished Senators from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] will think of others. Certainly the ability to pay, coupled with these other factors, is an important principle in a sound Federal tax policy.

A moment ago I stated that H. R. 1 partially destroys the progressivity of the 1939 rates, in that it narrows the gap between the 1939 rates and rates it proposes, far more for taxpayers with incomes over $5,000 than it does for those with incomes under $5,000. For example, the bill narrows the gap between present and 1939 rates for the individual with $5,000 by 3.2 percent, for the individual with $50,000 income by 9.9 percent, and for the individual with $100,000 by 12.6 percent.

To demonstrate the effect of this change upon rates of take-home pay, I have had prepared a short table which sets forth for specified amounts of income the dollar increase and the percentage increase for various income brackets.

The committee bill increases the take-home pay of a married couple with no dependents in the following amounts:

$1,200 yearly income—take-home pay is increased 1 percent.

$1,500 yearly income—take-home pay is increased 2 percent.

$5,000 yearly income—take-home pay is increased 4.2 percent.

$25,000 yearly income—take-home pay is increased 11.4 percent.

The take-home pay of a man earning $50,000 is increased 19.7 percent, the man with $100,000 income, 34.2 percent, the man with $300,000 income, 57.4 percent.

Families with incomes of less than $5,000 receive under the committee bill an increase in take-home pay of 4 percent or less. Families with $300,000 of income, over 57 percent.

I thought it would be interesting to apply these increases in take-home pay to the situation in my own State, the State of Washington. The latest figures I have been able to obtain show that in 1943, 908,730 taxpayers in the State of Washington earned under $5,000 a year. One hundred taxpayers earned over $100,000 a year, and six taxpayers earned over $300,000 a year. In my State, therefore, the committee bill increases the take-home pay for almost one million people by less than 5 percent. It increases the take-home pay for one hundred people by over 34 percent, and for six people increases the take-home pay by over 57 percent.

To me these figures demonstrate rather dramatically who benefits in my State by the committee bill.

I would like to insert the complete table in the RECORD:

Increase in take-home pay under Senate Finance Committee bill at specified rates of net income before personal exemption

[Adapted from table XI–B, comparison of spendable income under present law, House bill, and Finance Committee bill, p. 5584, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 21, 1947]

Net income before personal exemption	Spendable income after tax under—		Increase in dollars	Percentage increase
	Present law	H. R. 1 as amended
$1,200	1,162	1,173	11	1
$1,500	1,405	1,433	28	2
$2,000	1,810	1,867	57	3.1
$5,000	4,202	4,361	159	4.2
$25,000	15,918	17,734	1,816	11.4
$50,000	25,205	30,164	4,959	19.7
$100,000	36,872	48,716	11,844	34.2
$300,000	65,435	102,995	37,559	57.4

At this point I quote from the remarks of the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, as shown on page 5590 of the RECORD:

"Some critics of the bill allege that the percentage of the relief given to those in the lower brackets should be even greater. Usually this conclusion is reached by pointing out that the percentage reductions provided in H. R. 1, as amended, are not the same as the percentage increases which took place in the individual income-tax burdens between 1939 and 1945. It is alleged that tax rates should go down in the same manner as they went up during the war.

"Behind this argument lurks the assumption that the rate structure of 1939 was an ideal one. This is highly questionable. The rates applied to upper-bracket incomes in 1939 were extremely high. They represented the end product of a determined effort to convert the individual income tax into a device for the redistribution of wealth. In their desire to attain this objective, the proponents of the rate structure developed during the 1930's tended to pay far too little attention to the problem of maintaining managerial initiative and an adequate flow of venture capital. For this reason it is not supportable to use the 1939 rate structure as a basis for comparison."

On this assertion by the distinguished chairman of the committee I have two comments to make. First, if the real purpose of H. R. 1 is to revise the entire individual income-tax structure, then I think in all fairness this should be clearly stated, and additionally, I think that the hearings should have been held in the light of this objective. The House concluded its hearings on H. R. 1 in 2 days. I sincerely doubt that so complicated a problem as the progressivity of the income-tax schedule can equitably be disposed of in such summary fashion.

My second comment has to do with the effect of the 1939 rates upon our economy, which the distinguished chairman has branded as, and I quote, "A determined effort to convert the individual income tax into a device for the redistribution of wealth. * * * The proponents of the rate structure * * * tended to pay too little attention to the problem of maintaining managerial initiative and an adequate flow of venture capital."

The years 1939 to 1947 are years in which this Nation has achieved the greatest level of prosperity in its history. I am not irresponsible enough to assert that we owe that high level of prosperity to the progressivity of the 1939 and subsequent tax schedules. I submit, however, that it would be just as logical and defensible for me to make this claim as it is for the proponents of H. R. 1 to assert, as have committee members and business representatives who appeared to offer testimony, that the lowering of individual income-tax rates in the twenties was responsible for the high level of prosperity achieved by the Nation in 1927, 1928, and 1929.

An outstanding commentator on a recent broadcast commented on the eclipse of the sun, which a number of eminent scientists traveled to South America to observe. He stated that there is a primitive Indian tribe in the jungle of South America who, in keeping with ancient tribal tradition and superstition, donned their war paint and shot arrows at the sun to kill the monster which was slowly obliterating the sun's rays. They were extremely gratified at the result of their efforts when the monster disappeared and the sun's rays once more beat down on the jungle.

To attribute the passing of the eclipse to the shooting of arrows by the Indian tribe in South America is just as logical as to attribute the prosperity of the late twenties to income-tax reduction. The events occurred in concert but the forces which produced the end result were far different.

So far I have discussed some—certainly not all—of the factors bearing on the question, "Is it imperative that July 1, 1947, rather than January 1, 1948, be chosen as the date on which to institute tax reductions?" In addition, I have commented on the effect of H. R. 1, as amended, upon the basic progression of present and prewar individual income-tax rates. In this discussion I have tried to indicate the bases upon which I reach two conclusions. First, the economy is not so anemic as to require a transfusion of $3,200,000,000 on July 1. The risk involved in making our tax reductions effective January 1, 1948, is more than counterbalanced by the risk of placing additional pressures under durable and capital goods prices—already dangerously high. The second conclusion is that H. R. 1, as amended, is objectionable because it is aimed at reducing the progressivity of basic individual income tax rates.

I have just voted for the Lucas amendment. The Lucas amendment gives the taxpayers of the Nation the assurance of tax reductions beginning January 1, 1948. By raising personal exemptions $100, it takes 4,700,000 small taxpayers off the Federal tax rolls, thereby giving those who need relief most the maximum relief possible in a tax reduction program. In addition, it gives some relief—admittedly small in the upper brackets—to each of the approximately 43,000,000 who will remain on the rolls. This provision will cost about $1,700,000,000 in revenue computed on a yearly basis. Over $1,500,000,000 of this, or about 92 percent, will go to individuals with incomes of less than $5,000 per year—about $140,000,000, or 8 percent, to individuals with incomes over $5,000 per year.

In addition, the Lucas amendment reduces surtax rates by two percentage points throughout the tax schedule. This provision will reduce Federal revenues by $1,156,000,000 per year. Of this, $788,000,000, or 68 percent, goes to taxpayers under $5,000—$368,000,000, or 32 percent, to taxpayers over $5,000. These two proposals will leave approximately $2,800,000,000 of additional purchasing power in the hands of the Nation's taxpayers—reducing Federal revenues by that amount. To me, it is highly significant that these two provisions, although they would cost in yearly revenues almost $1,000,000,000 less than the committee bill, give substantially the same amount of relief to taxpayers under $5,000.

If a major objective of tax reduction is to bolster purchasing power, here, then, is the way to do it at far less loss in revenues than under the committee bill. It was admitted in committee hearings and here on the floor of the Senate that taxpayers with incomes under $5,000 require greater relief, that they as a group have less of a backlog in savings, and hence will utilize most quickly for necessary purchases any funds left in their hands as a result of tax reductions.

The Lucas amendment achieves tax reduction by raising personal exemptions and reducing surtax rates uniformly. It, therefore, follows in reverse the general pattern utilized by the Congress in raising tax rates to their present level. It retains the basic progressivity of our tax schedule, which was constructed originally in conformity with the principle of ability to pay.

It may well be, as proponents of H. R. 1 assert, that progression in present surtax rates is too precipitous. This is a question which requires extensive study and consideration. Personally I believe that during the summer recess the Congress and the Treasury should undertake a careful and comprehensive study of this and related questions, including a long-term debt-retirement policy. At the proper time I will introduce a resolution incorporating my convictions on this subject.

The Lucas amendment contains an additional provision which I now allude to—the so-called Surrey plan dealing with splitting the family income. There exists a geographical inequality as a result of the fact that the community-property system existing in certain States, including the State of Washington, is recognized for tax purposes under Supreme Court decisions, so that division of community income between husband and wife in these States is recognized for tax purposes. As a result of this, at $5,000 net income, the tax in the community-property State is about 5 percent less; at $10,000 it is 15.7 percent less; at $15,000 it is 22 percent less; at $25,000, 28.9 percent less, and at $50,000 it is 25 percent less. Certainly a cardinal principle in Federal taxation should be equality, as between the tax burden imposed upon a citizen in one section of the country as compared with another.

Unless the inequities created by the community-property issue are resolved through some such proposal as that contained in the Lucas amendment, one of two things will occur—either the other 38 States will take action individually to remove this tax advantage, or these same States will take such action through their congressional representatives. Whether that action comes this year or next year or in the Eightieth Congress or in the Eighty-first Congress, I'm convinced that it will come. It seems to me, therefore, that the community-property States must realize that their congressional representatives are faced with a realistic problem—one on which the representatives from the 38 common-law States have the voting strength to decide the issue in their favor.

I wish to reserve further comment on this portion of the Lucas amendment for a future time. There are collateral issues which must be resolved before I can conscientiously support this provision.

In summary: Tax reductions as contained in H. R. 1 will put additional pressures under consumer durable and capital goods prices. Our industrial plant is being operated at what is, for all practical purposes, peak capacity. Under present rates of taxation businessmen in 1946 did plow back into their enterprises $32,000,000,000 of corporate earnings, thereby demonstrating their faith in their ability to obtain adequate returns on that investment, and new enterprises were launched at the highest rate in our history.

I believe tax reduction on a planned basis is essential. Individual tax reductions, however, are but a single part of the entire tax structure. No action in this area should be taken now which will jeopardize the comprehensive tax revision which should emanate from a thorough study of the fiscal relationships between local, State, and Federal tax policies, the elimination of duplicate taxation, the problem of orderly debt retirement, and related issues.

Institution of individual income-tax reduction on January 1, 1948, is preferable to July 1, 1947. Any reduction in individual income taxes, even on January 1, 1948, should conform to the basic pattern employed by the Federal Government in increasing these taxes. The Lucas amendment meets this criterion and leaves greater leeway than does H. R. 1 for debt retirement and the losses in revenue which will inevitably follow any general overhauling of the tax structure.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, after line 20, it is proposed to add the following:

That in the administration of the Federal income-tax laws with respect to the income of married persons who are residents of the State of Arkansas, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized and directed to apply such laws in the same manner as in the case of married persons who are residents of Oklahoma, Texas, and other States in which the law of community property exists.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I suggest that the amendment is out of order, that it would affect a part of the bill which has been passed upon and accepted as a committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as read applies only to the State of Arkansas.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Constitution provide that taxes shall be uniform throughout the United States?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not pass upon the constitutionality of the amendment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. It is an amendment to a committee amendment, and I suggest it is out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is to the text of the bill, on page 11, after line 20, an addition to the bill itself. The point of order is not well taken.

Mr. FULBRIGHT obtained the floor.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield for a question.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I suggest to the Senator if he will include the State of West Virginia he might get some support.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I accept that amendment to the proposal.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope the Senator's generosity will not be fully exhausted by including the State of West Virginia. I should like to impose upon the good nature of the Senator by asking him to include the State of Maryland.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I shall take that under consideration.

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance, made two points. He objected to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] primarily because it would cost so much. He said it would cost anywhere from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. My amendment meets that objection very well. It will cost between four and five million dollars. That is an amount which could be easily absorbed in the bill without any difficulty whatever.

The second point which the Senator from Colorado made a few moments ago was that the States which are adjacent to the community-property States are the ones which suffer the most from the unjustified discrimination which exists in our tax system. I think Arkansas is the only State which is adjacent to three community-property States. I know of no other State which suffers from proximity to three community-property States. We have Louisiana and Texas on the south and west, and Oklahoma on the west. So that it seems to me there is a very special reason why the Senator from Colorado would be willing to accept the amendment, and incorporate it as a committee amendment. I am sure his sense of justice is so offended by this discrimination, and the peculiar conditions surrounding Arkansas, that he does not wish to continue this grave injustice to the people of Arkansas.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I regret that I cannot accept the amendment. I should like to keep Arkansas in the Union. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment presented by the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. PEPPER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief statement with reference to the proposed legislation.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer, if the Senator wants to speak just before the bill is finally voted upon.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not care to delay the offering of the amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. I thought the Senator was under the impression that there would be no other amendment offered.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I was not under that impression, because I saw the Senator from Florida rise.

Mr. President, I have voted against all the amendments proposed to the bill, including those offered by the Senators from Arkansas and by the Senator from Illinois, because I have reached the conclusion that it is my duty, in my individual capacity as a Senator, in the light of all the conditions existing in our country, to vote against the bill now under consideration. Therefore, I shall cast my vote against the final passage of the bill.

I realize that every man and every woman would like to have tax reduction. I myself should like to have tax reduction. I should enjoy the exhilaration that would come to me from having to pay less taxes than I am now paying.

But in my judgment the country as a whole is not suffering from taxation, so far as the Federal Government is concerned. We are enjoying the greatest peacetime prosperity in the history of the United States. Our production is at an all-time peak, even greater than during the war, at a time when there was a concentration of all our resources to produce for war purposes. Our national income is twice as great as it has ever been in times of peace, and greater than it was during the peak year of the war.

My theory as an individual, as well as a legislator, has always been that it is wise to reduce one's indebtedness while he is making large profits and has an enormous income. No sound business, no well-organized corporation, ever reduces its income at a time when it can wisely pay off its indebtedness, if it has indebtedness. There is not a corporation in the United States, in my judgment, which would reduce its income at the time when its indebtedness was greater than it had ever been in the history of the corporation.

The United States Government is an enormous corporation, the largest in the world, and I have a very profound conviction that sound financial policy demands that we pay off our debt as rapidly as possible. If we were to pay it at the rate of $5,000,000,000 a year it would require 50 years to discharge our public debt. If we paid it off at the rate of two and a half billion dollars a year it would require a hundred years to discharge our public debt. We cannot anticipate nor imagine what emergency may overtake us in the next 50 years or in the next 100 years, that may interfere with the discharge of our public debt for a period of years. I do not believe that we can safely or wisely hand this debt down to the generations that are yet unborn. So that, in the exercise of a sound business policy, of ordinary prudence, while our income is great, I feel that all we can save out of a reduction in governmental expenses ought to be devoted to a reduction of the national debt. If this Congress should be able to save four and a half billion dollars, or even $6,000,000,000 below the estimate of the President's budget, in the expenses for the fiscal year, I believe that a reduction of our public debt by an equivalent amount would do more to stimulate business, to stimulate the confidence of the American people and the American community in the honesty and integrity, financial and otherwise, of our Government, and in its good faith in discharging its obligations, than a mere paltry individual reduction in the amount that prosperous men will be required to pay during the next year or two by the bill which is now pending before the Senate of the United States.

So, Mr. President, feeling that way about our financia situation insofar as the Government is concerned, I could not consistently vote for any amendment that enlarged the cut in national income; which is true of all the amendments we have thus far voted upon.

For the reasons which I have indicated, much as I regret not to go along in the program of tax reduction, I cannot vote for the pending bill. I am speaking only my own convictions. I do not represent anybody else here, except myself and those who have honored me with membership in this body. I do not know that my vote will meet with their approval. I have had no way to take a Gallup poll or any other form of census to ascertain the wishes of my people in the State of Kentucky upon this subject. I imagine they feel, as I do, that they would like to have a tax reduction; they would no doubt welcome it, and if I cannot defend my position in behalf of the financial integrity of the Nation, in behalf of lifting the burden of debt from our backs and from the backs of our children and of our grandchildren, after I shall have cast this vote, I shall of course take the consequences of that inability.

I feel very deeply upon the subject, and therefore I shall cast my vote against the pending bill when it comes to its final passage in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. —. (a) Section 23 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(bb) Tuition and incidental expenses of teachers: In the case of an individual employed as a teacher in any public or private school, all expenses for tuition, books, laboratory fees and equipment, living, travel, and other incidental expenses, necessarily incurred while pursuing at any institution of learning a course of instruction required for continuance of his employment or for advancement in grade or salary and approved by appropriate school authority for such purpose."

(b) The amendment made by this section shall be applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I think Senators are aware that the school teachers of the country are among the most underpaid segment of our professional people. At the hearings on this amendment, which I presented to the Senate Finance Committee, the committee did not reject the amendment; it simply did not act upon it. I presented figures showing that in 1946, public school teachers, in the United States received an average of about $2,000 a year, in comparison with $2,596 for Federal Government employees, and $2,185 for factory workers. Teachers' salaries failed to keep pace with the cost of living, which has risen about 55 percent since January 1941. In 1946–47, about 48 percent of all the teachers got under $2,000 a year, and about 10 percent, under $1,200.

We know that the teachers of the country are required to take some kind of course in the summer, in order to keep themselves professionally up to date. This is a burdensome expense to the ordinary school teacher. The National Education Association made a study of the subject, and found that the average expense incurred by the teacher in taking the summer courses was $200 a year. To require a group, 10 percent of whom make less than $100 a month—they work only about nine months a year—and practically a majority of whom make only $2,000 a year, to expend $200 of their money in the summer, trying to keep themselves up to standard so they can better serve the children of America, imposes a burdensome expense upon them.

There have been various bills introduced in the Congress—I hope the best of them will pass—to provide aid to the school system and to raise the salaries of the teachers; but that legislation has not yet been enacted. The amendment, if adopted, would afford a little relief to the burdened school teacher by making the expenditure incurred in the summer taking training required by the school system of which the teacher is a part a deductible item of expense. It would be only a few dollars; but a few dollars to a person in those income groups means a great deal.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Let me ask the Senator a question. If a doctor attends a professional meeting, the meeting of a medical association of some kind, his purpose in going is really to get a certain amount of information. It is to him educational. It helps him in his profession and in his business. Is he not allowed certain deductions?

Mr. PEPPER. The doctor in such cases—and I have here the ruling by the Internal Revenue Bureau—is entitled to a deduction for such expenses.

Mr. HILL. Then as I understand, really in principle what the Senator is seeking to do is to have the same deductions allowed to a school teacher as are allowed to doctors and other professional people.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. HILL. Certainly Senators know that so far as our business friends are concerned, when they come to Washington on business or when they go to New York on business or wherever they go on business, the expense of the trip is deductible, is it not?

Mr. PEPPER. If they had to go to an institute, and spend a week or two, or a month, in order to further the interest of their businesses that also would be a deductible expense.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. It is true, is it not, that in a great many States the attendance of teachers at the summer school is absolutely compulsory, under pain of losing their teacher's certificate?

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to read the language of the amendment, because it applies only in case they are required to take the training. The amendment reads as follows:

Tuition and incidental expenses of teachers: In the case of an individual employed as a teacher in any public or private school, all expenses for tuition, books, laboratory fees and equipment, living, travel, and other incidental expenses, necessarily incurred while pursuing at any institution of learning a course of instruction required for continuance of his employment or for advancement in grade or salary and approved by appropriate school authority for such purpose.

In other words, it does not give the teachers a privilege. The amendment deals only with those expenses incurred when they are taking the kind of educational training they are required to take in order to hold their positions or to obtain an advance in grade or salary.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I wish to compliment the Senator upon submitting his amendment, and I join with him wholeheartedly.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator. I am glad to have his valuable support.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I want clearly to understand the amendment. The amendment would not relieve school teachers from the payment of income taxes simply because of their profession, would it?

Mr. PEPPER. No; it would not.

Mr. McCLELLAN. As I understand the Senator's amendment, it allows them expenses which they are required by law or by school authorities of the educational system to make in order to continue to serve in their capacity as teachers.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator has stated the substance of the amendment with absolute correctness. The expenses in question would simply be a deductible item. The reason why the amendment is necessary is because the Internal Revenue Bureau by decision in 1921 ruled, in O. D. 892, as follows:

The expenses incurred by school teachers in attending summer school are in the nature of personal expenses incurred in advancing their education and are not deductible in computing net income.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I do not criticize the decision made by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, but it seems to me they have approached the question in an unusual way. We were speaking a while ago of doctors. A doctor can deduct expenses incurred for subscriptions to medical journals and things of that kind. What the Senator is seeking to do now is to provide similar deductions for the poorest paid group in the United States in relation to the service they render the country; is that not true?

Mr. PEPPER. That is absolutely correct. The Senator has correctly described them as among the poorest paid groups in our country. I dare say no other group which performs so important a function is so poorly paid as the public and private teachers. The amendment applies to both public and private teachers.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator from Florida have any knowledge as to whether or not in spite of the ruling of the Internal Revenue Bureau, a case was ever presented and carried before the Court of Tax Appeals to obtain a determination?

Mr. PEPPER. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that I think the teachers have simply accepted the ruling of the Internal Revenue Bureau, except that the National Education Association, which strongly approves my amendment, has been trying to have the ruling changed for some time. I have a statement in the RECORD from the National Education Association.

Mr. TYDINGS. It seems to me that if the prima facie evidence presented by the Senator from Florida were presented to the proper court which we have designated to rule on such cases, it would find it difficult to adjudicate against the philosophy of the Senator's amendment. The reason I asked the question was that I cannot conceive that such a court would allow medical and other men travel expenses and would deny them to the school teachers. I shall support the Senator's amendment, and even if we find later on that we have overlooked some point in it, which I doubt very much we have, the conferees will be in a position to correct it. I think the Senator has made out a just case, and I think we ought to give the amendment the support it merits.

Mr. PEPPER. I am very grateful for the kind words uttered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I hope the Senator's amendment will be agreed to. I think the Senator from Maryland has made a very apt suggestion, which is that the amendment should go to conference and there the conferees will have an opportunity to sit down and, if there are any "bugs," as we say, in it, they will be able to pick them out, and if any change or modification needs to be made, they can make it. But certainly, to my mind, the amendment presents a case so worthy and so just that the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. TYDINGS. The amount of money involved is infinitesimal.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes, the amount of money involved is infinitesimal. I was about to read three or four decisions which have already been rendered by the Internal Revenue Bureau, which I think, in principle, are clearly the same kind of decisions that we ask for in the amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think the Senator's amendment is commendable, but I was wondering whether it might be discriminatory in character. I was hoping it might be made broader. Is it not true that most professional men, ministers, doctors, and engineers perhaps voluntarily, but sometimes are required by their firms or by others to increase their knowledge by attending technical conventions or educational conventions. Can such individuals deduct expenses in connection with attendance upon such conventions?

Mr. PEPPER. I will say that I think they are clearly covered.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wanted to have that made clear so there might be no discrimination involved.

Mr. PEPPER. These are the decisions I presented before the Finance Committee:

SUMMARY OF DECISIONS OF THE BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE PERTINENT TO EDUCATIONAL EXPENSES OF TEACHERS

1. Travel expenses of a salaried employee who lived in one city and traveled to and from his residence to work in another city.

(a) "In short, every necessary item of expense in conducting business, incurred primarily because of and solely in the furtherance of the business engaged in, is held to be an ordinary and necessary business expense."

(b) The test is the freedom of choice of the individual in occurring the expense. In this case he can't set up his residence wherever he feels like. The result is a matter personal to him. It is not a matter undertaken for business purposes (Bureau of Internal Revenue, C. B. No. 1, April-December 1919, 8-19-317, S. 1048, p. 102).

2. "The expenses incurred by school teachers in attending summer school are in the nature of personal expenses incurred in advancing their education and are not deductible in computing net income" (Bureau of Internal Revenue Bul. No. 17-21, April 27, 1921, 17-21-1595, O. D. 892).

3. (a) Necessary expenses incurred by a member of a professional association in sending a representative to its annual convention for the sole purpose of furthering the business interests of such member are allowable deductions (I. T. 2602).

(b) Amounts expended by physicians in attending medical conventions are deductible (Cecil M. Jack v. Commissioner, 13 B. T. A. 726, C. B. X-2, 35).

(c) Amounts expended by clergymen to attend general conventions of their church are deductible (appeal of Marion D. Shutler, 2 B. T. A. 23 C. B. X-2, 65).

(d) Expenses of a professor of chemistry in connection with carrying on his profession and attending scientific meetings and conventions are "ordinary and necessary business expenses." (Alexander Silverman v. Commissioner, 6 B. T. A. 1328-C. B. X-2, 65).

(e) A professional man is entitled to deduct a reasonable allowance covering depreciation actually sustained on part of his library necessary and used wholly in pursuit of his profession (Bulletin F, revised January 1931, p. 24).

(f) In the case of research work of a teacher in college without remuneration, depreciation on books and instruments purchased for use in research work and expenses incurred in attending meetings of scientific societies are deductible. Expenditures for plates and figures for illustrative purposes in publications of the results of his investigation may or may not be deductible depending on whether the expense is an ordinary one or a capital expenditure (C. B. X11-14-6111, G. C M. 11654).

4. Expenses for traveling, meals, and lodging of a university professor while teaching temporarily away from his home city are deductible (C. B. V111-2, July-December 1929, V111-29-4277, I. T. 2481).

5 Dues paid by teachers to professional societies, prices of subscriptions for education journals of the profession, travel, meals, and lodging incurred while attending teachers' conventions, if not reimbursed, are ordinary and necessary expenses which are deductible, the cost of technical books purchased specifically in connection with their professional work is a capital expenditure and is not deductible (C. B. 1941-1 January-June 1941, 1941-6-10589, I. T. 3448).

Mr. President, I think the nature of the amendment is clear, and I hope the Senate will see fit to adopt it.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I will say to the distinguished senior Senator from Florida that I regret I cannot accept the amendment at this time. I read an excerpt from the remarks of the Secretary of the Treasury in his appearance before the House Ways and Means Committee on Monday, May 19:

> In addition to the tax matters of broad and general importance to which I have briefly referred, there are a substantial number of needed technical adjustments of considerable significance that have accumulated during the war years. The Revenue Act of 1942 was the last piece of major legislation in which the Congress undertook to go into such problems to any great extent. Many of these matters pose policy questions of some magnitude and their proper solution will frequently involve technical problems of considerable difficulty and complexity. Among the more important of these items are such matters as the treatment of (a) war losses—

He specifies a number of matters, and then he comes to this provision—> occupational expenses, a problem which involves primarily the difficulty of drawing satisfactory lines between the nondeductible personal expenses of individuals and their deductible business outlays.

There are inequities in the law, but I am afraid that the amendment would plant another inequity or bring about another disparity between groups.

I notice that the amendment itself is rather broad. It allows all expenses for tuition, books, laboratory fees, and equipment. Much money could be spent for such purposes. There is no limitation on living and travel. One could travel to Europe. There are no limitations on the travel or incidental expenses. I am afraid, I will say to the Senator, that the amendment could bring about quite a large bill. But that is not what I consider primarily important.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Just a moment, please. I am suggesting that this is one of that large number of subjects which the Treasury recognizes should be gone over in relation to other problems of the same kind, and brought into coordination with such problems. The Treasury has taken the initiative in bringing the matter and related problems to the attention of the House Ways and Means Committee. I can assure the Senator that I shall be actively interested in keeping this matter before that committee and also before the Senate Finance Committee. My personal feeling is that there is much merit to the proposal, as there is much merit to other forms of deduction which are disallowed in connection with business expenses.

Mr. PEPPER. I was about to ask the Senator if the law which permits the deduction of expenses incurred by business executives limits the amount of the deduction.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I have heard that some of the business deductions which are being claimed and allowed are perfectly fantastic. I am not in favor of that. I should like to see this whole subject put on some uniform basis, so that everyone may know whether or not his expenses are business or personal.

Mr. PEPPER. I am merely making the observation that the law which permits business expenses to be deducted does not limit the amount of the deduction. It is left to the Treasury to determine whether the claimed deduction is reasonable or not, and the same rule should apply in this case.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I think that point is well taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold for a moment his suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I apologize for taking at this juncture a moment of the time of the Senate, not on the amendment or on the bill itself. I do so because when the bill is finally voted upon no doubt there will be such confusion in the Chamber that it will be impossible for me to say what I now wish to say about another matter. I am addressing my remarks to the leadership of the majority.

There has been great confusion and discussion, and some shifting of position, with respect to the next piece of legislation which is to come before the Senate after the disposition of the pending bill.

We all know that the present law with reference to rent controls will expire on the 30th of June, about 1 month from now. The closer that date is approached the more chaos and confusion will naturally exist among both landlords and tenants as to what is going to happen on the 30th of June. We certainly desire to have no hiatus similar to that which occurred last year in the matter of reimposing price controls generally. After a period of 2½ months when there were no controls it was impossible to resume the situation which existed on the 30th of June when the law expired. So I am expressing the hope to the majority leader and those who are associated with him in controlling the program of the Senate that following the passage of the pending bill it will be the program to proceed immediately to the consideration of the rent-control bill.

I realize that there are other bills with respect to which Senators are pressing for action. I know how anxious the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is to bring up the treaties which have been unanimously reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I share his anxiety. I think it is very important that we dispose of those treaties at the very earliest possible date, because of the effect of such disposition upon the stability of the world. In my judgment it is a crucial matter. But that must be done in an executive session.

I hope that next week we may be able to reach the consideration of those treaties; but assuming that we shall not reach the treaties as the next order of business, I earnestly hope that, in spite of any controversy over what legislation shall come up next, and in spite of the anxiety of Members to obtain action upon their respective bills, we shall not longer delay consideration of the rent-control bill.

Several weeks ago the House passed a rent-control bill. The Senate committee has reported what I consider to be a much better bill than that passed by the House. I assume that the Senate bill will be considered up to the point of final disposition, and that the Senate bill will then be substituted for the House bill, so that it may go to conference. All that requires time, and we ought not to wait until the last week or two before the law expires to inaugurate whatever resumption of rent controls we wish to inaugurate following June 30.

I would not presume to offer suggestions to the Senator from Maine or other Members of the majority except for the fact that from day to day we have been told that this bill, that bill, or some other bill was to follow the tax bill. I am earnestly hoping that it has been decided, or will be decided, by the majority that the rent-control bill is to be next in order for consideration.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. There is some justification for the rather soft impeachment by the Senator from Kentucky. There has been some confusion as to what bills should be taken up, and in what order. It was very definitely understood upon this side that immediately upon the conclusion of the tax bill the so-called Bulwinkle bill would be taken up. We have been obliged to change that program because of the necessary absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who filed minority views, and who should be given consideration in fixing the time for discussion and action upon that bill. His absence has necessitated a change.

It is my purpose, or the purpose of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK]—one or the other of us—upon the disposition of the tax bill this afternoon, to move that the so-called rent-control bill be made the unfinished business. It is anticipated or hoped, that either today or tomorrow that bill can be disposed of. But it will be before the Senate later this afternoon and tomorrow. I very much cherish the hope—although I have not great courage in stating it—that we may dispose of the rent-control bill with discussions today and tomorrow, although it is now growing late.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator from Maine has said. Of course, the Senator knows my views as to the merits of the rent-control bill and the so-called Bulwinkle bill. Aside from the illness of any Senator or the convenience of any Senator, upon the relative merits of the two proposals, the rent-control bill ought to receive first consideration. However, by whatever method the decision has been arrived at, I am very glad to know that it is to be the next bill to receive consideration.

Mr. WHITE. It is definitely the program of the majority side to proceed to the consideration of the rent-control bill immediately upon the disposition of the tax bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. I think the majority leader should suggest also that this program was arrived at partly for the convenience of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], who desired to go home to fulfill an engagement of long standing, and could not be back until next Tuesday. So far as I had anything to say, I was very happy to accommodate the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, by whatever method of elucidation or comparison the rent-control bill takes precedence over the Bulwinkle bill, I think it is a just consummation, although I regret that the priority of rent-control legislation is brought about by the inconvenience of any Senator, either now or tomorrow. As between the two subjects, I think there can be no comparison, on the basis of importance to the American people, of immediate action upon rent-control legislation.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. I may say to the Senator that I am anxious to dispose of the rent-control bill. It has been on the calendar since the 3d of April. It is an important measure. As the Senator from Kentucky has stated, the life of the present act expires on June 30. As the majority leader has said, we propose to make it the unfinished business of the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

I would not have broached the subject except for the apparent uncertainty on both sides of the aisle as to what is to be taken up next. I merely wished to express my hope. I thank both the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. In justification of the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] who has filed minority views, he has been called away by illness in his family, and it was felt that we should accommodate him.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that; and I sympathize with the Senator from New Hampshire because of the illness in his family. I hope it will soon terminate in complete recovery.

Mr. WHITE. I join in that hope.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr CONNALLY. I will say to the majority leader and to the minority leader that I am very hopeful that they will arrange for an executive session at an early date. I have been given assurances that as soon as the tax bill is out of the way consideration will be given to an executive session on the nomination of Joe B. Dooley to be United States district judge for the northern district of Texas. His nomination was reported to the Senate on April 28, almost a month ago. I have not insisted on action, because I realized that the majority leader publicly called attention to the matter and suggested that it be taken up.

Mr. WHITE. I suggested that I would be glad to confer with the Senator most interested in the matter to see if some time could be agreed upon.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Maine is now talking to the Senator who is most interested in the matter.

Mr. WHITE. I thought the distinguished Senator from Kentucky was interested also. I wanted to see if some date could be agreed upon. I fully agree that these nominations should not stay on the calendar indefinitely; they should be disposed of just as promptly as may be possible.

REDUCTION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME-TAX PAYMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1), to reduce individual income-tax payments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. On this vote I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who is absent because of illness in his family, is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH]. If present and voting the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay" and the Senator from Rhode Island, if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], who is absent on official business, is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART]. If present and voting the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay" and the Senator from Tennessee, if present, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] are unavoidably detained.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is absent by leave of the Senate.

On this vote I announce the following pairs: The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]. If present, the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea," and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER]. If present, the Senator from Tennessee would vote "yea," and the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 47, as follows:

So Mr. PEPPER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. President, it is not my desire to delay the final vote on this bill. In referring to the bill a few minutes ago, the minority leader, stated that he has taken no Gallup poll in his State and that he did not know whether the bill would be popular or not. I do not pretend to be another Mr. Gallup, but I dare say that a vote against this bill will be somewhat unpopular today and in the immediate future. A cynic said to me recently that "this bill may be bad for the country but its good for me."

However, I have decided to vote against the bill. I shall do so because I envision this bill as another step along the road to a state which is nonexistent, the so-called state of normalcy.

As the distinguished former chairman of the Finance Committee, the esteemed Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], said the other day, the present state of the world, the chaos upon which we look in every direction, is not such as to assure us that in the United States we can maintain an island of health in what seems to be a sea of malignancy.

No, Mr. President; I think we are not justified in reducing the income of the Treasury at a time when uncertainty exists in our own country and in the whole world. I think we are not warranted in reducing the Government's income at a time when the Federal Reserve charts show that the inflationary spiral, although it flattened out in April, has not yet taken a downward turn. In my opinion, any tax reduction which is made at this time will result in a further so-called shot in the arm and a further stimulation of the economy at a time when we definitely do not need it, and when it may be indeed very dangerous.

Of course we all want to liquidate the war as quickly as possible but I warn the Senate that the assurance implied in this bill that everything is going to be all right is contrary to truth and the facts. It again illustrates that we have not fully comprehended the thorny road ahead.

So, Mr. President, it is my firm conviction that if we had at least delayed the effective date of this measure until January 1, 1948, instead of making it effective at the beginning of the fiscal year, we would be making some contribution to statesmanship and to a regard for the state of the Treasury, which the Senator from Kentucky has so graphically described as being of paramount necessity to this Nation and to the peoples of the world.

Let it be clearly understood that I do not advocate the present tax rates because I wish to maintain expenditures at a high rate. I am as conscious of the necessity for economy in Government as is any other Member of the Senate. But unlike my cynical friend, I am against this bill because I feel that it is not good for the country and it is therefore neither good for the people of my State nor for the people of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate for more than 2 or 3 minutes.

We boast of our eminence as a Nation in the world, of our strength, and of our resources. But, Mr. President, one of the essential requirements of a great and powerful state is a financial structure—her public credit—which is sound and which enjoys the confidence not only of her own people but of foreign peoples.

I shall not vote for this bill. I do not believe it is wise or that it is in the public interest at this time radically to reduce taxation. Already the chairman of the Finance Committee has promised that next year there will be a general revision of the whole tax structure, and at that time such revisions as are desirable can be made.

Mr. President, what is our present financial situation? Today the profits and incomes of our people are greater than they have ever been before in our history. That condition exists under present taxes. These enormous incomes and profits to business and dividends have been earned under the present tax laws. No reduction in taxation is required in order to make the people prosperous. No cut of Federal taxes has been required in order to make our people prosper. Today the people of the United States have in their pockets more money than they have ever had before in all their history. But, in addition, we also owe the biggest debt in the history of the world. We owe it to our own people. It is a debt of honor; it is a sacred debt. We speak of the war's being over, but the war is not over until we pay for it. The tremendous debt which now rests on us is a part of the war. It is an obligation to our own people. It must be refinanced and refunded from time to time; but if we do not begin to pay something of a substantial character on the national debt, we shall find that when we come to refund and renegotiate the bonds, many of the potential bond buyers will say, "They are not making any provision for paying the bonds which I already hold, so I will not buy any more until they do."

Mr. President, that may or may not happen, but it is a possibility.

I think that when the people of the United States have in their pockets more cash money than they have ever had before in their lives, when the Nation has the largest national income in history, and when at the same time it owes the greatest debt in history, then and there is the time to begin paying on the public debt, a debt of honor to our own people, a debt of honor to ourselves, a debt of honor to the cause for which we expended the life's blood of hundreds of thousands of our gallant young men.

So, Mr. President, without undertaking to elaborate on them, those three reasons are sufficient to make me believe that in voting against the bill I am doing the right thing for the country and for the people of the United States. Perhaps that may not appear to be the case until next year, but I am convinced that I am doing the right thing in the long run, from the long-range point of view, in regard to the stability and the soundness of the national finances and the national indebtedness, for it is of the most primary importance to the people of the United States and to the solvency of the Government that the Nation shall meet its obligations at home and abroad.

So, Mr. President, I shall vote "nay" on the final passage of the bill.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. I, too, shall vote against the pending bill. To me it seems that tax reduction at this time is placing the stamp of approval on the most unsound kind of national financial policy. The bill undoubtedly will be passed, because the majority is bent on tax reduction, regardless of its consequences, because they promised the people politically last fall that they would reduce taxes. But I venture to say that if the bill shall pass, we will not have one dime to pay on the national debt in the coming year. If we do not make a payment on the national debt, the very financial security of this Nation will be impaired. That, in turn, will lower the value of the dollar, and tax reduction will amount to nothing if the dollar goes to a point lower than its present value.

Mr. President, it seems to me that again we are about to start down the road to unsound national financing, and I hope the blame will be placed where it belongs. I intend to vote against the bill. I shall not elaborate, as what I might say has been so well said by the distinguished minority leader. His views I adopt as my own. I appreciate that a vote against tax reduction is not going to be politically popular, for everyone wants tax reduction, but I must compliment the majority side, or those of them who vote for tax reduction, because a lowering of taxes is going to be politically popular for at least a year or 18 months.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, we all want tax reduction but in the first remarks I made on the pending bill I said that whether any tax reduction should be made now was certainly debatable. I still feel that way about it. I am not yet convinced that this is the time to start reducing taxes, notwithstanding it might be the temporarily popular thing to do. At all times, when I was pressing for adoption of my amendments, that any time is the right time to do right and the time to rectify a wrong. I sought to have wrongs righted and to get relief if we are to make a reduction in taxes to those who most need relief.

We were told, "We cannot revise the law to do simple justice while reducing taxes, but we have to wait until we have a general revision bill." In my judgment we should have revision in order to establish an equitable base for taxes before we undertake to reduce taxes. A reduction of taxes without a prior or simultaneous revision to do equity and justice merely perpetuates existing injustices, and if we cannot pass a revision bill at this session of Congress, let us wait for the reduction until we can do the revising, and put the system on a sound, fair, and equitable plane.

Mr. President, I tried to help, by the amendments I offered, to make the bill a fair one, to make sound legislation out of it. I tried, with amendments which I supported and some I offered, to carry tax reduction, if we were to have it, to those who needed it most, to start at the right end of the scale and go upward, instead of starting at the wrong end and coming down. I wanted to make it so that there would be relief for the man who ought to have tax relief, if tax relief can be afforded at this time.

I do not care to take further time. I associate myself with my colleagues on this side of the aisle who have pointed out more forcibly than I can the situation and the reasons why we should defer tax legislation for at least another year, or until we can revise the law so as to eliminate the existing inequities, and then ascertain how much loss has been sustained by the Treasury, and how much we can lower taxes on a fair basis without perpetrating discrimination and an inequitable system.

We have this debt to pay—the war debt, Mr. President—and whether we like it or not, we cannot escape the responsibility. It is our patriotic duty to keep this Government solvent, and to do that it is essential that we pay high taxes while we have a high national income, and at the same time use every diligent effort to reduce the cost of government, and apply all excess revenue to the liquidation of the war debt. That is what any prudent man would do in his own business affairs, and we should not do less in the business and fiscal affairs of our Government.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I hesitate to speak at this late hour upon the subject now before the Senate, and my hesitancy is increased by my realization that, as a younger Member of the Senate, there is very little that I can add to the discussion of complex tax problems.

I believe, however, that the action which will be taken upon the pending bill, in a sense, will predetermine and limit the action we will take in this session and in the next session of the Congress upon every important governmental measure. It will affect governmental expenditures, reduction of debt, the establishment of a social program, and, finally, and more important than anything else, our international relationships.

I believe that the vote I cast today will predetermine the votes which I must cast in the future upon these issues, and in consideration of that fact, I will vote against the bill.

I wish to make it perfectly clear that I do not vote against the bill, because there is any doubt in my mind that the Republican majority will reduce expenditures to an extent which will permit tax reduction. I have faith that this will be done.

I have absolute confidence in the distinguished Senator from Colorado, chairman of the Committee on Finance, who has presented the bill. In my short service as a Member of the Senate there has been no one in whose judgment I have had more confidence. During the last 3 days I have voted against every amendment which has been presented, because I believed that if the bill should be passed, the measure which the Senator from Colorado and his committee had studied was the best bill that could be produced.

If there is any objection at all I would have to his argument, it arises from the fact that debt reduction is made secondary to tax reduction. One of the first votes I cast in this body was for an amendment resolving that a minimum of $2,600,000,000 should be paid upon the public debt, and that the proceeds from war surplus properties should be applied upon the public debt. I do not believe there will be another year in the immediate future when we will be able to make any substantial payment upon the public debt.

I should like to disassociate myself completely from those who oppose the bill because they want to maintain the present level of governmental expenditures. I am heartily in accord with the position which has been taken by the Republican majority and by the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], whose fight to reduce expenditures, I have followed and admired for many years. When the opportunity has been presented thus far, I have voted to reduce expenditures.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. With reference to the Senator's remark about wishing to dissociate himself from those who oppose the bill because they want to maintain the present level of expenditures, I take it the Senator from Kentucky was not referring to my position, because I wish to say to him that I have not expressed any such view, and, as a matter of fact, only one of the major appropriation bills has so far been voted on. I do not oppose the bill because I wish to maintain the present level of expenditures, because, Mr. President, I am for economy in Government. I also want to reduce the Federal debt.

Mr. COOPER. If I made an incorrect statement, I beg the Senator's pardon. But, I repeat, I am absolutely opposed to the position of those who desire to vote against the bill merely because they wish to retain the present level of governmental spending. Government expenditures must and will be reduced. The position of those who say that the President's budget must be maintained, and say at the same time that the debt must be reduced, is inconsistent, for they must know that no debt reduction can take place until there is a reduction of governmental expenditures and a budgetary surplus secured. I know further that the present high level of taxes cannot be maintained after this year, and I want to vote for reduction when I can consistently do so.

The chief reason for my opposition to this bill is based upon a factor which has not been discussed at any length during the debate. Two unknown factors have been commented on, the unknown factor of revenues and the unknown factor of expenditures. There is another unknown factor which I believe is more important than any that has been discussed. That unknown factor is the sum of the requirements and the demands which may be made upon this country during the remainder of this year, and in the next fiscal year, to implement our international policy.

I am very sorry that the administration, if it has information upon this subject, has not seen fit to give that information to the Congress and to the people of this country. I do not know whether or not such information is available, but the demands which have been made upon the Congress are portents of those that will yet be made. We have voted at this session to expend $400,000,000 in aid of Greece and Turkey and $350,000,000 to European and Balkan countries for relief. A few days ago, the distinguished ex-President of this country, Mr. Herbert Hoover, in whom we all have great confidence, said to a committee of the House that it will be necessary to spend at least $725,000,000 in the next fiscal year in foreign countries, particularly Germany and Japan, for their bare subsistence.

I want to call the attention of the body to the fact that this is only a negative expenditure, simply for subsistence. Mr. Hoover went on to say that we have a choice of three courses in Europe and Japan. We can withdraw from our commitments and ignore the chaos that would result; or second, we can continue our yearly expenditures of approximately $725,000,000, each year for subsistence purposes, draining our resources without the accomplishment of any positive rehabilitation; or else, third, we can undertake to assist our allies and the occupied countries of western Europe, for which we are responsible to become self-sustaining in order to eliminate this continual drain upon the American Nation, and to promote a healthy world economy.

So far as I am concerned, I believe that we embarked upon this program at least in 1941 when we entered the war. I do not believe it will be ended until we have assisted within reasonable limits, the nations of western Europe and certainly those who hold the seeds of democracy, to reestablish to some degree their economy. It must be done within reasonable limits, coordinated as efficiently as proposed by ex-President Hoover. It must be done within the limits of our own sound fiscal economy.

We have assumed a position of world leadership which we cannot ignore. It means that we must help to restore the economy of the shattered nations of western Europe, thus promoting eventually our own economic welfare. More important, it is the only hope of peace.

I do not want to be personal. I said a few minutes ago that I do not have any exhaustive knowledge of tax problems which we have discussed, for the subject of taxation is one that requires long and patient study. I do think that perhaps, in one instance, I may have certain knowledge which may not have been available to every other Member of this body. For at least 20 months I had the opportunity to see something of the destruction, something of the want, in those countries which now call upon us for aid and whose welfare affects our welfare. I have become convinced that there will be no final peace, there will be no restoration of the world's economy, until we exercise the full leadership that we have assumed. It seems to me that in this vote, if I vote for the pending measure, I shall have limited, perhaps precluded, the vote that I would want to give if these grave issues of international responsibility arise in the next fiscal year. It is idle to talk of peace, and our adherence to a world order, unless we are willing this year to make some sacrifice in terms of money to support it. I have decided to vote against the pending bill.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, like the distinguished Senator who has just spoken, I am reluctant to take any of the time of the Senate to discuss the pending measure, being merely a freshman Senator, and being not so deeply grounded in the principles of Federal taxation as many of those who are now present. I do feel, though, that my people in Florida will be expecting me to vote for reasonable tax reduction. That was my purpose when I came here, that was my platform when I ran for office, and I think that since I do not find it possible for me to vote for the pending measure, because I do not think it is a reasonable tax-reduction measure, it is imperative that I state at least briefly my reasons for casting my vote against the bill.

In the first place, I want to say that ever since I have been here I have been trying to build a predicate upon which I could support whatever tax-reduction bill came before the Senate. I voted for a reduction of $4,500,000,000 in the budget which reached us from the President. In the matter of voting on the only general appropriation bill which has come before us, I voted with the committee on each of the recommendations for cuts or reductions which they recommended to the Senate, except in four instances. My recollection is that there were 20 to 30 cuts which they recommended. I refer, of course, to the bill for the Labor Department, Federal Security Agency, the Public Health Service, and so forth, which has already cleared the Senate. But in looking at the pending measure, Mr. President and Senators, it seems to me that even a cursory investigation of it shows very clearly that it is a measure which will bring very great relief, substantial relief, to the large payers of income taxes, and will not bring, in anything like equal measure, relief to the millions of small income taxpayers in this Nation, who need the relief more badly than do those who pay in the larger brackets. I say that with reluctance, because I have a great deal of respect and appreciation for many of the things that have been accomplished by the Senate committee in its work upon the House bill; its postponement of the effective date, for instance; its reduction of the general tax cuts, so as to make the over-all reduction of revenue a much less substantial blow to the fiscal structure of the Nation. But on the question of just how these cuts are applied, I cannot agree with the philosophy of the distinguished committee. It is for that reason that I want to address myself briefly to that phase of the measure, the unequal application of the tax cuts as they appear in the pending bill, as between the well-to-do, who get the principal benefit of the cuts, and those who are not well-to-do, who get very little of the benefits of tax reduction.

Mr. President and Senators, if the Senate will bear with me, I should like them to turn, if they will, just briefly to two of the tabulations which appear in the committee report on this important measure, because I think the gist of the situation will appear, by reference to those two tabulations. The first is on page 2 of the committee report. I want to call the attention of Senators to the fact that it is not the percentage of reduction of the tax levied that counts so much; it is the reduction of the amount in actual dollars and cents which the taxpayer has to pay, that counts, insofar as he is concerned. That is the first thing which counts. The second is the percentage of his over-all income which he is able to save by reason of the reduction.

The two tables to which I shall refer relate to those two aspects of the matter.

The first table is on page 2. It is a comparison of the effective individual income-tax rates under present law, under H. R. 1 as passed by the House, and under the Senate Finance Committee bill. I call the attention of Senators, if they will, briefly, to only the last four columns in that particular tabulation. I hope Senators will examine them, because, when they do, they will see just exactly what is proposed to be done. First, with reference to a person drawing an income of $1,200, if Senators will go across the page, to the last four columns on the right, it will be seen that under the present law, the individual pays, on his income of $1,200, a percentage of tax amounting to 3.17, a little over 3 percent. As a matter of fact he pays $38, whereas under the pending bill he would pay 2.22 percent. He would effect the great saving of $11.40, which is 0.95 percent, less than 1 percent of his income, if the pending bill is passed. I am speaking now about the little taxpayer with an income of $1,200 who would have been excluded entirely from the necessity of paying an income tax if the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] raising the individual tax exemption from $500 to $600 had been adopted instead of having been rejected by the Senate. That small taxpayer, the first one whom we take, will receive a tax reduction of less than 1 percent, and I think, and I believe all Senators will agree, that it is a negligible percentage of reduction of his tax for that particular taxpayer.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. That would be less than $1; would it not?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is a reduction of $11.40, as I recall the amount.

If we go down to the $1,500 bracket and take the same figures, we will see that that taxpayer saves out of his whole income 1.9 percent, or less than 2 percent of his income.

Hurrying along, if we go down to the $2,000 bracket we will find that the taxpayer receiving $2,000 a year is saved by the pending bill less than 3 percent, or 2.85 percent of his entire income, if the bill goes into effect.

As we go on down the line, Mr. President and Senators, it will be seen how speedily the income-tax saving goes up as we come to the brackets where much more appreciable income is received, and it will be seen that it is in those brackets that much more appreciable relief in a percentage way is given by the pending bill. Let us go to the bracket, for instance, of the taxpayer receiving an income of $5,000. Note the figures there opposite the $5,000. Under the present law the percentage of tax which he pays is 15.96 percent. Under the pending bill it is 12.77 percent. He would save 3.19 percent of his entire income under the pending bill, as compared with less than 1 percent in the case of really small income earners of the Nation.

But that is not the worst of it, Mr. President and Senators. If we go down to the bracket of the taxpayer with an income of $10,000—and we must proceed hurriedly; we cannot consider them all, but the general pattern will follow through these remarks I am making—it will be noticed that that taxpayer will save under the pending bill 4.37 percent of his entire income as compared with the less than 1 percent saved by the person who receives an income of $1,200.

Going further down the table to the taxpayer who receives $20,000 per year—and now we are getting into the class of the well-to-do-people, it will be found that that taxpayer will save 6.4 percent of his entire income if the pending bill becomes law.

Going further down in the table to the taxpayer whose income is $30,000 a year, it will be found that he will save 7.98 percent, or practically 8 percent, of his entire income if the pending bill should become law.

Proceeding further to the taxpayer whose income is $60,000 a year—and now we are getting down to real money, to people who are making real money—it will be found that that taxpayer, instead of paying 53.15 percent of his income, as he is required to do under the present law, he will be obliged to pay only 42.52 percent of his entire income, or he will be saving 10.63 percent of his entire income.

Mr. President, I do not want to weary the Members of the Senate, but I want them to understand exactly what we are asked to do in this matter, and exactly what we will do if we adopt the bill. I am simply quoting from the figures furnished us by the committee in connection with the bill. The committee has been frank, the committee has been candid, but I have not heard any real discussion by the committee as to the disproportionate relief which is being given to the income taxpayers in the high brackets under the provisions of the pending bill as compared with the income taxpayers in the low brackets.

Going on down to the income taxpayer with an income of $100,000, it will be found, if we wish to subtract the figures, that he will be given relief to the tune of 11.85 percent, nearly 12 percent, on his entire income, as compared with the much greater tax which he now pays.

Then we come to the taxpayer receiving an income of $300,000 a year, which is the place where the curve breaks—a little below that—and it will be found that in that case the taxpayer actually saves 12.52 percent of his entire income in the event the pending bill becomes law. Comparing his present tax with the tax he would then pay, he would save 12.52 percent of his entire income under the provisions of the pending bill, which I think is not a fair bill, but is an extremely partial one, and is written in the protection of those receiving large incomes, who are not the ones who really need relief, which is so necessary by reason of the fact that the cost of living has gone up so steeply. I felt that the proposal made in the Senate by the Senator from Illinois offering to extend an increase in the personal exemption was what would come nearer to meeting the situation than anything else we have had offered us.

Mr. President and Senators, I wish to call attention to a little sentence contained in the committee report which I think shows the philosophy under which the committee has reported the bill better than almost anything else, and that is the sentence appearing at the bottom of page 1, and running over to the top of page 3 of the report, as follows:

> The largest percentage reduction will be received by taxpayers having incomes of $1,000 or less, and the smallest relief—

And this is what I am particularly calling to the Senate's attention—> and the smallest relief will be received by persons with incomes of $302,000 or more.

"The smallest relief." Yes; from the standpoint the committee approached it. The committee said, "Let us make a 30-percent cut in the tax from $1,000 to $1,400. Let us make a 20-percent cut in the tax on incomes from $1,400 to $79,700, and let us make a 15-percent cut in taxes on incomes from $79,700 to $302,400, and let us make a 10.5-percent cut in the taxes on incomes of $302,400 and over." But when we make it read in terms of dollars saved or in terms of the percentage of the total income of the taxpayer saved, the figure is entirely different. Whoever wrote that sentence certainly had his tongue in his cheek because that statement would be as far from what I think would be actually the true picture presented by the bill as it would be possible to make it.

I reread that sentence, because I think it is the central presentation of the philosophy under which the pending tax bill was written:

> The largest percentage reduction will be received by taxpayers having incomes of $1,000 or less, and the smallest relief will be received by persons with incomes of $302,000 or more.

Mr. President and Senators, I think the answer to that is very clearly put if we will look back at the column on page 2, and we will see that in the case of the poor fellow who has an income of $1,200 a year on which he pays tax, he is given relief of $11.40, or less than 1 percent of his entire revenue, whereas the individual who receives $300,000 a year income—and I have not tried to break it down to the $302,000 figure which is used in the report—receives 12.52 percent reduction of his tax. If Senators will turn to the table on pages 22 and 23 of the report they will see that in the case of the taxpayer who receives a income of $300,000 a year he is actually relieved in terms of dollars and cents in the amount of $37,624.51. Senators will find that in the eighth column under the heading—

> Amount of tax reduction: Finance Committee bill for 1948 and subsequent years * * *, $37,624.51.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President and Senators, comparing the actual relief in dollars and cents obtained by the man who had an income of $300,000 with the man who had an income of $1,200, the actual relief obtained by the man with an income of $300,000 is just 3,300 times bigger in dollars and cents than the relief obtained by the one poor devil with an income of $1,200, who is stated in the report to be in the group who receive the greatest benefits because of the provisions of the bill.

I do not think that the statement in the report is a reasonable conclusion at all. I think that under the terms of the bill the greatest relief will go to those in the high-income brackets. I have no objection to any Senator voting for the bill. That is his privilege and right. Perhaps that is the correct way to approach the question; but so far as I am concerned, I do not propose to approach tax relief in that way, because I believe that tax relief is actually needed much more in the low-income brackets than in the high-income brackets, and that this measure does not so approach the subject.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Is it not a fact that families in the lower-income groups must pay excise taxes? Take, for example, a family of four members, the husband, wife, and two children, with an income of $2,500. They must pay Federal excise taxes. They also must pay many other taxes, including State, county, and municipal taxes. The Federal excise taxes bear upon such a family more heavily than upon a family in the high-income group. Such taxes bear more heavily upon people in the lower-income groups than upon those in the high-income groups. Is not that true?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is my belief.

Mr. HILL. A family with an income of $200 a month must pay Federal excise taxes. A much greater burden is imposed upon them, and taxes are much more oppressive upon them than upon a family with an income of $50,000 or $100,000. Yet by this bill, as the Senator so well points out, we are proposing to give the greatest relief not to the low-income families which are so burdened and oppressed with other taxes but to the families and groups with the largest incomes. Is that correct?

Mr. HOLLAND. That is exactly correct.

Let me summarize briefly the two arguments which I have just made——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, before the Senator summarizes, will he yield to me?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield to the senior Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. In view of what has just been suggested by the Senator from Alabama with respect to excise taxes, I invite attention to a study which was made by the Treasury Department recently. It showed that more than 80 percent of the taxes collected through excises came from persons with incomes of less than $5,000 a year.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator.

To summarize and conclude—and I apologize for having taken so much of the time of the Senate—I wish to make it clear, if it is not already clear, that under the provisions of the bill there is no equity done as between the small taxpayer and the large taxpayer. Instead, the bill is entirely in favor of the large-income group, who need relief the least. There are two particulars in which it is in favor of that group.

First, a much larger percentage of income is given back to the taxpayer in the high-income brackets under the terms of the bill than is given back to the taxpayer in the small-income brackets, and, secondly, the savings in dollars and cents of the big taxpayer is much larger, in proportion, than that given to the small taxpayer. This statement applies not only to the person receiving an income of $1,200 or $1,500, but it applies all the way up until we reach the level of the well-to-do. It will be found that the curve goes up constantly, and that there is a great disparity, as already stated, running all the way from a relief of less than 1 percent—0.95 percent—to the taxpayer with an income of $1,200, to a relief of 12.52 percent to the income taxpayer with an income of $300,000.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I wish to commend the Senator and ask him to permit me to associate myself with him in the very strong and able statement he has just made. In my opinion, the bill ought to be captioned "A bill for the relief of the large-income groups at the expense of the small-income groups."

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I shall not trespass longer upon the time of the Senate. I wish the Senate might kill the bill. I am not deluding myself with the hope that it will do so. However, I do not believe that any Senator who will really examine the tabulations to which I have just called attention can possibly escape the conclusion—because I think it is an inescapable conclusion—that the bill, whether by design or accident, is so drawn as to give more relief to those in the higher-income brackets and virtually no relief, or very small relief, to those in the lower-income brackets.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I suggest to the Senator that he ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the tabulations to which he has just referred, so that the entire table may appear in the RECORD.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, following the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the table appearing on page 2 of the report of the committee, being table I, styled "A comparison of the effective individual income-tax rates under present law, under H. R. 1 as passed by the House, and under the Senate Finance Committee bill."

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall consume about 30 seconds of the time of the Senate.

After considerable debate with myself, I have decided to vote against the bill. In doing so, I do not oppose it primarily because of its component parts. I take this position because I do not believe it is sound to pass a tax-reduction bill until after the appropriation bills have been first acted upon by this body; for no Senator knows how much of the cuts which have been suggested by the House of Representatives will remain after the appropriation bills have passed both branches of Congress and finally become law. I think there will be ample time after those bills are acted upon, or reported to this body, so that we can see what the cuts are, to pass a tax bill. I am not going to put the cart before the horse by reducing revenues before we know what our expenditures are to be.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I had hoped to be able to vote for the bill, because no one believes in tax reductions more than I do, and no Senator has voted with greater satisfaction for the curtailment of appropriations than I have voted as a member of the Committee on Appropriations. But, Mr. President, the Government of the United States is unable to redeem in cash the bonds of the GI's, although it could redeem the bonds of the officers of this war. It is no time for me to vote for tax reductions. I think the first thing the Government should do is to redeem the bonds of the soldiers who fought and won this war.

A part of this program will involve the redemption of certain bonds. No one knows what bonds. When the bonds are paid the main sufferers from this tax reduction will not be the banks. They will be the GI's whose bonds were bought by the banks in time of stress, and whose money was sent home to purchase the bonds.

So, Mr. President, I shall vote against the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. On this vote I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] and I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent because of illness in his family and is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea" and the Senator from New York, if present, would vote "nay."

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] who is necessarily absent. If present and voting, the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea" and the Senator from Oregon if present would vote "nay."

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], who is absent on official business, is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH]. If present and voting, the Senator from Nebraska would vote "yea" and the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "nay."

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH] is absent on public business.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is absent by leave of the Senate.

On this vote the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who, if present, would vote "yea," is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who would vote "nay."

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "nay" and the Senator from Nebraska would vote "yea."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. The transfer of that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has been announced by the Senator from Kansas. If present, the Senator from New York would vote "nay."

I announce further that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] would vote "nay," if present.

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—52

NOT VOTING—9

Butler	McKellar	Overton

McGrath	O'Mahoney	Wagner

So the bill (H. R. 1) was passed.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed, with the amendments of the Senate numbered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized, in engrossing the amendments to the bill, to make corrections in the section numbering and lettering, and in cross references, and to correct any typographical errors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. MILLIKIN, Mr. TAFT, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. GEORGE, and Mr. BARKLEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONTINUATION OF RENT CONTROL

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1017, Calendar No. 84.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1017) providing for the temporary continuation of rent control, transferring rent control to the Housing Expediter, providing for the creation of local advisory boards on rent control, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BUCK].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF TREASURY-POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CORDON. I ask unanimous consent that the rent-control measure which has been made the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside when the Senate convenes tomorrow, and that House bill 2436 may be taken up at that time. It is the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill. It is necessary that that measure be considered and passed at the earliest possible moment because of its effect upon the departments in question. Numerous changes have been recommended by the Senate committee in respect to the action taken by the House on that appropriation bill; and the two departments are unable to reorganize their activities until they know just what situation they must face.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, I am sorry that I cannot agree to the request. This afternoon both the majority leader and I gave assurance to the minority leader that the rent-control bill would be the next measure taken up.

Mr. CORDON. In that event, Mr. President, I shall renew my request tomorrow. I hope the Senator from Delaware will find it convenient at that time to accede to the request.

Mr. BUCK. I am sure the Senator understands that I take this position solely because we have given that assurance to the minority leader.

RECESS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate at this time, I now move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, May 29, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate May 28 (legislative day of April 21), 1947:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Robert A. Lovett to be Under Secretary of State.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 28, 1947

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we praise Thee for those conditions of life which strengthen and develop the human heart. Grant that in these stirring days we may glean the high aims which we have long loved and cherished. We pray Thee to further and counsel us in all good works, to temper our wills and restrain our affections, lest the ideals which we were taught in other days be lost. Lead us to give ourselves to our tasks with all industry and patience, and to see Thee in the revelation of Thine only begotten Son, feeling the holiness and sublimity of His wonderful character. Keep in Thy blessed care our Speaker and all Members, the newsmen, and employees of the Congress.

This we pray in our Master's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

GOLDEN GATE BRIDGE

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and include a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, today marks the tenth anniversary of the opening of the Golden Gate Bridge to the public. It is one of the engineering marvels of this modern age. Whether or not one has visited San Francisco, he has become familiar with that great bridge of steel and concrete connecting the city and county of San Francisco with the great fertile valleys and the Redwood Empire to the north of the Golden Gate by pictures published far and wide. As I have said once before on this floor:

> Its magnitude and beauty are only surpassed by the supreme majesty of the Golden Gate itself—the world-famous marine highway which connects the great Bay of San Francisco with the Pacific Ocean.

It was on November 12, 1918, that I personally introduced the resolution as a member of the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco which ultimately made the Golden Gate Bridge a reality. It had long been a dream of the broad-visioned people of the counties on the northern shores of San Francisco Bay and the city of San Francisco that such a bridge be built. After the passage of that original resolution, it took many years of hard work, planning, and campaigning to encourage and build public support. Almost 5 years after its passage the Santa Rosa Chamber of Commerce, through its president, Frank P. Doyle, sponsored a meeting of interested citizens to coordinate the effort to bring the bridge into being through organization. At this meeting I introduced the resolution providing for a citizens' committee of five, composed of Joseph Hotchkiss, Frank L. Coombs, Capt. I. N. Hibbard, Frank P. Doyle, and myself. Through the efforts of this committee, legislation was sponsored in the State legislature creating the Golden Gate Bridge and Highway District, composed of San Francisco, Marin, Napa, Sonoma, Mendocino, and Del Norte Counties. I have been, and still am, a member of the board of directors continuously from its first organization.

Because Federal military reservations occupy each side of the Golden Gate, the problem was complicated. It was necessary to secure a grant from the War Department for the approaches to the bridge on Federal property and to secure that Department's approval to construct a bridge across navigable waters. On September 7, 1923, I introduced the resolution in the board of supervisors requesting the Secretary of War to issue the grant and permission.

The bridge finally became a reality, and on May 28, 1937, it was officially opened to the public. In the 10 years from that date until today more than 50,000,000 automobiles have crossed the Golden Gate Bridge. Many of those automobiles were military vehicles engaged in the prosecution of the war. It became a part of a great military highway necessary to our national defense. Other thousands of vehicles were those of war workers employed in the great shipyards to the north of San Francisco to help to build the ships to win the war.

The progress of San Francisco has vindicated the dreams that originally beheld the bridge. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the permission extended to me, I invite attention to the following editorial which appeared in the San Francisco Examiner of May 24, 1947:

> PROGRESS VINDICATED
> When, on May 28, the Golden Gate Bridge celebrates the tenth anniversary of its opening, persons who had opposed its construction, both on utility and aesthetic grounds, will find their pessimism dismayed.

Already the fifty millionth automobile has crossed the span between San Francisco and the Marin shore, a proof of the convenience and necessity for the structure, and certainly the part the bridge played in national defense was demonstrated nobly during the war.

And now the great towers and cables are a part of the Golden Gate, a great frame for the picture.

The servicemen returning from the Pacific war welcomed the Golden Gate Bridge as meaning home, just as those who crossed the Atlantic from the European battlefields greeted the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor.

Thus has come into the San Francisco tradition an idea first officially proposed by Congressman RICHARD J. WELCH, when a supervisor here, and carried out by the engineering skill of Joseph Strauss.

The moral is that progress should not be condemned; that even if something is traditionally old, it may be changed. The change may bring a new tradition, more valuable than the old.

FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, what this country needs is a foreign policy which is less foreign and more policy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REEVES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. SPRINGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address.

Mr. BARTLETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

GREECE

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, let us not for one moment assume that the mere fact of passage of the Greek-Turkish aid bill assures democratic and constitutional government in Greece; we are forcibly reminded of this again in a news dispatch from Athens quoting former Premier Sophoulis, leader of the opposition Liberal Party in the Chamber of Deputies and Greece's grand old man. He demands the end of the civil war in Greece and calls for new elections with the participation of the leftist parties now out of the Government, amnesty and social reforms for the poorer classes to seal up important sources of dissatisfaction. This, he says, will deprive Greece's northern Communist-dominated neighbors of any pretext of interference in Greece. It confirms what I saw in Greece myself only 5 months ago. Obviously, not money alone but policy and management together with money will make our effort for democracy in Greece successful. The constant watchfulness of the Congress and the people is now essential to see that we do our part effectively and well, for Greece will be to us and all the world a pattern of our success or failure and democracy's success or failure in a position of world responsibility.

STOCK MARKET PRICES

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday two eminent gentlemen were exchanging remarks on the floor and giving statistics, the minority whip and the minority leader of the Rules Committee. Last week they did the same thing. One gentleman said the stock market had gone down 50 percent and the other gentleman said that was modest, that it had gone down 75 percent since the election in November, when the Republicans made certain promises. Afterward, and off the record, I suggested the true facts to them, but they did not correct their remarks. I called their attention to the fact that the 50 leading stocks of the Nation, according to the New York Times report, showed a 2 percent drop as of May 21, 1947, the day preceding the time the remarks were made, and 90 leading stocks—Standard-Poor Report—were 1 point higher on May 15, 1947, than they were in November 1946. I think correct figures ought to be given on the floor of the House. Members should not make political footballs of matters which are so important to the people of the Nation.

MASS PICKETING

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, in common with some other Members of this body I read the papers. This morning I noticed that the press announced that the House conferees on the labor legislation had agreed to strike out of the bill the provisions which ban the mass picket line and violence. I have no criticism of what anyone else does, but I will say this, that you cannot fool the people very much, and if we are not going to strike out the mass picket line, which prevents a man going to work, or a citizen buying merchandise, and if we are to refuse to ban violence and rioting, people are going to come back in November next year to the polls and it is just possible that a Congress will be elected which will write a real labor law.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Here in the House we have been voting to do something about violence and mass picketing since 1940.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I think the gentleman is mistaken. In 1936 some of us began to vote against it, and most of the Republican Members of the House since 1938 have been voting against violence and rioting by the massed picket line. The people are looking to the House for effective and adequate legislation.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a quorum is not present.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 66]

Allen, Ill.	Gifford	Marcantonio
Auchincloss	Gillie	Meade, Ky.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call, 329 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEOGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a citation received by Irving H. Saypol.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. BUTLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter in opposition to the St. Lawrence seaway.

Mr. O'HARA (at the request of Mr. JONES of Ohio) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, and to include in one editorials from five different newspapers, and in the other remarks of Mr. Ivan Bowen, of Minneapolis, Minn., at the annual meeting of the National Association of Motor Bus Operators.

Mr. CANFIELD and Mr. MILLER of Nebraska asked and were given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. LEFEVRE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech.

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter in each.

Mr. POTTS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. ANGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS AT THIS POINT

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD and include an article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, to those of us who deal with the hazards of blizzards and floods as part of the odds we take on our farms and on our ranges such a picture as is given of the tragic loss of sheep and cattle and of wheat suffered by the farmers of the United Kingdom should give us pause. Wholly unprepared for the heavy snows and devastated by the consequent uncontrollable floods, they face a very serious food situation. I am inserting herewith a clipping from the London Sunday Express of March 30 that the farmers of this country and the city dwellers as well may have more understanding of the quality of courage of the British people.

WHAT THE SNOWS AND FLOODS COST US: 1,370,000 SHEEP, 30,000 CATTLE, 100,000 ACRES OF WHEAT

The National Farmers' Union, in what is probably the gravest statement on British agriculture ever issued, said yesterday:

"A situation unparalleled in the history of British agriculture has developed from the disastrous harvests of last autumn and the subsequent blizzards and floods. It threatens the rations and calls for a stupendous effort on the part of farmers and farm workers to meet the emergency. The financial losses, direct and indirect, on information so far available, are estimated to be about £20,000,000.

"Reports indicate that some 1,370,000 sheep and lambs died in the snowdrifts, and further heavy casualties are expected (as a result of exposure) before the lambing season ends.

"Many hill farmers have lost their all in the greatest food production tragedy this country has ever known.

"Thirty thousand head of store cattle have been lost in the snow or the floods or have had to be destroyed owing to the impossibility of getting fodder to them.

"Losses of small livestock (calves, pigs, and poultry) may well prove to amount to £500,000. In large areas little more than maintenance rations could be fed to dairy herds, and the milk output is known to have fallen substantially.

"Nearly 100,000 acres of winter wheat have had to be written off as a total loss.

"Upward of a hundred thousand tons of potatoes have been lost to human consumption.

"To repair the ravages as quickly as possible and put the land into a condition to grow food for this year's harvests is a race against time.

"All possible steps are being taken to clear the land of water, but without financial help many of the farmers who have lost so much already will not be in a position to tackle their part of the job.

"The National Farmers' Union, therefore, has decided to launch an appeal for contributions to its agricultural disaster fund. The proceeds of this fund will be devoted to mitigating the crippling nature of the losses.

"The damage is so great that the agricultural industry alone cannot cover the whole of the cost. In consultation with the Government a fully representative national committee is being set up to administer the fund and a similar committee will be appointed for each county.

"The purpose of this fund is to mitigate, as far as possible, the effects of the weather catastrophe on the food situation. The appeal does not cover the ordinary household and personal losses due to the floods, which are the province of the appeal issued by the Lord Mayor of London. The two appeals will not conflict.

"The union adds that the urgency of the appeal cannot be overestimated. Everyone in any way connected with agriculture should send a donation as quickly as possible to the Agricultural Disaster Fund, National Farmers' Union, 45 Bedford Square, London, W. C. 1."

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD on the agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed this bill and the accompanying report and am particularly concerned regarding some of the recommendations that affect appropriations for our Federal activities in forest conservation. The conservation idea and the need for Federal leadership to advance it received its first great impetus in the Republican administration of Theodore Roosevelt. From time to time both parties have further implemented the movement but never to the extent warranted by its importance.

We are now well into the adjustment period of the postwar era and are striving desperately to build the foundations for a sound economy geared to new conditions. We are seeking to build up our national strength to meet new responsibilities at home and abroad. Natural resources, which have always played such an important part in our industrial development, have been severely depleted by the war and also by peacetime years of wasteful exploitation. We have a tremendous job of rehabilitation to undertake in connection with forest resources. In view of this situation I question whether this is not the time to strengthen rather than weaken Federal leadership in conservation.

In reducing appropriations to the United States Forest Service by nearly $16,000,000 we are not striking at some temporary wartime activity for which a need no longer exists, but at the heart of the conservation movement in the United States. It is difficult to understand in what way the public interest is served by withholding increased funds to administer sales of national forest timber at a time of unprecedented demand. What possible public interest is served by completely wiping out funds for the administration of wildlife resources on national forests? A large segment of our people are fishermen and the building up of this form of recreation is inevitably a responsibility of land managing agencies. Are we to understand that this field is to be neglected or handled only incidentally by the largest single land managing agency in the United States? Similar questions could be asked regarding other appropriation actions in the bill as they bear on the administration of our national forests.

In my own region, we have millions of acres producing wood products at only a fraction of the rate at which they are capable of growing it. Our forest industries and land owners are struggling with many problems incident to a shift from the wasteful liquidation policy of past years to one of conservation and management. We are seriously hampered in our efforts by lack of knowledge and information in this new philosophy of forest management. Our forests suffer not only from lack of good management practices but also from damages by insects and disease which good management could do much to control. The information and techniques required to put my region back on its feet as a leading forest products region stems from research.

I am particularly concerned by the heavy reduction in funds for the forest survey. This basic inventory of forest resources is essential to the sound planning of conservation program by both Government and private agencies. In areas where it has been under way for some time industry has time and again consulted the results of this survey for guidance in the establishment of new enterprises and the development of policies.

We need this survey in the Northeast and I am concerned over any action that will present a hazard to the early prosecution of this work.

We have a large number of small forest industries in our territory which need the guidance of research in forest products. Our large industries have profited in the past by the results of Federal research in forest products. A vital part of the conservation concept is the fuller use of what resources we have and a reduction in research along these lines is not consistent with sound economy.

For these reasons I am concerned that the report on this bill recommends reductions in appropriations for vitally important phases of research in forestry. This recommendation certainly is not in accord with the current recognition of the needs for an aggressive program of scientific research which has already been recognized by the Congress in other fields.

My vote for this bill will be with great reluctance. I am not satisfied that the effects of reductions affecting forest conservation have been fully appraised and I question whether at this time we can afford to weaken Federal leadership in a movement of such significance to our national welfare.

FILING OF SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplemental report on the bill H. R. 673.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PHILBIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a recent article from the New York Times.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3601) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3601) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, with Mr. HERTER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the economy of this country is anchored to agriculture. Only a casual glance into the economic history of agriculture will definitely reveal that it sets and controls the patterns of the varied and sundry industries of America. The agricultural resources of the United States are second to that of no other section of the world. Agriculture is the very backbone of American industry and, more important at this particular time, to it the entire world looks for food and clothing. It is an accepted fact that prospering agriculture procreates a general prosperity. Conversely, a stagnant economy trails its failure.

How do we account for this? It is due entirely to the fact that the millions upon millions of farm families spread out and across every county and State of these United States constitute the largest, most desirable and most immediate market for all American industry. It is a market which prevails the year around for all products of every kind and of every character, whether they be automobiles or trucks, hardware or household goods, petroleum products or electrical appliances—everything of every kind made by American industry and American labor. Strike down their prosperity and you strike down the prosperity of more than 140,000,000 American people. This is an irrefutable fact. Time and time again it has happened. It can happen again. And it will happen again if this agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 3601, and others like it, are meted out to the hardest working group of people on the face of this planet—the American farmers.

Why, Mr. Chairman, what have our farm people done to deserve the treatment which they are given by this legislation? Can we not recall that it has only been a few years since we stripped the farms of their young men and sent them away to fight the battles for freedom. The farms were left in the hands of their fathers and mothers who produced the food and fiber necessary to win a great war. Many of them were aged. Many were physically unable to toil the long hours essential to the planting, cultivation, and harvesting of crops. Farm work is hard work. But they did the job. And they did it with a shortage of labor, a shortage of fertilizer, a shortage of machinery, a shortage of everything but a courage and a will to back their sons who had gone away to war, many of whom never returned. Never before in the annals of American agriculture has there been such an abundance of production—enough to feed and clothe the entire world. For the farm folk there were no strikes, no shut-downs, no sit-downs, nothing but work, work, work. And, as they were going about this great achievement they were fast depleting and bleeding white the fertility of their soil. By good practices under the skillful supervision of the Soil Conservation Service, this fertility can be restored. Cripple the program, as this bill will do, and you turn your back on the great sacrifice which the farm people of this country made to win a great war.

It has not been so many years, Mr. Chairman, since you could purchase with one $20 bill almost all the corn or wheat or cotton one man could produce in a year's crop. And when that situation plagued the American farmer, like the cancer it is, it ate away the stability of every other segment of American industry. They were left with a short market. Ordinarily you would think that we had learned our lesson, that we had become wiser and would profit from our ignorance and mistakes of the past. But apparently that is not the case, at least with many in our midst, for here today we have the majority party, the Republican Party, now most favored by our farm people, sabotaging the Department of Agriculture and driving agricultural industry back to those bleak, dark days of the early thirties.

I ask you again, why this treatment for our farm folk? What have they done to merit such? Have they not met all production goals set by the Department of Agriculture? Beyond the South, last year, possibly in a forgetful moment—and for this we forgive them—did they not vote overwhelmingly Republican? Sure they did. Then why is the Republican Party meting out to them such treatment as is proposed in this bill? There could be but one reason and that, Mr. Chairman, is to smooth the way for the Knutson tax-relief bill—the bill which evidences the great love and affection which the Republican Party harbors for those who are so "unfortunate" as to have incomes of "only" $300,000 or more per annum. Its love for this group is a fact which everyone so well knows but so often forgets.

REPUBLICANS PRAISE THE AGRICULTURAL PROGRAMS

For soil conservation, rural electrification, tenant purchase, agricultural research, school lunch, and other agricultural programs the Republicans have heretofore had but the highest praise. Also their support. But on the other hand they have promised that $300,000-a-year man that they were going to reduce his taxes whereby his take-home income would be increased more than $40,000 per year over that at present. And these "unfortunate" people have put the squeeze on our Republican friends to fulfill that promise. In order to carry it out they are going to kick the slats out of the Department of Agriculture and the American farmer. Well, they may do it but they will rue the day when they do.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I have heard Member after Member on the Republican side bemoan the American dollars which the so-called New Deal administration was pouring into Europe for relief. And simultaneously they have bemoaned the fact that we do so little for our own people. On this proposition I noticed an interesting contrast which appeared on the front page of a local daily newspaper under date of May 22. In one column I found the headline, "Agriculture budget cut 38 percent, House subcommittee lops off four hundred millions," and lo and behold, in another column appeared the headline, "House votes three hundred and fifty millions foreign relief." The relief bill passed the House 288 to 86. The dissenting votes are only about one-third the voting strength of the Republicans in the House, and by no means were all of those 86 dissenters Republicans. Now I am not going to quarrel with those who feel that America, two long years after the war and after two full crops have been made in Europe, should continue to feed and clothe the people of Europe. I do not agree with you, and I voted accordingly. But I do say that you should not make the American farmer pay the entire bill. It is not just and it is not fair.

We all recognize the interest which every American has in maintaining the fertility of our soil, our greatest natural resource. Most of our people own no farm land but upon the land and its productivity are each and all of us dependent for our food and clothing. We were late in awakening to the fact that our soils were being fast depleted through erosion, bad farming practices, and so forth. But we did realize the seriousness of the situation in time to about-face and in time to safeguard the fertility of our soils for ourselves and for generations yet unborn. This was accomplished through the soil-conservation program, which, as everyone knows, proposes from year to year certain sound farm practices for which the Government, as an incentive, pays about one-third of the cost through the AAA. The soil being our greatest natural resource and it being essential that it be preserved for posterity, I think it good business for the Government to offer the incentive payments.

COMMITMENT FOR 1947 AAA PAYMENTS

Last year the Congress wrote into the agricultural appropriation bill language whereby there could be no misunderstanding as to what amount the Government would expend in the program. It was made crystal clear that the amount would be $300,000,000 for AAA payments and administrative costs. Agricultural agents of this Government cut the 1947 program to fit the pattern and told the American farmer what the Congress had agreed to do by contract—signed, sealed, and delivered. Now here at this eleventh hour, the Republican-controlled Appropriations Committee brings to the floor of this House a bill which would, in face of that solemn agreement, reduce the Government's participation to $165,000,000. The cut amounts to approximately one-third of the European relief bill they passed last week. So, the American farmer is not only going to be called upon to put up some of the food for this relief but also to pay one-third of the bill with the AAA payments which we pledged to him last year. I, for one, will not break faith with our farm people and will certainly vote for the amendment to restore the full appropriation.

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH

Mr. Chairman, I am astounded and surprised that my Republican friends would cut the appropriation one dime below the budget estimate for agricultural research. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Agriculture which wrote and presented to the Seventy-ninth Congress the agricultural research bill—the Hope-Flannagan Act, so named in honor of the distinguished gentleman and the present chairman of my great committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] and my distinguished friend and former chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN]. There was no politics in the writing and passage of that bill. It had the unanimous support of our committee, of the Congress and President Truman.

Every segment of American industry is carrying on extensive research except agriculture, which is far behind. For year after year prior to the war, we were producing great surpluses of agricultural products. For the potential surpluses, new uses must be found, and this particularly applies to cotton. I do not know as much about the problem in your section as I do in mine, but I am sure that yours is no different from mine. In the South we are making rapid strides in crop rotation and industrial development. But, irrespective of the latter, the South is naturally an agricultural country and better adapted to the growing of cotton than any other crop. It is a great crop. It has many uses. But for it, other uses can and must be found. In the research bill we have placed our hope. Adequate appropriations to carry on the work could mean for us the difference between prosperity or bankruptcy. The amount sought—only $9,500,000—is infinitesimal compared with the national budget. And I hope you will support the amendment to be offered to restore the $3,500,000 cut in the appropriation.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Mr. Chairman, the greatest service this Government rendered the man on the farm was bringing electricity—lights and power—to his home. Through the Rural Electrification Administration many have been afforded the comforts of power, but on the whole we have only scratched the surface. I want to see every farm home in this country electrified. And I thought that the Republican members of the Agricultural Appropriations Subcommittee shared a similar feeling. Evidently I am mistaken, for they have cut the budget request for rural-electrification loans by more than $25,000,000 and reduced the administrative funds by 28½ percent. I am reliably informed that this will seriously slow down the work in REA, create bottlenecks in the consideration of applications, and mean that 25-percent fewer farm people can receive electricity in 1948 than if these cuts were restored, and this is a conservative figure. It has been well said that REA will not use any more money than it needs, so why should not the Congress give it an adequate loan authorization? I want to see electricity wired into every farm home in my district, as well as yours; and I would like to see it get there before some of our people get too old to use it. They have waited a long, long time. So, please gentlemen, let us all join together in making an adequate appropriation for rural electrification. The money appropriated will be paid back to the Government with interest, and the farms electrified will be increased in value. REA pays its way; it is self-sustaining and self-liquidating. Let us not hamper or hamstring the activity of the Rural Electrification Administration in its effort and activity toward electrifying every farm home in America.

FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION

I also deplore the complete elimination of the farm tenant purchase program of the Farmers Home Administration. In this program hundreds and thousands of our veterans are looking to the opportunity of home and farm ownership. And unless you restore these funds then they will have no other real source to which they may resort for this assistance. The Farmers Home Administration has helped many of our people become home owners and substantial citizens. It is sheer nonsense to cut the throat of the program in the name of economy when it is good economy to offer reasonable assistance to be repaid to those who are earnestly striving toward a substantial position in life.

There are other false economies in this bill. Many of them. Many have been developed by previous speakers. Others will be developed by those to follow. I hope you will join with us in eliminating the many wrongs done the American farmer.

FOR ECONOMY

I want to say now and have it definitely understood that you Republicans have no monopoly on economy. The record since the war discloses many reductions and rescissions of appropriations by a Democratic Congress. I have in many instances voted for reductions and I shall vote for others but I refuse to cut the heart out of the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture. This is not economy. It is sabotage.

I favor the elimination of duplication. I favor the elimination of overlapping agencies. I favor dismissal of its many unnecessary high-paid executives, supervisors, and administrators. These things the bill will not accomplish. On the contrary, judging by previous actions of other departments, these high executives will be retained and the lay-offs made at the local level. There is nothing seriously wrong with the agricultural programs. The trouble is that these high executives make the cost unnecessarily high. Economy should be practiced at the high level, and I favor such. But in this bill we find our Republican friends sabotaging the programs instead of reducing the cost. This is, indeed, poor economy.

CONCLUSION

When we look back upon the early thirties we recall 38-cent wheat, 32-cent corn, 16-cent oats, 3-cent hogs, 4-cent beef, and 6-cent cotton. It makes me shudder to think of it. Since then, under a good farm program, we have come a long way. Our farm people are fairly prosperous again. They offer a market now for hundreds of thousands of automobiles and trucks, for 200,000 tractors a year, for more than $400,000,000 worth of household goods, building materials of more than a billion dollars' worth, and so on and on and on. They are not the same people that you knew 15 years ago. They are prosperous, content, and happy. So are all of us. But legislation of this character will drive them back to a depression economy and the rest of America will go back with them. Let us not act too hurriedly, else we turn back to the dark days of years gone by.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to announce that on yesterday when the Committee rose the first paragraph of the bill had been read, and the reading of the bill will be resumed with the second paragraph.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The pending agricultural appropriations bill represents a betrayal of the American farmer by the Republican majority in the House of Representatives. Democratic members of the Appropriations Committee did what they could to prevent this ill-considered measure from coming to the floor. Last Friday, when the full Committee on Appropriations met to give final consideration to the measure, we demanded and secured 12 roll-call votes in committee in an effort to stop the steam roller of the majority, but to no avail. They had the votes. Let it be said for the record, that when the roll call was taken on reporting the bill every Democrat on the committee, with possibly one exception, voted against the bill.

During my brief service in the House of Representatives I had never seen that happen before. It would not have happened had there not been something drastically wrong with the bill. Why is this bill so unattractive, so unacceptable to the friends of agriculture? Why do I say that it is a slap in the face for the American farmer? Is it because the bill provides certain economies? No. Democrats favor economies in administration and other savings wherever they can safely be made. There are numerous economies in the bill which I favor and stand ready to defend. But here are some of the reasons why the bill is so intolerable. Some of these facts should be made crystal clear in the outset of this debate today.

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH

Last year Congress passed the Agricultural Research and Marketing Act, which was hailed by friends of agriculture as perhaps the most important forward step in agriculture within a generation. The President asked for the coming year the sum of $19,000,000 to carry out the purposes of this legislation. What happened? The bill before us provides the wholly inadequate sum of $6,000,000 for this purpose.

I am a member of the War Department Subcommittee, which on tomorrow will report out the annual Military Establishment's bill, requiring something over $5,000,000,000. In that bill more than $200,000,000 will be requested for research and development. We are providing this year in the Navy for a research and development program which will cost $34,000,000. Yes; we are being asked to provide $250,000,000 for atomic research, but this pending bill denies the relatively small amount requested for research under the Hope-Flannagan Act for the basic industry of America, and I, for one, will not support such a short-sighted and indefensible policy.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I happened to be a member of the committee which reported the bill to which the gentleman has referred, which was named in honor of our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], and our former distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN]. Is it not a fact that every Member of the House voted for the bill when it passed last year?

Mr. MAHON. I think the gentleman is correct in his statement.

SECTION 32

This bill does great violence to the cause of agriculture in repudiating the section 32 provision of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Section 32 provides that 30 percent of tariff receipts may be used to dispose of agricultural surpluses and otherwise promote the cause of agriculture. After all, the tariff protects industry and makes it necessary for the farmer to pay a higher price for many of the things required on the farm and why should not a portion of the tariff receipts be used in the interest of the farmer. Section 32 is one of the most effective provisions for agriculture ever written into law—past achievements prove that point—and the provision in this bill which nullifies that law is a step toward a prostrate and bankrupt agriculture. That is another reason why I join with others in crying out against this measure now before us.

AAA PAYMENTS

The bill provides $164,000,000 for the so-called AAA soil-conservation payments instead of the $300,000,000 requested by the President. If the $300,000,000 is not provided, the farmer will be shamefully betrayed. That is true because Congress will have broken the pledged word of the Government to the American farmer, and in my book a breach of faith cannot be defended in the name of economy or any other name.

It is not a question of whether the AAA program is good or bad. Many Members of Congress and many dirt farmers differ as to the merits of the program. It can be agreed that the AAA program is far from perfect. But my point is that when the farmer began his 1947 crop he had a right to believe that the $300,000,000 program would be carried out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHON. If we consult the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing the proceedings of the House of Representatives on March 8, 1946, we read where the House pledged itself to carry out the $300,000,000 program. If we consult the President's budget message, which was made public in January, the beginning of the crop year, we find the President makes reference to "the $300,000,000 program to which we are committed for the crop year 1947."

Mr. Chairman, the full amount promised for the AAA program should be provided. The question is not an involved problem of policy, but a simple question of good faith.

SOIL CONSERVATION SERVICE

The bill provides a reduction of $6,000,000 in funds requested by the President to carry out the soil-conservation program. This will have a crippling effect on the programs of soil-conservation districts throughout the Nation. I trust the House will restore these funds and thereby contribute to the success of one of the important forward movements in the field of agriculture.

SCHOOL-LUNCH PROGRAM

The school-lunch program is crippled by the bill—cut approximately in half. There are differences of opinion as to the merits of this program. I personally feel that the program has great possibilities and that it should be continued, with the local communities and States assuming an increasing responsibility for the success of the activity.

FARM TENANT PURCHASE PROGRAM

The bill before us completely repudiates the program which we started some time ago to make home owners out of farm tenants, the farm tenant purchase program. There is not a dime in the bill for it. Land prices are high; it is a perilous thing to go into the purchase of farm land but certainly it was unwise for the committee completely to strike from the bill any funds for carrying on that program. I stand with those who believe that a sound American agricultural economy demands farm ownership and I am not willing to stop that program. I shall support an amendment to continue the farm tenant purchase program.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

As to the REA program I should like to say this: The cut in administrative expenses is too deep and will have a tendency to hamper the successful handling of the program. Earlier in the year threats were made to the effect that the President's request for $225,000,000 in loan funds to local REA cooperatives would be slashed. Fortunately, we have been able to prevent that being done. Yet the bill should be amended to provide an additional $25,000,000 in REA loans to meet the original requirement which is diminished by reason of the transfer of REA financing from the RFC to the Treasury Department.

Mr. Chairman, in the time at my disposal there is no opportunity for me to discuss all the aspects of the bill in which I am interested and I must conclude. Again I protest the ill-considered and unwise provisions in this measure, and urge that it be modified along the lines suggested. It is imperative that the friends of agriculture cooperate together in keeping faith with the agricultural producers of the Nation. A sound and prosperous agriculture is essential to the Nation's well-being.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. McGARVEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on Thursday and Friday of last week, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] attacked the operations of the New York Stock Exchange, and announced that he was about to introduce two bills which would discourage the short selling which he claims has taken place recently. I regret that I was not on the floor of the House at the time to answer the gentleman. Having been a stock broker for 30 years, I feel confident that I am qualified to defend the stock exchange and its operations.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], as did the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], on Thursday, "Where is your Securities and Exchange Commission that has been established to see that these things do not happen?"

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] boasts that it was through his efforts that the SEC was established. Does he now repudiate the Commission which, he asserts, was brought into being by his valiant crusade?

The gentleman belongs, I am afraid to say to that New Deal school of thought which believes in getting the Federal Government into every possible phase of American life. He does not seem to realize that the people are fed up with the Government controls and regulations with which we have been hampered during the past 13 years. I, myself, was amazed at the number of people who called me when I was in Philadelphia over the week-end, to protest Mr. SABATH's savage and unwarranted attack.

The gentleman will not get far with his bill to provide revenue from the short sales of shares of stock, grains, cotton, or other allied commodities, or his bill to prohibit communication of false information with respect to securities in certain cases. Not only is there no need for them or for the asinine remarks which accompanied their presentation on the floor of the House, but public opinion is against him.

Mr. Chairman, to prove my point I include an editorial which appeared in the Philadelphia Inquirer on Saturday, May 24, 1947. I should also like to insert in the RECORD a dispatch which was transmitted over the Dow-Jones news ticker relative to the gentleman's speech on stock market manipulations.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer of May 24, 1947]

SHOULD PUT UP OR SHUT UP

There is no excuse for Representative ADOLPH J. SABATH'S savage attack on current New York Stock Exchange operations, which he has seen fit to describe as "outrageous, crooked dealings."

Wall Street has long been a favorite target of empty-headed politicians when they have run out of other topics, but Mr. SABATH'S comprehensive denunciation is too vicious to be dismissed as run-of-the-mill political oratory. His statements and predictions are the kind that no one should be allowed to get away with.

When he says, "If we don't stop the short selling and gambling on the New York Stock Exchange we'll have disaster in this country," and that he is "fearful that the same thing that took place in 1929 to 1932 will take place again unless we put a stop to it," he is going off the deep end.

Emil Schram, president of the New York Stock Exchange, has made the only possible retort in demanding that SABATH either present proof of crooked dealings or withdraw his charges. Prices on the exchange are established through open transactions. The market is regulated by a Government agency, the Securities and Exchange Commission, which also make the rules to regulate short-selling.

If the Congressman has any justifiable complaints he should make them to the SEC and not engage in wild, reckless and completely unsupported statements that can only do severe damage to a legitimate institution and legitimate dealings in securities. He should put up or shut up.

[From Dow-Jones news ticker]

STOCK MARKET

NEW YORK.—Representative SABATH, Democrat, Illinois, yesterday charged that dishonest manipulation has caused the recent stock market decline.

The stock exchange quickly denied the accusation and demanded proof.

Emil Schram, the Exchange's president, in a wire to Representative SABATH, invited him to present factual proof of manipulative activities on the exchange.

He added, "If you do not have any factual information, I think that you should in all decency withdraw what you have said. Reckless statements of the character you have just put out are damaging to our public institutions."

Representative SABATH, in a statement on the House floor, attacked short selling and said he would introduce today a bill which will impose a tax of 5 percent on short selling. He also said such sales should be abolished.

In answer to this, Mr. Schram's telegram declared that, "Short selling is strictly regulated under our rules and those of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Copies of these regulations are available to you.

"Credit regulations are in the hands of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. You can, of course, address your complaints on that score to that agency. We feel here that one of the causes of recent weakness in our market is the discriminatory restraint upon loans to millions of people who own securities listed on the national registered exchanges."

In Philadelphia, the Securities and Exchange Commission said it had received complaint on short selling from Representative SABATH. It added that it would answer the letter but had no further comment to make.

It was recalled that Representative SABATH had sent a somewhat similar letter to the Commission following the break in the market on September 3 last. A spokesman said the Commission is constantly watching the market and is always on the alert for indications of manipulation.

The Commission has not sent out any general questionnaires on stock-market trading since the one which was issued following the break on September 3.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGARVEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. OWENS. I recall the gentleman from Massachusetts broke in to say that stock on the stock exchange had dropped 75 percent from last November. I have checked it and I think the gentleman will agree with me when I say that 50 leading stocks have dropped 2 points and 90 stocks have risen 1 point during that same time.

Mr. McGARVEY. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment and ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for 5 minutes, as the gentleman did, because I think I know a little something about the laws that are administered by the SEC.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, as far as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is concerned, he can defend himself; but I remember in the late twenties and in the early thirties the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] was one of the first men in this House or in the country to call attention to what was going on in the great stock exchanges of the United States. I think I have a right to speak about this matter because I happen to be the author of the three measures that are now administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission—the Securities Act of 1933, the Stock Exchange Act of 1934, and the Utilities Holding Company Act of 1935.

A department of the Government made the statement that from 1922 to 1932 there had been issued and offered to the public in the United States about fifty billion in securities and that their judgment was twenty-five billion of them were not worth the paper upon which they were written; yet, some of these people who had been issuing these kind of securities came down here and said that we were going to stop the issuance of securities. We passed a bill and every decent dealer of securities in the United States felt like his stable was clean and that he could, therefore, put his securities on the market.

They also came down and said that the stock exchange regulation bill would close all the exchanges in the country. One president of the New York Stock Exchange since that bill was passed said he would not be chairman of the New York Stock Exchange, or president, or whatever you want to call it, unless that bill was upon the statute books. And it went along until the Holding Company Act of 1935. We were going to put all the private utility companies in the United States out of business, and today there is not a decent operating utility in the country that is not glad to have these giant holding companies taken off its back so that it can operate at a decent rate to the public and pay its stockholders.

How did these giant holding companies make their money? There are only two ways on earth that one of these giant holding companies can make money. One is by the manipulation of stocks, to which it lends itself perfectly, and the other is by milking the operating companies at the bottom, because the operating companies are the only ones in the whole set-up that can make money. So, it matters not what the gentleman from Pennsylvania says about operating on the New York Stock Exchange. I have been operating with them, not on them, for 10 or 12 years, and I say to you that even though we have the Securities and Exchange Commission with power and authority to look into these things, that somebody has got to be on the watchtower in a time like this, or we may sink back once more into the same condition that brought about the debacle of 1929.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, in the interest of expedition, I think we ought to read the next paragraph. We have had two speeches out of order now, and I will be constrained to object to other similar requests.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will not the gentlemen let the next paragraph be read?

Mr. RANKIN. They took 10 or 15 minutes talking about the stock exchange. Now, the most grievous error in this bill has not been mentioned.

Mr. DIRKSEN. A strict construction of the rule would indicate that all argument on the pro forma amendment has been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman made a motion?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No, Mr. Chairman; just a suggestion that we read the next paragraph.

Mr. RANKIN. That is not the rule of the House, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois. On pro forma amendments, the debate has not been exhausted. I have been trying to get recognition here for 10 or 15 minutes, and I have seen the floor taken in speaking about stock exchanges pro and con. I would like to talk about a matter that affects the farmers of this Nation. I move to strike out the last word, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I have taken this time to talk about what seems to be the forgotten man, the American farmer. The greatest programs that have ever been instituted for the benefit of the American farmers are soil conservation and rural electrification. I want to talk to you for a moment about rural electrification, for which I have been battling for the last 15 years.

This bill cuts down the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget, even though the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget itself is far below what is necessary to carry on the electrification program for the next fiscal year.

Now, remember, we are still behind, far behind, even Japan in rural electrification. While they have 90 percent of their farms electrified and while Germany has 90 percent of her farms electrified and while Italy and France have 94 percent of their farms electrified, we have only a little more than 57.4 percent of our farms electrified.

The farmers of this Nation, in almost every State of the Union, are appealing and pleading for funds to build rural power lines. Every dollar of this money comes back with interest. The Government does not lose a dime.

Besides, it invariably doubles the value of every farm it touches, in providing conveniences, relieving drudgery, preserving foods, promoting health, and inspiring hope. It is the greatest program ever instituted for the benefit of the rural people of this Nation. I want to call your attention to the fact again that there was a larger percentage of American farm boys who went into this war than there were any other class of people in the United States. Now they have come back and are undertaking to make a living under adverse conditions, when the farmer pays more for what he buys, according to the price he gets for what he sells, than he has probably in all the history of this country.

This is not giving the farmer anything. We are merely making it possible for him to help himself.

You provide here for only $225,000,000 for the next fiscal year. On the 1st day of July, the very day of the beginning of the new fiscal year, there will be $270,000,000 in applications before the Rural Electrification Administration, and they are pouring in at the rate of $30,000,000 a month. Are we going to pour out money to feed every lazy lout from Tokyo to Timbuktu at the expense of these farmers and then deny them the benefits of rural electrification? Do you think you are going to get intelligent farmers in your district to move out onto the farm or to stay on the farm and do the hard work necessary to produce the materials to feed and clothe the Nation unless you at least put them on a parity with the farmers of Japan, Germany, France, and Italy by giving them the benefits of electric power?

Do you think you are going to get the farm women, who are today bowing down over the washtubs in your districts, doing the most burdensome work that any woman ever did, to stay on the farm when they are denied even the opportunity to run an electric washing machine or to operate an electric fan, to say nothing of the lights, water pump, refrigerator, and other necessary appliances? If you do, you are badly mistaken. Do not misunderstand it.

That is not the program you were elected on last November. I told you then it was not a Republican victory, but just a delousing of the Democratic Party.

The American people are expecting us to represent them, but you have gone on and punished the people of the South and the West with the most damnable and discriminatory freight rates the world ever saw. You can ship goods from New York to San Francisco cheaper than you can put them off in Kansas, Iowa, or Nebraska, and vice versa, because the Interstate Commerce Commission up until now, at least, has been in the grip of the transcontinental railroads and big interests in certain sections of the country. Do you think you are going to continue that program and go out and fool the American farmer into sending you back to Congress?

At the proper time I propose to offer an amendment not only to restore the cut, but to provide the funds necessary to meet the demands for rural electrification in every State in this Union for the next fiscal year.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I do not know exactly how much the New York Stock Exchange has gone up or down, but I do know about $2 has gone off the price of 100 pounds of milk out in Wisconsin, even though we have a Steagall amendment that is supposed to be in operation.

I think it is appropriate at this time to call your attention to the fact that there is every reason to believe that a lot of this interest in the section 32 funds comes from the fact that certain parts of agriculture have been on the gravy train all these years, and they can see that someone is liable to shove them off for the benefit of the rest of agriculture. I will prove that statement by calling your attention to the fact that during a 10-year period what crops do we find that have the benefit of the section 32 funds? I might say to begin with that one of the objections I have always had to the so-called New Deal agricultural program is that I have always felt that it was upside down. They talked about a soil-conservation program, but what they did was use public funds to promote soil-depleting crops at the expense of livestock farming, the best-known agricultural system for soil conservation. You could not get a better example than is shown in the use of these funds. The other day some of my friends wanted to kill the sheep business in this country, according to the speeches they made, and yet $40,000,000 out of this $125,000,000 or $130,000,000 of section 32 funds comes from money collected on wool last year coming into the United States of America on livestock products. What do they use that for? We started out and used $154,000,000 of it during the last 10-year period for cotton. Remember, my good cotton friends may talk about reciprocity. They are strong for these reciprocity agreements. They build a wall up around the American cotton farmer and the American cotton market. They put an embargo on imports. They take section 32 funds and get 30 percent of the custom receipts on livetsock products coming into this country by lowering the tariff and other devices and use it on soil-depleting crops such as cotton.

I do not want you to think I have to go south of the Mason and Dixon's line. The next one I will take will be wheat.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I cannot yield. I want to speak on some of the facts of life here and I want to be sure you get them all.

Sure, wheat is a great product in America but it is only one-tenth of the agriculture of America, and we had a set-up whereby one congressional district obtained $17,000,000 for either raising or not raising wheat, whichever it was, out in Kansas—$17,000,000 in 1 year.

That is more than what went to 35 individual States of this Union in that particular year. One congressional district of Iowa obtained $13,000,000. One district in Texas obtained $12,000,000 for either growing or not growing wheat.

Then, what do they do? They put an embargo on wheat. You cannot bring wheat into this country. Then they want to use section 32 funds to pay export subsidies and they used in connection with grains $180,000,000. Does that make sense? You can see why when they put in the so-called parity program, out of the first $212,000,000 under the guise of parity $50,000,000 of that went to the great State of Texas. I know that Texas is a great State, but I do not think it means one-fourth of America, or surely not one-fourth of American agriculture. After all, when all is said and done what is really behind this fight about these section 32 funds? They want to continue to give a blank check, if you please, to the Secretary of Agriculture, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] said yesterday, who has control of these section 32 funds so that he can pass them out any way he wants to.

I might say to you, you can talk about the balmy days of the New Deal, but so far as Wisconsin is concerned in 1939, and Wisconsin is the sixth agricultural State in this Nation, we had more farm foreclosures by the Federal land bank in 1939 than ever before in the history of America.

Special privilege to special agricultural interests has been the order of the day altogether too long.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

All time has expired. The pro forma amendments are withdrawn.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE I—GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For personal services in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, hereafter in this act referred to as the Secretary, in the District of Columbia, and elsewhere, and other necessary expenses, including the purchase of two (one at not to exceed $3,000) passenger motor vehicles; travel expenses, including examination of estimates for appropriations in the field; stationery, supplies, materials, and equipment; freight, express, and drayage charges; advertising, communication service, postage, washing towels, repairs and alterations, and other miscellaneous supplies and expenses not otherwise provided for and necessary for the practical and efficient work of the Department of Agriculture, hereafter in this act referred to as the Department, $2,050,000, together with such amounts from other appropriations or authorizations as are provided in the schedules in the budget for the current fiscal year for such services and expenses, which several amounts or portions thereof as may be determined by the Secretary not exceeding a total of $87,560, shall be transferred to and made a part of this appropriation: Provided, however, That if the total amounts of such appropriations or authorizations for the current fiscal year shall at any time exceed or fall below the amounts estimated, respectively, therefor in the budget for such year, the amounts transferred or to be transferred therefrom to this appropriation shall be increased or decreased in such amounts as the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, after a hearing thereon with representatives of the Department shall determine are appropriate to the requirements as changed by such reductions or increases in such appropriations or authorizations: Provided further, That, of appropriations herein made which are available for the purchase of lands, not to exceed $1 may be expended for each option to purchase any particular tract or tracts of land: Provided further, That no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be used for the payment of any officer or employee of the Department who, as such officer or employee, or on behalf of the Department or any division, commission, or bureau thereof, issues, or causes to be issued, any prediction, oral or written, or forecast, except as to damage threatened or caused by insects and pests, with respect to future prices of cotton or the trend of same: Provided further, That, except to provide materials required in or incident to research or experimental work where no suitable domestic product is available, no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be expended in the purchase of twine manufactured from commodities or materials produced outside of the United States.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN: On page 2, line 16, strike out "$2,050,000" and insert "$1,800,000."

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, first I want to call attention to the fact that a total of $550,000,000 will be available to the REA on July 1 for expenditure and allocation. Of course, $325,000,000, the amount now on hand, while it has not been expended, has been allocated. Certainly I feel that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is entirely too much alarmed, when the subcommittee has given the REA everything it can possibly expend in the way it should be expended, without waste and with prudence.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my intent, by the amendments which I shall offer today, to cripple or handicap any of the agencies or bureaus making up the Department of Agriculture. I shall present factual data only in support of the amendments which I shall offer, and leave it to the good judgment of the House as to whether or not the committee has been too lenient in its treatment of certain offices and bureaus in the Department.

Might I quote from a letter issued by the American Farm Bureau Federation as of May 24:

The Federation specifically recommends an over-all reduction of 20 percent in the expenditures for salaries, travel and other administrative expenditures of the Department of Agriculture. * * * A study of the bill and the committee report indicate that most of the reductions in appropriation have been in farm program expenditures, and most of the cuts in personnel and administrative expenses are in connection with reduction in farm programs. * * * Only token cuts were made in the personnel and administrative expenses of such agencies as the Secretary's office, where a cut of only $100,000 was made below the 1948 budget of $2,237,560, leaving a net increase of $18,350 above 1947 expenses. Likewise, the committee was quite generous with the Department's legal staff, reducing the solicitor's office only $100,000 below the budget, and only $54,000 below the 1947 appropriations, which aggregate $2,615,000. The Department is given nearly $5,000,000 for legal staff and for the Secretary's staff, or about one-third as much as the committee plans to give the entire triple A to serve 3,000,000 farmers in 3,000 counties.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that it is absolutely essential, as stated in my supplementary views in connection with the report, that certain amendments to this bill should be adopted so as to secure a balance between the cuts that have been made on the farmers of the Nation in their programs and those which should be made in personnel throughout the Department of Agriculture.

Please keep in mind that this great rambling structure known as the Department of Agriculture has today approximately 80,000 employees, and that number does not include the triple A, county committeemen, and township committeemen, who work on a per diem basis and who individually average a very small earning.

Let us see how the appropriations for the immediate office of the Secretary have been steadily growing. In 1938 that office received $452,700; 1939, $581,920; 1940, $618,210; 1941, $578,014; 1942, $613,970; 1943, $796,850; 1944—and here comes the first big jump—$1,648,184; 1945, $1,700,000; 1946, $1,654,000; and that was raised in 1947 to $2,048,500.

How are we going to stop the growth of this bureaucracy unless we start to put the pruning knife to it right now? Are we going to let these unproductive limbs on top of this apple tree keep shooting up into the air indefinitely or are we going to prune those shoots down to where they will produce the fruit we want produced for the farmers of America?

The Department is requesting in this bill $2,150,000. The committee has allowed $2,050,000, which, as the Farm Bureau very aptly states, is nothing but a token cut.

Mr. Chairman, I do not, personally, want to hamper in any way the work of this great Department which means so much to myself as a farmer, but I do feel that we could at least take 12 percent off of what the committee has allowed and reduce the $2,050,000 to $1,800,000.

We have cut the Secretary of Labor's office in this House by 20 percent below what he had available in 1947. I like to be fair with all of the departments. If the office of the Secretary of Labor can stand a reduction of 20 percent why cannot the Department of Agriculture in the immediate office of the Secretary of Agriculture stand at least a 12-percent cut? Is that asking too much?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Let me call the attention of the House to the fact that the Secretary's office is decidedly top-heavy in the Division of Personnel. In the budget chart we find the Director of Personnel, grade 15; two assistants, Division of Personnel, grade 14; two assistants to the Division of Personnel, grade 13, with seven other assistants doing various kinds of personnel work in the same grade—13. Remember, this is in the immediate office. There is also an administrative officer at grade 13, and three other heads, including an assistant to the Director of Personnel at grade 13, and under these, various chiefs of divisions doing personnel work in grade 12. In addition to this top-heavy setup, we also find a special assistant to the Director of Personnel in the same grade—12.

Now, besides all of this which obtains in the Secretary's office, we find in each of the bureaus and agencies in the Department proper that there is also a personnel office. Yet in the Secretary's immediate office alone $609,632 is asked for in the name of "Personnel activities."

I have not had the time to make a similar study of the Budget and Finance, nor of the Office of Plant Operations, which also stem from the Secretary's office. The policy-making branch of the Secretary's office requires, according to the estimate, $479,000 as requested in the budget, and general operations $473,244.

I do feel, ladies and gentlemen of this House, that $1,800,000 should be ample for the staffing of the Secretary's immediate office, and I am also convinced that the cause of agriculture will suffer in no way whatsoever through the adoption of this amendment, which will save the taxpayers of the Nation $250,000. This year we are setting the pattern for peacetime operations of these various bureaus. Might I again call to the attention of the House that we have seen fit, in the Labor and Federal Security appropriation bill to cut more than the percentage requested here from the immediate office of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. Chairman, I leave it to the good judgment of the Members of the House of Representatives as to whether or not this amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. I wanted the gentleman to be sure to distinguish between the directory down here in this tabernacle of the Department of Agriculture and triple A committeemen out in the courthouses of the country which comprise a grass-roots organization for which I think additional money should be appropriated. I believe the gentleman intends to offer an amendment to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman is absolutely correct. I am trying to squeeze a little water out of the bureaus here in Washington so we can make sure our triple A committee system, so necessary for our support price program, is preserved. I will offer my amendment to aid the AAA committees when that portion of the bill is reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, it has been said that every man, woman, and child in the world, including this country, stands only 8 inches from starvation. This is one of the truest statements, in my opinion, that has ever been made. We know, of course, what is meant by that, that the 8 inches which stand between us and starvation are the precious 8 inches of topsoil from which we all get our food and sustenance. We see what has happened to China down through the thousands of years because they did not adopt a sound conservation program. The valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates were once the most productive in the world. Today they are desolate and barren. We adopted in this country a few years ago a certain sound conservation program. All you have to do today in my State of Oklahoma is to check that work during the past few years to see what has happened to know that it is, and has been, a sound program.

Mr. Chairman, we all know that food occupies a very prominent place in world affairs. We appreciate it is our No. 1 problem. If the raising of food for our people and the people of the world is our No. 1 problem then soil conservation surely should rank as our No. 2 problem. When you find such men as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, opposing the drastic cuts in this bill, it is something we should take into consideration. When men like the gentleman from Kansas rise above partisanship, that should be noted, because this problem should be considered above partisanship. It is something that our urban population and the people who reside in our large cities are just as much interested in as the benefits that may accrue to our farmers.

I will now talk a little about partisan politics. I hope that the Republican House leadership and that Mr. Carroll Reece, chairman of the Republican National Committee, will give just a little thought to this. If we pass this bill as proposed here today and return Oklahoma to its Dust Bowl era, on the basis of the petitions I have received from my home county numbering several thousands in the last 2 days, you are going to take Oklahoma out of the doubtful column or out of the border-State classification next year. Let Mr. Reece study that over. He sent his orators down there last year to tell our farmers in Oklahoma that they were being regimented, that they had to go to a triple A office and sign two or three pieces of paper, that the farmers of this country should not be treated that way. He did make some impression on them at that time. But when this bill goes out of here with soil conservation and the related programs drastically cut they will feel differently. Those people were there before this conservation program went into effect, when our land was washing away, creating barren gullies all over the State, and they can see now that the land has become more productive, which causes our farmers not only to be more prosperous but causes us to have more food with which to feed the urban population of this country. When this Subcommittee on Appropriations for Agriculture met the other day, when the gentlemen who brought out this bill sat down around the table, the American farmer was prosperous, never more prosperous in his life. When you pass this bill today as it is presently written, he is going to be poorer than he has ever been. Unless you want to go back to 1930 and 1931 when cotton was selling for 3 cents a pound, and that is where you are heading with this bill, you had better restore these funds which are so vitally needed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SHEPPARD. When the gentleman refers to the subcommittee he should refer to some members of that committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman. Some of the members of the subcommittee. In the name of sanity, it behooves all of us, when we vote on these amendments today, to take all of these things into consideration when they so vitally affect every segment of our economy. These cuts are not economy. They are the wildest sort of extravagance. They are madness.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, first let me say to the members of the committee that I trust anything I might have said yesterday in the course of our discussion on the rule did not offend the finer sensibilities of any Member. You readily understand in an atmosphere of tension, sometimes earnestness, a kind of overzealousness develops remarks that in cold print often do not look so good. So if there was anything untoward or unseemly in what I might have said yesterday, I apologize to the House. I try always to be restrained in that respect.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ABERNETHY. We accept the gentleman's apology.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank my good friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY].

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WORLEY. I will say in all honesty and in all candor that no one in this House commands greater respect for honesty and fair play than the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am indeed grateful to the gentleman from Texas.

With respect to the pending amendment it leaves me with some difficulty, I am frank to say. It is the responsibility of the committee and the chairman to be thoroughly candid and forthright with the House, and I would be less than candid if I did not say that we did discuss a possible further cut in the administrative expenditures in the Secretary's office. I tried to err on the side of generosity. The Secretary was once a very distinguished Member of this body; in fact, for 10 years. The Secretary once served as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and we count him not only as a good public servant, but as a friend.

My theory about it is this: There are times, you know, when there is not a lot of noise from the foundry and the factory, and no evidence that the whole factory is working, but that the front office is busy. I visit a huge plant in my district in off times. I do not hear those accustomed noises, but I know that 20,000 people are working in the plant. Maybe orders are rather slow and maybe 4,000 or 5,000 are laid off for a while, and maybe at times, though, their office is busier than at other times. If this bill is sustained and we terminate some of the functions, it does not necessarily mean that the work of the Secretary's office is accordingly diminished. As a matter of fact, he is asking for additional representatives in the field of food and agricultural organizations and in the field of export at the present time. So the committee did not want to be niggardly and we permitted him what money we thought was necessary for the efficient and proper conduct of his office. After all, he is the directing head, and you cannot put yourself in the position of denying him the necessary analysts, the necessary statisticians, the necessary research people, and the necessary economists to do that great work, even though some of the functions of the Department may have been curtailed. So that is the whole story and I give it to you in all candor for your own disposition.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HORAN. We found what we thought were clear cases of duplication, did we not?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Indeed.

Mr. HORAN. And we asked the Secretary to make a correction.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. HORAN. And that is one reason given in the subcommittee for cutting the Secretary's office.

Mr. DIRKSEN. So there was a disposition to cut further, and there was a disposition not to cut at all, and we compromised in this bill. So the chairman finds himself in some difficulty in urging vigorous opposition to the amendment. I would much simply prefer to state the facts and then let the committee work its will on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN) there were—ayes 34, noes 92.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESEARCH AND MARKETING ACT OF 1946

To enable the Secretary to carry into effect the provisions of the act of August 14, 1946 (Public Law 733), including in addition to the objects for which funds are available for such act of August 14, 1946, and under title I of the Bankhead-Jones Act, as amended, personal services in the District of Columbia; printing and binding; over-all administration, planning, and coordination of research under section 10 pursuant to the provisions of section 10 (c); and necessary expenses for carrying out the provisions of title III of the act, as follows:

For payments to States, Territories, and Puerto Rico for agricultural experiment stations pursuant to section 9 of the Bankhead-Jones Act approved June 29, 1935, as amended by the act of August 14, 1946, $3,000,000, of which such amount as shall be allottable to Alaska shall be transferred to and made a part of the appropriation "Research on agricultural problems of Alaska," without matching requirement;

For research on utilization and associated problems pursuant to section 10 (a) of said act, $1,000,000;

For cooperative research other than research on utilization of agricultural commodities and the products thereof, pursuant to section 10 (b) of said act, $1,000,000;

For the improvement and development, independently or through cooperation among Federal and State agencies, and others, of a sound and efficient system for the distribution and marketing of agricultural products pursuant to the Agricultural Marketing Act of 1946 (title II of the act of August 14, 1946), $1,000,000;

In all, $6,000,000: Provided, That such sums as may be necessary for penalty mail as required by the act of June 28, 1944, may be transferred to the regular departmental appropriation therefor: Provided further, That for necessary printing and binding there may be transferred to, and made a part of, the item "Printing and binding, Department of Agriculture," such sums as are necessary: Provided further, That the Secretary may make available to any bureau, office, or agency of the Department such amounts from this appropriation as may be necessary to carry out the functions for which it is made, and any such amounts shall be in addition to amounts transferred or otherwise made available to other appropriation items of the Department: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for work relating to fish or shellfish or any product thereof.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have several amendments applying to various paragraphs under "Research and Marketing Act of 1946" on page 4 and page 5. Time would be saved by considering them all together. I ask unanimous consent that these amendments all be considered as one amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman intends that the section on "Research and marketing" be considered as completely read, down to the bottom of page 5?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is no objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON:

On page 4, line 25, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500,000."

On page 5, line 3, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500,000."

On page 5, line 9, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000,000."

On page 5, line 10, strike out "$6,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,500,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in the latter days of the last Congress a notable bill was enacted under rather extraordinary circumstances. It was unusual in that, being reported by the House Committee on Agriculture, it was fathered by two men, from opposite sides of the aisle, one the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], who probably has had longer service than anybody else on that great committee, who is perhaps better informed on agricultural matters than any other one man in the House, and who unquestionably, if by any misfortune we should ever have a Republican President, would be the Secretary of Agriculture.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] was joined in the sponsorship of that bill by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN], who likewise had long service on the committee and at the time was serving as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. We had here the rather extraordinary situation of two great leaders on both sides of the table, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN], advocating, in response, to widespread national sentiment, the establishment of this research program in the Department of Agriculture.

As the report of the committee before us today states, in reference to another provision of the bill, the accent today not only in agriculture but in industry is on research. Research has added tremendously to our national wealth. The development of plastics, rayon, synthetics, and innumerable other products is the outgrowth of research, and scientific study. It has paid rich dividends and has added to our national wealth and to the comfort and health of every family in the Nation.

We face a serious postwar problem. I do not have to tell you there is ahead of us, notwithstanding the temporary alleviation brought about by the exportation of vast quantities of agricultural products to Europe, an indigestible surplus of farm commodities for which we must find a market. As a matter of fact, if it were not for the fact that we are at this time feeding Europe as well as America we would today have unmarketable surpluses of many agricultural products on our hands right now.

One method of meeting this surplus is to develop new processes and new uses for farm products. This bill by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN] is the answer and was practically unanimously passed in both House and Senate.

Now in response to a budget estimate asking for $19,000,000 to put the program into effect, the committee recommends that we give them only $6,000,000 which was wholly inadequate to even start the plan.

Mr. Chairman, research requires time. We must get started early. We must act while the problem is ahead of us rather than wait until it is upon us. So in this amendment we are asking for a very modest increase—not the $19,000,000 budget estimate—but the amount required for the first year, a total of $9,500,000.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that we can have the support of both sides of the aisle on this amendment, in view of the fact that the original bill was sponsored from both sides of the aisle.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, the amount of money involved in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri is not overwhelming—it is not too great to consider, but the principle involved in the issue is very great.

Last year the Committee on Agriculture, of which I was then a member, brought this bill to the floor—a bill which created the agency for which money is now being asked. The committee was very definite in its statement as to what it wanted with reference to the conditions which had existed in previous years. I read from pages 5 and 6 of the committee report. I quote:

Testimony introduced at the hearings shows that the activity which the Department has developed to improve the marketing system has been shifted about through a long series of departmental reorganizations and at present the Marketing Research Service and regulatory activities are spread among various bureaus and agencies and departments of the Government.

Without reading the balance of the page or the top of the next page, I state that what the legislative committee said it wanted was a marketing or merchandising research agency that could be identified, the expenditures of which could be determined and separated from the expenditures in production research, and which could be separated from production research.

The bill and report showed what was intended to be set up. The first year was designated as 1947. The first year $9,500,000 should be asked; the next year $19,000,000; and so on up successively until $61,000,000 had been appropriated. This is in reality the first year. I have said publicly, and yesterday I said on this floor, that $19,000,000 would be cheap for what the legislative committee wanted. It would be very expensive for what the Congress is getting from the initial organization in the Department.

I would like to read from the hearings. There are questions by myself and others. The chairman then says this:

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Phillips, just to gather it up in one package, the burden of your argument is that this is a proposal to supplement research already in the Department of Agriculture, instead of consolidating and coordinating that research in one place?

I have here, but do not have time to show you, the Secretary's chart of the proposed organization. The point I am making is that this is not set up on the same level as research in production, but on a lower level, somewhat connected with it, but not as we intended to set it up. For that reason the subcommittee decided that $6,000,000 was adequate this year, and we would very willingly listen to requests for larger appropriations in the future if the organization is set up on the same level as production research, and identifiable.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. I well remember the gentleman's great interest in the bill, when it was considered in the Committee on Agriculture. It is a fact that the legislation which we enacted contemplated not only the use of existing Federal facilities, but it also contemplated the use of State facilities and, likewise, the facilities of private corporations of the country?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That is correct.

Mr. COOLEY. The purpose of the legislation was not to concentrate research within the Department of Agriculture, but rather to spread it throughout the Nation.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That is correct.

Mr. COOLEY. And to cooperate with all State departments of agriculture?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That is correct; and for that reason the subcommittee designated that of the $6,000,000 in the bill, $3,000,000 should be appropriated for the State services which the gentleman speaks about and a million each for three other items, one of which was also a coordinated service.

Mr. COOLEY. Does not the gentleman think that this is a very inconsequential amount of money to provide for such an important undertaking?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I think the amount of money is inconsequential. I think the principle involved is very great, because we are so late in the matter of marketing research that if we do not get it properly started now, we are that much later every month and every year.

Mr. COOLEY. Private corporations are spending much more money than we are in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] has expired.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORAN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HORAN. Approximately $30,000,000 is being spent by the Department of Agriculture now in research. The Department heads were not adamant when they came before our subcommittee. They did not answer our questions clearly as to which of the items included in the $30,000,000 applied to this principle we are discussing now, and we felt it was unsafe, when the Department itself was not sure of its ground, to jump, full grown, out of diapers into long pants in this matter. There may be things that should be explored first. That was the reason for the committee's action. I would suggest that on page 141 of the hearings you will find a table of the amounts and activities in research now being done by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. I would like to say that this legislation did not originate in the Department of Agriculture. It originated in the House Committee on Agriculture, of which the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] was a very distinguished member. It has the support of every commissioner or secretary of agriculture in this country. We are faced with no greater problem than the poblem with which we are dealing at this moment. I do not think we should cripple it by providing inadequate funds. I would like to mention one other thing—that it is a new undertaking and they have been in operation only a few months.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. They have not actually been in operation at all, but they are setting up the organization. I would agree with everything the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] says. What he says adds up to me to the fact that we should have the kind of agency we want before we appropriate the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this series of pending amendments close in 25 minutes, the last 5 minutes to be reserved for the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is on the pending amendment and amendments thereto?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. This limitation is only on the pending amendments offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. WHITTEN. I must object, unless the gentleman is willing to amend his request so as to reserve 10 minutes to the committee, 5 to be used on this side.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have no objection to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes, the last 10 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation, as has already been said, was enacted unanimously by this House last year after a unanimous report from the Committee on Agriculture. My recollection is that it passed unanimously in the Senate.

The legislation itself was the contribution of many different individuals and organizations. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] had introduced a bill previously which was incorporated in this bill. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN] had introduced a bill, I had introduced a bill, the farm organizations had various suggestions, and all of this legislation was merged into the bill known as the Research and Marketing Act which I believe everyone who has made any study of the matter agrees is a significant contribution to agricultural progress.

It is significant and it is important because of the fact that we are now in a new era as far as agriculture is concerned. During the war we increased our production over 30 percent, and we did that in spite of all the handicaps that confronted farmers during that time in the way of shortages of labor and machinery, fertilizer, and transportation. Now that we are getting out of the war period and farmers are again able to secure normal supplies and equipment, it is certainly not to be thought that our production is going to be any less; rather, the tendency is going to be to increase, and we have adopted a policy in this country as far as agriculture is concerned that we want a policy of abundant production.

In order to carry out a policy of abundant production we must have research, not only research in production—we have had that for many years and we have accomplished wonders through that type of research—but research in utilization and research in marketing, because it is in utilization and marketing that we are going to find how to consume these surpluses of agricultural commodities that we are going to have as soon as the present abnormal world demand for food is supplied; and that time is probably not very far in the future.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield briefly.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman is exactly correct in his stand on this matter, in my opinion. However, if opposition to this amendment is based on the ground that this is merely adding to the research funds of the Department, why cannot provision be made that it be used for the set-up provided for in the bill last year and contemplated at that time? I certainly want both—more research and carrying out the measure passed last year.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. If the gentleman will yield, the point raised by the gentleman from Arizona is the whole point in issue. The gentleman from Kansas is arguing the merits of the Research Act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be yielded to the gentleman from Kansas.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for three additional minutes.

Mr. HOPE. I thank the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. To the gentleman from Kansas may I say that I had not asked my question and that is whether he will not discuss the matter of getting the kind of committee the House wanted in the bill it passed setting up this marketing organization.

Mr. HOPE. I agree with the gentleman that there are some differences of opinion between the committee and the Department of Agriculture as to just how research in marketing should be conducted. That is only one phase, of course, of this legislation—research in marketing—but I believe the gentleman from California will agree with me that some considerable progress has been made toward getting together on that matter. At this time I do not believe it is the wise thing to cut down an appropriation; make it less than we ought to, merely because there is not complete agreement as to how the project shall be carried out. If we fail to provide enough money and the program does not make the progress it should, then the fault is on us, but if we make sufficient appropriations and the program is not successful, then, certainly, we have done our part.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The gentleman speaks of cutting down the appropriation. This is the first appropriation we have made.

Mr. HOPE. When I say "cutting down" I mean cutting down from the authorization contained in the bill for the first year. As a matter of fact, this nine and a half million dollars is cutting the budget estimate in half for this year because the budget estimate was $19,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word to my Republican colleagues on this matter. I do not happen to have with me a copy of the Republican platform of 1944, but if you will observe that platform, you will find that agricultural provisions of that platform emphasized research; that the Republican Party platform on agriculture for 1944 looked along the lines of abundant production and research to utilize that production.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. My information, both from the Department and from large cooperative organizations especially interested in this bill, is that the Department is nowhere ready to operate and that the funds we have given are plenty to carry them along. Why should we add anything if we want efficiency? The trouble with the Agriculture Department is we have been giving them money in a loose sort of way and we have no efficiency. It has not done the farmers the good it would have if the Department had acted in an intelligent way and if they were made to operate on that basis.

Mr. HOPE. I agree with the gentleman that the Department is not able to use the $19,000,000 at this time, but I do believe that the Department can make use of the nine and a half million dollars and that is what we ought to put in the bill today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to compliment the very distinguished gentleman who has just addressed the House. He is one of the co-authors of the bill for which we are about to provide the necessary funds. I heard him recently over the radio discuss very ably the research and marketing program. I compliment him and his colleagues on our committee for standing up for agriculture. Yesterday every Republican member of the House Committee on Agriculture opposed adoption of the very brutal rule which was forced on the House at that time.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLEVENGER. There were five Republican members of that committee who did not vote against that rule and I was one of them.

Mr. COOLEY. I am very sorry to hear that because yesterday morning when the committee met every Republican there went on record in opposition to the rule and it was my understanding that we authorized the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], our distinguished chairman, to so announce it to the House and he did announce it to the House. If the gentleman did not vote that way yesterday, I am very sorry indeed.

Mr. CLEVENGER. No; I did not, and no other person on this earth can pledge my vote at any time on any subject.

Mr. COOLEY. I thought the gentleman himself pledged it.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I did not.

Mr. COOLEY. And told the chairman to announce it to the House.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I did not.

Mr. COOLEY. I apologize very profoundly. It is interesting to see very distinguished Members like the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] stand up here and lecture the gentleman and the rest of the Republicans in this House for failure to keep faith with the Republican platform pledge.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I was a member of the national committee of the Republican Party that wrote the Republican platform.

Mr. COOLEY. Certainly the gentleman will stand by the Republican platform.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I have already said I think this $6,000,000 is sufficient.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Have we reached the point where $6,000,000 is such a measly sum we cannot start a new program with that amount of money?

Mr. COOLEY. I am not sure that I understand the gentleman——

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I asked if $6,000,000 is such a trivial sum that we cannot even start a new program?

Mr. COOLEY. Certainly, I do not think we can start the program with $6,000,000 when it embraces the entire Nation; and invokes one of the greatest problems facing the Nation today.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I hear so much about what the Republicans are doing. It sounds a good deal to me like you fellows always talk about economy, but you have never voted that way in your lives, and it is about time you do something like that or we are going to be wrecked.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, first I wish to endorse the attitude taken by the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] on the pending amendment.

Then I wish to add one word here in answer to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN] when he said a while ago that we would have $550,000,000 for rural electrification by the 1st of July. As a matter of fact, $340,000,000 are already allocated and, besides, he added to that $225,000,000, when the indications are that we will have $270,000,000 more in applications. Now, these applications are coming in at the rate of $30,000,000 a month, so in my opinion you are going to have to have far more than the amount even recommended by the Bureau of the Budget to meet the demands in every State of this Union.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Is the gentleman questioning my statement relative to that?

Mr. RANKIN. I think the gentleman was in error.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. May I quote Mr. Wickard before the committee?

Mr. RANKIN. I understand Mr. Wickard did not explain that this money had been earmarked. I know, because I discussed the matter with the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. May I read this testimony?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman can in his own time.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman does not care to be answered, in other words.

Mr. RANKIN. All right, go ahead.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Wickard states, "This leaves about $325,000,000 unadvanced," speaking of the amount authorized before this time.

Mr. RANKIN. All right, but the applications are already in. That $325,000,000 has all been allocated.

Now we are getting to the point where we can get the materials. We do not have to wait for copper. The average rural-electrification line now is made of alumir um with a steel core. The only trouble with REA is that they have the applications in or the allocations made, but they have not been able to get the materials up to now. Now materials are being made available, and I say we should provide every dollar that they can use. If they do not use it, it will not cost the Government a dollar. If it is used, it will add greatly to the wealth of the Nation, and will be repaid with interest.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, they might not use it, but it is awful dangerous to have it in their hands, because it is tempting to them.

Mr. RANKIN. It is "tempting" the farmer to do something for himself.

Mr. RICH. I am talking about these bureaucrats we have down here. You know that they are not responsible, and the less you give them the better they are off.

Mr. RANKIN. Listen, there never was an organization on earth that did more for any class of people, since I have been living, than REA has done for the farmers of this Nation in the last 10 years. And, they are very careful. Oh, I know this fellow, Levins, who got into trouble down there has been passing the word around trying to discredit the REA. He told them he was going to get even with them when he lost his job.

Mr. RICH. I am not shielding anybody.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand that. What I am trying to do is to get electricity to every farmhouse in America at rates the farmers can afford to pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORRIS].

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I make no charge at all impugning the motives of anyone. I think the gentlemen on both sides of the aisle are earnestly and sincerely trying to do the right thing, and I know it is a big task. I realize the task that you gentlemen who are specifically charged with that duty by reason of your committee assignment have in trying to reduce appropriations. I appreciate that, and I honor you for your courage when you honestly come out and take the gaff, as it were, in an effort to actually minimize expenditures, but I differ with you in your judgment, not in your sincerity of purpose, as to this bill. I will admit that you may be right. It may be that you are. But I call your attention to this significant fact: Nations become big-headed just as individuals do. I am afraid we are inclined to become big-headed, as a nation, and to think that we can do or fail to do anything we want to and still make progress; but we cannot.

I am sort of like Will Rogers, but I claim to be like that illustrious American in one respect only, that is, about all I know is what I read in the papers. According to the metropolitan press Russia, that we talk about so much, has produced by its experimentation and scientific investigation cotton that grows out in the fields with natural coloring of about all the colors of the rainbow. They also have produced a wheat that grows like alfalfa and does not need to be planted every year. They are making great strides in the field of agriculture. We need every dime that has been requested by this amendment to go forward with the great agricultural program of this Nation. I believe we will do an unwise thing by cutting it down. We are living in a day when we have begun to realize that we scarcely have scratched the surface of what we may accomplish in the agricultural field. Do you not know that out on the western plains, where I live, we sometimes produce 40 to 50 bushels of wheat to the acre on our best land; but the metropolitan press has also published the fact that in the Ukraine in Russia they sometimes produce 100 bushels of wheat to the acre. So let us wake up in this country of ours. You talk about building a bulwark against communism. The best way in the world for us to build that bulwark is to make America strong, and we can make it stronger, in my judgment, by building a strong foundation in the agricultural field than in any other possible way. So let us not make these proposed big cuts in these important agricultural items.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, this is not a party issue that is being considered at this time, this is an issue that is of vital import to the entire Nation. As has been stated, last year the Hope-Flannagan bill passed the Congress unanimously. It provided for research in the field of agriculture, utilization of products, and marketing. The bill provided that in the first year, which should have been this year, 1947, $9,500,000 was authorized for those programs, and in the second year, the year 1948, the year for which this appropriation is made, it should be $19,000,000. Appropriation was not made for the first year, so next year will be the first year of operation. This amendment provides that the sum shall be increased from $6,000,000, as carried in the bill, to $9,500,000 for research in the utilization of farm products and their marketing.

Certainly there could be no stronger argument for this bill than the conditions we faced a few years ago and until the war caused us to be able to handle the surplus products we had built up in this country. Millions of dollars have been spent from section 32 funds, millions of dollars have been spent through Commodity Credit Corporation operations to handle the surplus products of agriculture we have had in this country. The item in this bill for which this appropriation is requested provides for research in finding uses for those products so that in the future we will have a smaller and smaller surplus in those fields. I say you will be penny-wise and pound-foolish if you fail to make a proper appropriation for research in the use of those products which we know in the next few years are going to be surplus.

My friend and colleague on this committee from California states that his objection to this amendment is to the fact that a separate entity has not been set up in the Department, one that you can easily recognize. Why, the chief complaint against the Department is that there are duplications, and many times in the past when the Congress has wanted something done it has set up a different agency and a different group to do the work. The duplications that are complained of are brought about just because of the attitude some folks have, like my good friend from California, that every time you do something new you have to set up a different entity, something that you can recognize. I say that it ought to be coordinated and it ought to fit into other research by the Department.

We have had wonderful success in the field of research in production. We have seen hybrid corn and improved strains of wheat and cottonseed development. We have seen the rapid advances of research in production. But now that we can produce in the next few years more than we will be able to use, thus having surpluses, I say to you it is very short-sighted if we fail to make this appropriation for research utilization of products and their marketing because every surplus bushel of wheat and every surplus bale of cotton for which you find use so as to keep the Commodity Credit Corporation from having to buy it and so that you will not have to use section 32 funds to export it, will mean saving many times the money that you will be spending under this amendment which, after all, appropriates only half the money that was approved by the Bureau of the Budget in this case.

May I ask the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS], who is on his feet, if he can justify setting up separate entities and separate divisions for every phase of agricultural research? That is adding to the duplication—the very thing that he says he complains of.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I would not attempt to justify that because I am opposed to it. This bill calls for the consolidation of it. The gentleman, I am sure, would want to correct his remarks. He said I oppose coordination. I am very much in favor of coordination. What I am opposed to is absorption.

Mr. WHITTEN. With reference to this matter of the Soil Conservation Service and the AAA payments being duplications, I requested the gentleman in the committee that he vote with me to eliminate such duplication. My recollection is that he voted against it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, again it is worth calling the attention of the House to the fact that the appropriations made for the Rural Electrification Administration are, in reality, loans and not grants. These loans are made by the Government of the United States to local cooperative electric companies, who pledge their assets and earning capacity for the repayment of the money with interest. The period for the amortization of these loans was increased in 1944 from 25 to 35 years.

I am glad to call the attention of the House to the fact that there are at present no loans in the State of Iowa which are not in current condition, with all interest and principal payments kept up. I repeat, there are no arrearages in the State of Iowa by the cooperative corporations which borrowed the money from the Rural Electrification Administration.

The farmers of Iowa have borrowed in excess of $40,000,000 from the REA. Most of it was borrowed for the construction of lines, and only a very small percentage for financing the wiring and installation of other conveniences on the farmsteads. It thus appears that in our State of Iowa, which has been one of the large beneficiaries of the Rural Electrification Administration, the Government has not lost and will not lose one single penny of the money that it has advanced. Surely, here is a use of Government funds, beneficial and yet not extravagant.

It is undoubtedly true that there is no greater modern convenience for the farmer than a steady supply of electricity. Approximately one-half of the electricity used on the farms throughout the United States is used in the household, and the other half in productive activities outside the household. The labor-saving effect of productive electricity is outstanding. Not only does the electrification of farm homes bring about great improvement from the standpoint of comfort and satisfaction in rural life; it also brings about great economic productive value to the farmer. It raises the standards of living and the well-being of agriculture generally. If electricity is useful in the city home, it is doubly useful on the farm.

One of the critical needs in the State of Iowa is the expansion of generating capacity. The fact is that there is literally no additional generating power from which additional electric power can be procured. In my own district of 15 agricultural counties in the heart of the Corn Belt, there is 1 project where 212 farms have been wired for over a year but which cannot be connected with a high line because of the shortage of power. I sincerely hope that this House will see fit to make a proper appropriation for this work of such vital importance.

Again, let me emphasize that this is not a dollar hand-out to anyone, but money advanced by the Federal Government which will be repaid by the borrowers with interest. It has led, and will continue to lead, to an improvement of living conditions in rural America. It will make farm life more comfortable and attractive. It will help continue the vast production of foodstuffs, which were so vital a factor in winning the war, and have so important a place in regaining a stable peacetime economy and an ordered world. The elemental need of the starving world is food. Our farm people of the United States are glad to have so essential a part in helping care for that elemental need.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. Mr. Chairman, first let us understand clearly what is before the committee.

The budget estimate for research in marketing is $19,000,000. The committee allowed $6,000,000 and earmarked it for four different lines of activity. The series of amendments now on the desk of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] propose that $6,000,000 be raised to $9,500,000.

I trust the Committee will vote the amendments down.

I was very much interested when my friend from Oklahoma indicated that while the committee showed zeal and courage, sometimes it was with mistaken judgment. The best the committee can do is always to be guided by the testimony and make out the best case it can.

The story is about this: In the first place, the Department said they expected to run this up to $61,000,000 by 1951. With a program of that size the committee has to exercise the utmost caution. So we took a very good look to make sure that when the program begins the foundation is good and that it is launched in the right direction so that there will be a really efficient effort in the field of research.

It ought to be noted at the outset that this does not displace research in the Department. This is in addition to all other research. There is $59,000,000 worth of research in this Department and we have not disturbed it. We have not cut, for instance, research by the commodity branches in Production and Marketing Administration. That whole line of endeavor will go on just the same. But here we were confronted with an estimate calling for 1,830 people. That means trained people. That means people skilled in research and marketing. Where are they going to get them?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. WHITTEN. The figure which the gentleman mentions had to do with the $19,000,000 figure, as was said by my friend.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right; I am talking about the whole program.

But, here, with over 1,830 people they are building from the ground up. There are advisory committees which have only recently been established. So they are going to have to rob other bureaus of their scientific talent. Then, where will they get scientific talent to rebuild those bureaus? We have not put the ax on research. We have left the Bureau of Animal Industry and the Dairy Industry and that sort of thing pretty well intact.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. WHITTEN. Does not the gentleman think they would have a much better chance to get their personnel if they had the money than if they did not have the money?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely not. You cannot create a scientist. A former director of personnel for the Department of Agriculture told me in my office recently that they hired 10 people in the scientific field and could only get one genuine scientist. I said, "What did you do with the other nine?" He said, "We kept them." But getting scientific talent is a hard chore. Where are they going to find them? We went into this thing completely, because every member of the committee is interested in research, so we canvassed the situation. This is the most that in our judgment they can expend. The committee shares the view of the gentleman from Kansas. I conferred with him on many occasions and the committee conferred with him because we wanted to be sure that the action we were taking would in no way cripple the research activity. Insofar as the testimony indicates—and we labored this item probably more than any other item in the bill—in our humble judgment, after reviewing the whole business, this is as large an amount as they can efficiently expend. So I sincerely hope that no more money will be made available than can be efficiently expended.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. HORAN. In view of all the vagueness on the part of the Department themselves, we had the conviction that it would be far safer to start out at the proper size than to start out with an aggrandized program?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the best testimony on that point is that in the original estimate they asked for half a million dollars for travel. What in the world would they do with half a million dollars for travel, for scientific personnel, when the bureau has not even been set up? They are working around now on an exploratory basis to get it set up.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Is it not a fact that we have $39,000,000 for research in all things in this bill now?

Mr. DIRKSEN. All of that. So I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Does not Reorganization Plan No. 1 provide for the consolidation or transfer of all research in the Department of Agriculture, to the Secretary?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We hope in good time it will all be consolidated, but this is enough for this purpose.

I trust the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 83, noes 63.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the chairman appointed Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. CANNON to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 116, noes 109.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BATES of Massachusetts: On page 5, line 22, after the words "Provided further," strike out "That no part of this appropriation shall be available for work relating to fish or shellfish or any product thereof."

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to the bill because I firmly believe a great injustice has been done the fishery industry of this country by a proviso in the bill that seemingly exempts any benefits that they may receive from the Department of Agriculture in the field of research and marketing. The Department of Agriculture has already been doing much work over a period of years in cooperation with the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior.

In 1946 through Public Law 733 an advisory committee was established for the purpose of doing what they could in the field of research and marketing to develop means by which they could dispose of food, and this means not only agricultural products but also fishery products. The fish and shellfish provisions were included in that act, and purposely so in order that the work between the two departments of the Government could be coordinated and some real benefits flow to the fishery industries of this country. Down through these many months ever since the law was adopted much has been done by coordinating the efforts of the Department of Agriculture and the Fish and Wildlife Service in the Department of the Interior. In the field of research in transportation, marketing, packaging, and in the educational program of the country, where they could coordinate the problems of the fisheries in these respects with agriculture many benefits have come to the fisheries of the country.

The fisheries are losing the sum of $175,000 that they previously received as a result of distribution of the customs fees by the Department of Agriculture in their research studies. Those funds are cut out under the provisions of this bill, the latter part of the bill where those funds are rescinded under title II. As this bill now stands there is not a thing the Department of Agriculture can do to assist the fishery industries of the country as they have over a long period of time.

It was only recently that through the Department of the Interior Appropriation Act the commercial fisheries section of the Fish and Wildlife Service suffered a tremendous reduction. The House fortunately reinserted $150,000 so that they could continue the work as had heretofore been done in respect to assistance to the fisheries of this country. We must keep in mind that other nations of the world are considering fishery organizations as a major business and have set up major departments in their governments to deal with their problems. By clipping the funds that we have heretofore depended upon to help and assist the fisheries industry in the Department of the Interior Fish and Wildlife Service, and now through the Department of Agriculture, we are dealing a hard blow to one of the great industries of the country that is today struggling for its very existence, particularly on account of the rapid increase of imports coming from foreign sources deluging the markets of our country, and harassing our own industry to the point that many of them are facing bankruptcy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. All I am saying, Mr. Chairman, is that this amendment strikes out this provision in the bill that provides that no part of the research fund whatever shall be available for work relating to fish or shellfish or any product thereof. Give the fisheries a chance to get a little of the money, a mere pittance, as we might call it, of whatever fund may be available in the Department of Agriculture, that may be used for the study of transportation questions, packaging questions, marketing questions, education in our schools, all of which is carried on by the Department of Agriculture in respect to agricultural products but which at the same time could embrace fish and shellfish products as part of the food problem of the country.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. What justification has been brought forth for this limitation which has been placed in the bill, which will have the effect that the gentleman has stated?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I have not heard any up to the moment but perhaps the committee will explain the reason why this insertion is deliberately placed in this bill to exclude altogether any contribution or any assistance that the fishery industry of this country may get by the close cooperation of the Fish and Wildlife Service and the Department of Agriculture in the study of problems relating to both industries.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. Did not the raising of the amount from $6,000,000 to $9,500,000 lend color and strength to the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Yes, because it makes more money available. But what we are asking by striking out this provision in the bill is to permit the Department of Agriculture, if they think it is wise, at the same time they are carrying out the research program in respect to agricultural products, to embrace fishery products. It will not cost a great deal of money, but it does give the Department of Agriculture an opportunity to be of some assistance to the fisheries industry. Agricultural products are food and so are fisheries products and should be considered together in the field of research.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, certainly we could not expect the Department of Agriculture to undertake the research unless it deemed it necessary.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is right.

Mr. COOLEY. I do not have any commercial fisheries in my district, but it is an important industry on the eastern coast of North Carolina, and I am very much in favor of the gentleman's amendment to strike out that limitation.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the total expenditures made by the Federal Government for agriculture and also for fisheries is entirely disproportionate; let me say that it costs the taxpayers about $5.83 a ton for every ton of farm products produced in this country, but at the same time it only costs the taxpayers about 82 cents a ton for fish and sea-food products. It seems to me, from the standpoint of fairness, that we ought to have available in the Department of Agriculture some money that can be allocated for the purpose of joint studies of all food products, including fish and sea food, in a research program which is going on, particularly in the field of transportation, in the field of packaging, and in our school educational program. We should give some consideration to the great fishery industry of this country, the value of which at the present time is approximately $5,000,000,000.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the committee in its wisdom will accept this amendment which will permit the Department of Agriculture to assist, under the conditions that I have stated, the fishery industry, when they are carrying on the research program, and not to exclude them altogether as you do under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes, the last 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I join completely in support of the amendment offered by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES]. It is rather difficult for me to understand why the Committee on Appropriations put in the bill the proviso stating that "no part of this appropriation shall be available for work relating to fish or shellfish or any product thereof." It was only last year that we included fish and shellfish in the Research and Marketing Act. Last year we permitted research in connection with fish and shellfish to be carried on in accordance with any appropriations made. By the provisions of this bill, if enacted into law, none of the appropriations can be used for that purpose.

The language of this paragraph is specifically directed at excluding the fishing industry, commercial fishing, from getting any of the benefits of whatever appropriation may ultimately be made. We do not ask that a specific amount be appropriated. We leave it, within the amount finally appropriated, to the discretion of the Department of Agriculture. I assume the Department of Agriculture in a matter of this kind consults with the Fish and Wildlife Division of the Department of the Interior.

We must bear in mind that the fishing industry is the oldest in the Western Hemisphere. We also must bear in mind that it is a billion-dollar industry, and that it extends all over our country. It is not confined to the Northeast, it is all along the Atlantic coast, the Gulf, the Great Lakes, and the western coast, and it extends far out into the Atlantic and the Pacific.

Following the insertion of fish and shellfish into the Research and Marketing Act of last year, the Department of Agriculture, in consultation with the Fish and Wildlife Service, appointed an advisory committee of 11 persons to carry out the intent of Congress. It is my understanding that there was appropriated a small amount in connection with this activity. At the most, the amount allocated out of the funds appropriated would be a small amount. It is difficult for me, and I speak frankly, to understand why the subcommittee specifically excluded fish and shellfish from any consideration, so far as research and marketing is concerned.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Coming from Missouri, I am about as far away from both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and the Great Lakes and the Gulf as any State in the Union. I have no fisheries in my district. However, fishing is a great thriving industry in this country. I can see no reason for excluding this specific industry. It made an enormous contribution to the Nation during the terrible war years, as the gentleman well knows, and it needs protection.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman from Missouri for his contribution. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. COLMER. I was interested in trying to ascertain just why the committee would take this action excluding fish and shellfish. Has the gentleman been able to find out the reason therefor? Is it because a comparatively small section of the country is affected?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not know of any reason. I hope that it is an oversight on the part of the committee. Those things happen, and if that is the case they ought to frankly admit it and accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I would like to say that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] is quite acceptable to me. Of course, the other members of the committee may speak for themselves, but it is entitled to fair consideration.

Mr. McCORMACK. I appreciate the statement of my friend from California.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE].

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Like my colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], I do not live near the coast, but I am confident this is an equitable amendment and should be adopted.

I am happy to have been among those who voted just a few moments ago to restore the desired and essential appropriations to carry out the Research and Marketing Act of 1946, as described by the capable gentleman who preceded me.

I would like to point out in my few comments the serious marketing problem which confronts the tobacco growers of our country and what this Research and Marketing Act of 1946 promises not only to the tobacco growers but other farm products, in view of alarming surpluses which now loom on the horizon.

Shocking news to the tobacco farmers of North Carolina and every tobacco area of our land came from London within recent days. Members of Congress, Agriculture and State Department experts, tobacco manufacturers, not to mention the tobacco smokers of Britain, were stunned when the British Government announced a 50-percent increase in excise taxes on tobacco.

Last year Great Britain sent $220,000,000 to the United States to purchase American tobacco. Worried British officials insist that this continued program cannot continue in view of Britain's serious financial crisis, and in order to stop the flow of dollars from England, the English smoker must pay dearly for his favorite American brand.

Figures released by the Chancelor of the Exchequer of England indicate that the smokers of England are smoking one-third more than before the war. British smokers are consuming over 250,000,000 pounds a year. Of this amount, 80 percent comes from the United States.

British leaders point out that the whole total of goods sold to the United States just about equals the English consumption of American tobacco. Chancelor Dalton of the Exchequer said this was fantastic and must be stopped.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BONNER. I agree with the gentleman in all that he says with respect to the tobacco situation, but I regret very much that I was not on the floor when the time was limited with respect to the so-called Bates amendment which is now pending.

Had I been present I would have asked for time myself because as a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House I recall that during the war days the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee had the Department of Agriculture before it with respect to this very item, and it will be recalled by all of us who were here during that time that the fishing industry of this country gave great strength to the war effort in the increased production of fish for its food value and other uses during the war years. The greatest effort was put forth in the Department of Agriculture to increase the taking of fish both on the Atlantic coast and Pacific coast which was greatly increased not only by the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior but by the Department of Agriculture as well under this very provision.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The facts are that at the same time these studies and researches have been going on by the Department of Agriculture, they have acted jointly with the Fish and Wildlife Service, and this bill prevents them from so doing by this amendment.

Mr. BONNER. It is a terrible mistake for the House not to adopt the Bates amendment.

Mr. DEANE. Now, may I proceed with reference to this serious tax situation recommended, and which I am sure Great Britain will soon put into effect?

The American Government recognizes that Great Britain faces a financial crisis, and these stern measures they are adopting should be a sobering influence upon us Americans. Yet, this new British policy will seriously influence our own 1947 tobacco market.

How, you ask?

Follow me closely. In 1946 the United Kingdom bought 364,000,000 pounds of American tobacco, paying approximately $215,000,000. On these 364,000,000 pounds the British Government levied an import duty of $7.15 per pound. Under the new British tax policy for 1947, they would levy an import duty of $11.04. This means that the British smoker will not pay 47 cents but 67 cents per package. In view of the fact that the average hourly wage in Great Britain is 40 cents, it is simply logical that less tobacco will be used.

The power to tax in this case is the power to destroy a large volume of American exports of tobacco. Our own Government experts predict that British tobacco purchases from America will be cut one-third, or 121,000,000 pounds.

Last year the American farmer grew 1,350,000,000 pounds of tobacco. Forty-five percent, or over 600,000,000 pounds, were sold abroad. Of this 45 percent, two-thirds went to England.

This year our tobacco crop is expected to yield 1,250,000,000 pounds. If Britain follows through with her tax policy, as she is certain to do, she will buy approximately 240,000,000, a drop of 125,000,000 pounds.

It is generally conceded that with Canada, Mexico, and other countries growing their own tobacco, we lose our best customer in Great Britain and, thus, we can expect lower tobacco prices. These remarks are not broadcast to alarm you but to be prepared to expect a sudden drop.

Our tobacco farmers have this satisfaction, that while there is a lack of purchasing power abroad, the United States Government will guarantee the tobacco farmers for two more years a price of 90 percent of parity.

The question arises how long can our Government continue this program. It is conceivable that the United States Department of Agriculture will be left with many millions of pounds of tobacco on hand at the end of this year in order to guarantee parity.

The Congress should support this new Marketing and Research Act with every means at its command. Let me point out also the tremendous challenge and responsibility which rests with the Department of Agriculture in carrying out the provisions of the act. It is imperative that the best brains of the country be brought into play in furthering this new program. A new frontier with enormous markets for the products of the American farmer appears to be opening. There is not any time to lose in the job to be done and let us accomplish the task while time remains.

Finally, let me urge the growers of tobacco, that in order to hold up their prices for the 1947 season, grow the very best tobacco. In my opinion the words you will hear ringing through the tobacco warehouse during the approaching season will be quality and not quantity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no one in my respect of and affection for the fishing industry and the work that I do as a Member of Congress in defense of the fishing industry. Only this morning I spent 15 minutes before the Senate Appropriations Committee, appropriating for the Department of the Interior. I spoke in behalf of the full budget amount for the commercial fisheries item in the pending Interior bill. I spoke in behalf of the Market News Service which is conducted by the Fish and Wildlife Service in the Department of the Interior. I spoke in behalf of the item of $175,000 that I believe has been indirectly appropriated out of section 32 funds and transferred from the Agriculture Department to the Department of the Interior.

We are not today appropriating for the Department of the Interior. We are appropriating for the Department of Agriculture. If we are going to have any semblance of order in our budgetary approach to implementing the offices in the departments of this Government of ours, we must recognize that we do have departments, each with its Cabinet head. If we are going to appropriate money in one department and have it diffused out through all the other departments of Government, under one expedient excuse after another, we will never be able to provide properly for the different departments.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is a fact that ought to be emphasized. This money was transferred to the Department of the Interior and we could not make a direct appropriation in this bill for the Department of the Interior. That is the essential thing involved.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. All this amendment does is to permit the Department of Agriculture, as it has done for years past, to coordinate their activities with the Fish and Wildlife Service in the field of research, in the field of transportation, in the field of education, in the field of packaging, and by this amendment you strip them of any authority, even to coordinate their activities.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further. I think we will have to draw lines and hold to them.

A former Secretary of the Interior noticed this mistake that had been made by the Seventy-ninth Congress, and in a column written by this gentleman on April 1, he ended his column with these words:

> The Eightieth Congress has a chance to rectify this error. The Congress must appropriate funds if it is to implement this scaly scheme designed to take fish and shellfish surveys away from the Fish and Wildlife Service and place them in Agriculture. Moreover, it would be saving the taxpayers' money and preventing duplication even if it would be disturbing a lobbyist's dream.

I want to call your attention to the Budget that was presented and available to every Member of Congress. If you will turn to page 563 of the Budget for fiscal 1948, you will find outlined there the legislative foundation for this appropriation in the Interior appropriation bill. It belongs in the Department of the Interior, and all those who would preserve and protect what I think is one of the United States best industries, had best see that it is protected as a Department of the Interior appropriation.

Now I yield.

Mr. HAND. Was the gentleman referring to a report made by former Secretary Ickes?

Mr. HORAN. He happens to have been the commentator.

Mr. HAND. Does not the gentleman believe that this order he is seeking should be restored by the legislative committee and not by a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. HORAN. Not in this case, because we, the Subcommittee on Agriculture, have no right to appropriate for the Department of the Interior.

Mr. COLMER. With reference to the statement of the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee that here you are merely transferring funds to the Interior Department, is that technically correct? Are you transferring them or are you cutting them out?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The situation, may I say to the gentleman, is that heretofore $175,000 of section 32 funds in the Department were transferred to the Department of the Interior. Those funds were taken out, and in consequence this was merely a covering amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided and there were—ayes 48, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR

For necessary expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and payment of fees or dues for the use of law libraries by attorneys in the field service, $2,425,000, together with such amounts from other appropriations or authorizations as are provided in the schedules in the budget for the current fiscal year for such expenses, which several amounts or portions thereof, as may be determined by the Secretary, not exceeding a total of $136,000 shall be transferred to and made a part of this appropriation; and there may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia not to exceed $1,597,000: Provided, however, That if the total amounts of such appropriations or authorizations for the current fiscal year shall at any time exceed or fall below the amounts estimated, respectively, therefor in the Budget for such year, the amounts transferred or to be transferred therefrom to this appropriation and the amount which may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia shall be increased or decreased in such amounts as the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, after a hearing thereon with representatives of the Department, shall determine are appropriate to the requirements as changed by such reductions or increases in such appropriations or authorizations.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN: On page 6, line 5, strike out "$2,425,000 and insert "$2,025,000."

SOLICITOR'S OFFICE

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is being offered in view of the fact that the programs of the Department of Agriculture are being curtailed considerably in the bill which is before the House. As a direct consequence, the work of the Solicitor's Office, especially in relation to the farm-tenancy loans, subsistence loans, and various matters in connection with crop insurance and the AAA program, has been very much lessened and surely an organization which is already today top-heavy can be shaved down to a certain extent without doing harm to anybody in America, least of all the farmers in America.

It is my opinion that we should be consistent with respect to cuts in the appropriations for the various agencies in the Department of Agriculture, insofar as reasonably possible. I do not mean that all agencies should receive the same cut percentagewise, but the fact remains that the effects of cutting one organization severely and leaving others alone will undoubtedly result in bad feelings throughout the Department.

When we consider the entire bill as a whole—programs, personnel, and such have been cut to the extent of 30 percent—it would seem that it is not out of line whatsoever to request that the Solicitor's Office, already top-heavy, should take at least a 20-percent cut below what they have had available this past year. This is especially in view of the fact that its work as detailed in this bill will be considerably lessened.

The committee has seen fit to reduce the $2,525,000 requested for this office by only $100,000. Might I at this point again call attention to the statement put out by the American Farm Bureau Federation in which they term this cut as a token cut only. Please keep in mind that the American Farm Bureau Federation does feel that 20 percent of the personnel throughout the Department of Agriculture could be well eliminated without injury to agriculture.

I do want to call attention to this one fact, and that is, the lawyers in the Office of the Solicitor and the Solicitor himself, together with the nonprofessional people assigned thereto, make up what is called a service organization. They do not produce. They do not do the research, diffuse the useful knowledge, gather the market news, take action necessary to provide the support and loans for commodities, or perform other services which the Department renders to the public and to the farmers. The Solicitor's Office renders legal services, and legal services only, to the administrative or operating people of the Department. Is it not reasonable that cuts in appropriations which reduce personnel and activities of the administrative and operating people, the clients in this instance, should be matched by a comparable reduction in the appropriation for the service agency?

The bill as it now comes before you provides for a mere 4-percent cut in the cost of legal services in the Department. As I stated I do not profess to be able to calculate accurately the effect of the proposed cuts throughout the Department upon the Solicitor's Office and consequently am not inclined to urge a percentagewise cut of 32 percent in this office. On the other hand, as I also indicated a moment ago, I am convinced that the application of a little common sense will result in the conclusion that this legal service organization should be cut more than 4 percent when the clients are being cut more than 30 percent. May I call to the attention of the House the last sentence in the section of this report in connection with this item which reads as follows:

> The committee is of the opinion that an overhauling of the organizational set-up in the Solicitor's Office whereby more legal talent can be devoted to actual legal work rather than supervision could effectuate additional economy in this office.

Please also note that the Solicitor in his statement before the committee predicated his request for more than two and one-half million dollars to a great extent upon work anticipated incident to the Farm Home Administration.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. I am a lawyer and a farmer. I am wondering. For the life of me I cannot conceive of any material or beneficial aid that a solicitor or a lawyer would render to the farmers of this country. If it is wet he cannot make it dry. If it is dry he cannot bring rain, he cannot impel an invasion of grasshoppers or crickets. It seems to me it is a soft job for a lawyer who probably could not make a living if we put him out on his own.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that back in 1938 only $195,000 were appropriated for this particular Solicitor's Office. In 1942 $232,000. Of course, up along in 1944 we did give them the REA and other jobs to take care of, but we see at the same time that they have jumped up to $1,679,000 in 1944. Last year they had $2,214,000. They are asking this year for $2,525,000. Where is this bureaucratic tree going to stop growing? I am trying to prune this tree before it gets too high. You know, the branches on top never do any good as far as producing fruit is concerned. Let us try to instill a little economy into the Solicitor's Office, as well as endeavor to relieve the load upon the taxpayers of the Nation. Four hundred thousand dollars is a reasonable cut; 20 percent is a reasonable cut. They can stand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Are we going to get down to common sense and really try to effect a little economy or are we not?

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. Is it not a fact in this bill the Department is asking for 223 solicitors or lawyers?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. They are asking for too many, I will say to my good friend from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman is very modest in the amendment he has introduced.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. We have given the farm programs, that the Solicitor's Office is supposed to take care of, a 30-percent cut in the bill in order to effect economy so that we can balance our budget. Why can we not cut this legal personnel by at least 20 percent? I think that is only reasonable.

Mr. JENSEN. Is it not a fact also that any time the Department of Agriculture wants to get some legal service, they can go to the Department of Justice?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Why, certainly, in many instances.

Mr. JENSEN. They are at their disposal every minute. I had hoped the gentleman was going to offer an amendment to strike out at least twice as much as he has.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I am trying to be reasonable. I am a farmer, and I certainly do not want to do anything to hurt our great Department of Agriculture, but I do want to see to it since this Congress has seen fit to take away 30 percent of the program of the farmers, that we take at least 20 percent of the personnel out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is a Member of the House who knows anything of my voting record but what he will agree that I have consistently voted for economy. I know there are many Members on both sides of the aisle who will agree with that statement. I have been very conservative and endeavored to so be on every vote that I have cast, whether it be a money matter or one regarding the social problems of the people of this country or of the world.

But I want to call the attention of the Republicans—and I shall not give you a lecture because I am not capable of doing that—to the fact that I have heard many of you make speech after speech criticizing those of us in the minority, who last year were in the majority, for throwing dollar after dollar after dollar across the pond to the people of Europe and never doing anything for our own. That particularly applies to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and also the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], as well as many others.

Since you have lectured us Democrats so often on spending our substance on the people of foreign lands, I want to check the record for a moment to determine where our dollars are being spent and who has been doing the spending.

I hold in my hand the front page of the Times-Herald of Washington of May 22, 1947, which is the second best Republican newspaper in the country, second only to the Chicago Tribune, if that be any credit to its journalism, and on the front page of that paper I see a headline as follows:

The House votes $350,000,000 foreign relief for Europe by a vote of 288 to 86.

Those 86 dissenting votes, my friends, do not equal but about one-third of the Republican membership of this House and they by no means were all Republican votes.

After we had been lectured time and again by our Republican friends to do something for our own people, for instance the American farmer, the farmer of the bread basket of this country, and of the cotton South and of the far West, this same newspaper in another column announced that you Republicans had brought out an agricultural appropriation bill cutting $400,000,000 off of the American farmer. Wherein is your consistency? How much did you save? You saved $50,000,000 if this bill passes as it, which it is not going to do, and you made the farmers of Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, New York, and the rest of this country pay the whole European relief bill, plus a $50,000,000 tip.

Now let us see who voted for that $350,000,000 relief bill. Your privilege to vote as you chose I do not question—the sincerity of your lectures to us Democrats I do. Let us take the Republican membership of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Agriculture, which recommends these drastic cuts and we will take them alphabetically. For that $350,000,000 which we so gently and graciously on April 30, threw across the water to Europe—and this was not a Democratic controlled Congress doing the "chunking"—the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN] voted "aye." The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] voted "aye." The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN] voted "aye." The gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS], who is not willing to give $3,500,000 additional to a farm-research program, as he told you a moment ago, voted "aye." The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] voted "aye." And, lo and behold, the Republican majority leader who is now facing me, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] voted "aye," and so did the Republican whip, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS] and so did the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. Now, who is doing the "chunking?" Who is forgetting the people at home?

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Just as soon as I finish I will yield.

On the 9th day of May we had before us another bill to "chunk" some more money across the water, $400,000,000 to Greece and Turkey. Let us take the personnel of this subcommittee and see how they voted on that day, and see how they were going to take care of all this economy they were going to settle upon the hard-working farmers of this country. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN] voted "aye." The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] was paired "aye." The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN] voted "aye." The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] voted "aye." And the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS], be it one time said to his credit, consistent with his argument here today, voted "no." The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] voted "aye." The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS] voted "aye," and the distinguished Republican majority leader voted "aye."

Then on the 22d day of May, when the conference report on the $350,000,000 appropriation bill came back to the House, and we had another roll call on the bill, Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN again voted "aye," Mr. DIRKSEN voted "aye," Mr. HORAN voted "aye." Mr. PHILLIPS voted "aye," Mr. PLUMLEY voted "aye," Mr. TABER voted "aye," Mr. ARENDS voted "aye," and Mr. HALLECK voted "aye." Have you ever heard of such rubber stamping?

Aye! Aye! Aye! Aye for everyone!

And on this same day you bring in an appropriation bill to kick the slats out of the American farmer to the tune of $400,000,000.

Aye! Aye! Aye! for European relief—No! No! No! for American farmers—so say the Republicans.

Those are the men who would deny 49,000 veterans of this country a loan through the farm-tenant-purchase program to start a home and a family; who would deny research for agriculture; who would refuse to pay in full committed AAA payments; who would deny electricity to our farm people, all in the name of economy. Well why did not you think of that when you were giving so much to Europe.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, we are seeking to expedite this bill. I regret extremely that I must object.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Well, I know it hurts and am sorry you cannot stand more of it. If this is the kind of economy we are going to have, Mr. Chairman, I do not want any of it. You Republicans are committing political hara-kiri. I wish I could sympathize with you but I cannot.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS

For necessary expenses, including not to exceed $1,887,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia, including the salary of Chief of Bureau at $10,000 per annum, and not to exceed $1,000 for the purchase of books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers, as follows:

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] will at the proper time offer an amendment to restore the $25,000,000 taken away from the tenant-purchase program. The appropriation for the Farmers Home Administration, an agency of the Government which was created just last year.

It took over the functions of the Farm Security Administration, which was in disrepute, and also the functions of the Emergency Crop and Seed Loan offices. After the Farm Security had gotten into disrepute, the Administrator resigned and a former Member of the House of Representatives, Hon. Frank Hancock, was appointed Administrator. When he resigned, after making a very fine record, Mr. Dillard Lasseter, of the State of Georgia, took over, and he became the first Administrator of the Farmers Home Administration.

This economy-minded Republican subcommittee, after lengthy hearings, provided $25,000,000, the budget having recommended $35,000,000. After the bill was reported they went back, and instead of making a scientific cut they dug up this agency, roots and runners. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY] has just said, 49,000 veterans of World War II who have applications now on file and who desire to purchase farms and avail themselves of this very beneficial legislation, will be disappointed and disgusted.

Although I happen to be the author of a bill, the Farmers Home Administration bill, and although I was chairman of the subcommittee of our committee to investigate the Farm Security Administration, I know I am not the only friend of that agency in the House of Representatives. I know that the agency has many friends in the Republican Party and among the membership of this House generally. I think Mr. Lasseter has done a magnificent job. He has accomplished many economies, and has made an excellent record. Members of both parties should be willing to trust him in the further administration of this program.

It seems to me it would be almost a tragedy for the House to disappoint the 49,000 veterans who are now waiting for an opportunity to purchase a farm home and start themselves in the business of farming.

I appeal to the Democrats and likewise to the Republicans to support the Whitten amendment, when it is offered, and restore this $25,000,000. I know the Republicans of the House Committee on Agriculture were just as friendly to this agency as the Democrats. I know what the answer will be when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] comes to the well of the House. He will tell the House and the country that Mr. Lasseter has done an excellent job and that Frank Hancock likewise did a fine job as Administrator. He will tell you that the collection record is superb. I have detailed information which I will place in the RECORD but which my time will not permit me to discuss now. He will try to justify the action of this committee by saying that after his committee had given careful thought to the matter, President Truman wrote a letter to Secretary Anderson suggesting that Mr. Anderson call a Nation-wide conference, a conference of all of the officials of public and private lending agencies engaged in making loans to farmers on real property.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, when that letter was received, and publicity was given to it, the idea went abroad that the President was afraid we were going into some sort of inflationary spiral in farm-land values. All of us know that if we have inflation in the rural sections of the country, certainly we have inflation in the cities of America. If we are going to deprive the farmers of America of an opportunity to buy farm homes, certainly we should repeal all veterans' legislation which is now on the books. We should do away with many of the features of the GI bill of rights, because certainly no Member would be justified in discriminating between veterans in the city and veterans in the country.

Going back to the argument which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] will make—and it is easy for me to anticipate his argument, because I heard his statement before the Rules Committee, and I have read the report—a little supplemental report that they put in here—but the effect of it was to destroy absolutely the tenant-purchase program. His suggestion is that he and the Republicans on his committee are trying to follow Mr. Truman and strengthen his arm as he is trying to retard and control the forces of inflation on the farm. Now, the fact is, I have here a letter from Secretary Anderson. I checked with him. He checked with the White House and the White House checked with Mr. Truman in Kansas City. I will read it to the House for your consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., May 27, 1947.

Hon. HAROLD D. COOLEY,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. COOLEY: In reading the report to accompany H. R. 3601, the bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, we find that while $50,000,000 was available for farm tenant loans for the fiscal year 1947, and while the budget submitted an estimate of $35,000,000 for 1948, the Appropriations Committee has deleted the entire amount. This action is accompanied by a statement of the committee that the committee remains a firm friend of the farm tenant loan program and suggests that its action in eliminating the appropriation should strengthen the hand of the President in his current move to halt the excessive inflation of farm land values.

On May 16 the President directed a letter to me expressing his deep concern about the recent rise in farm real estate prices. He was careful to point out that while 24 States had real estate values which are now above the inflationary peak of 1920, there was yet time to prevent further inflation in farm real-estate prices and the overexpansion of farm debts. He suggested an early conference for consideration of the problem.

I know from my discussions with the President, both prior and subsequent to the sending of this letter to me, that by his suggestion for a conference on the farm real-estate situation, he did not desire nor intend to destroy the farm tenant purchase program. Since the report of the Appropriations Committee was issued I have rechecked this with the President and find that he is strongly opposed to a curtailment of the farm tenant program to any point lower than the figure carried in his budget. Many veterans returning from the war have been able to find farms which they can purchase at noninflated prices, sometimes from aged parents who have lived a long time on the farm and are quite ready to retire. We now have pending 83,997 applications for the purchase of farms under the farm tenant program, of which number 41,560 are from veterans.

The record of the Department shows that during the past year, using the appropriations made available a year ago, we have been able to help tenant farmers acquire land under this program at an average of only $3 per farm more than a year ago. These loans to veterans and others are made under a policy which recognizes the long-time earning value of these lands, and purchases made on that basis do not contribute to inflation, but on the contrary set a pattern for the sound transfer of farm real estate from one owner to another. We need that good example and I hope that the Congress will restore the $35,000,000 carried in the President's Budget for the purpose of making these self-liquidating loans on which the repayment record is extremely good.

Sincerely yours,

CLINTON P. ANDERSON,
Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. In addition to that, I know everybody in this House should be interested not only in the views of the Secretary of Agriculture and the President of the United States, but I venture the assertion that the House Committee on Agriculture is still quite friendly to this item and I believe that the gentleman from Illinois is likewise favorable to the tenant-purchase program. I believe he will be frank enough to tell the House that collections have been excellent under the management of Mr. Lasseter.

I do not want the House to be led astray by thinking that in cutting out this item they are strengthening the arm of the President. You have just heard a letter that came almost directly from Mr. Truman. It came to me through Clinton Anderson, a former Member of the House and a splendid Secretary of Agriculture.

I have here another letter which I will place in the RECORD at this point but which I will not take the time to read. It comes from the American Veterans Committee.

(The letter referred to follows:)

THE AMERICAN VETERANS COMMITTEE,
Washington, D. C., May 27, 1947.

Hon. HAROLD D. COOLEY,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE COOLEY: The 1948 agricultural appropriation bill reported by the House Appropriations Committee in effect denies qualified veterans with limited capital resources the opportunity of entering the farming business. By eliminating funds for direct loans from the farm-tenancy provisions of the proposed bill, the committee has deprived veterans of the right to purchase farms under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, a right assured them under the GI bill of rights.

The American Veterans Committee urges the immediate restoration of the $25,000,000 appropriation recommended by the Appropriations Subcommittee for this purpose.

Two out of every three veterans working in agriculture when they entered the armed forces have returned to farms. This group includes over a million veterans, many of whom desire to become farm owners. We believe that they should be given every opportunity to achieve this objective.

The Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, makes veterans eligible for loans under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. The Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, further augments veterans' opportunities of becoming farm owners by giving them preference over nonveterans. This act also provides for special farm-purchase loans to disabled war veterans.

Under these authorities, the Farmers Home Administration has made over 4,300 farm-purchase loans to veterans and had on hand over 40,000 additional applications from veterans as of April 30, 1947. Over 50 percent of the farm-purchase loans made this year were to veterans.

The committee report justifies the elimination of direct farm-purchase funds on the basis that such loans are too inflationary. Without careful selection of farms this statement could become a reality. We firmly believe, however, that a minimum of $25,000,000 could safely be loaned to veterans who desire to purchase farms from relatives and others at less than current market prices, to veterans who need to develop and improve farms they already own, and veterans who are able to purchase farms in areas that have not been seriously affected by high land prices without adding to the inflationary trend. Farm-development loans particularly are anti-inflationary because such loans are used to make improvements such as drainage, land clearing, and building repair and construction, and do not involve the purchase of land.

A veteran entering the farming business needs assistance in selecting his farm and in planning his farming activities during the first few years of his new occupation—a highly specialized and competitive one. Also, as a result of his military service, he has had little opportunity to accumulate sufficient capital to make the down payment needed to qualify for a loan from other sources. In order to give veterans a fair chance to purchase farms and to obtain assistance needed to become firmly established in this business, we strongly urge that a minimum of $25,000,000 be appropriated for direct farm-purchase loans under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act and that adequate funds be provided for effective administration of the program.

Sincerely yours,

CHAT PATERSON,
Legislative Representative, American Veterans Committee.

Mr. COOLEY. The American Legion is in favor of this item.

I believe that every labor organization in America and every farm organization in America is in favor of restoring this item to this bill.

I will hereafter submit for your consideration the agricultural policies of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

This 1948 agricultural appropriation bill, as reported by the House Appropriations Committee, proposes to eliminate direct loans from the farm-tenancy item, thereby denying qualified veterans with limited capital resources the opportunity of entering the farming business.

Two out of every three veterans working in agriculture when they entered the armed forces have returned to farms. This group includes over a million veterans, many of whom desire to become farm owners. I believe that they should be given every opportunity to achieve this objective.

The Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, makes veterans eligible for loans under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. The Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, as amended, further augments veterans' opportunities of becoming farm owners by giving them preference over nonveterans. This act also provides for special farm-purchase loans to disabled war veterans.

Under these authorities the Farmers' Home Administration has made over 4,000 farm-purchase loans to veterans and had 49,235 additional applications from veterans, as of March 31, 1947.

A veteran entering the farming business usually needs assistance in selecting his farm and in planning his farming activities during the first few years of his new occupation—a highly specialized and competitive one. Also, as a result of his military service he frequently has had little opportunity to accumulate sufficient capital and to make the necessary down payment to qualify for a loan from other sources. In order to give veterans a fair opportunity to purchase farms and to obtain assistance needed to become firmly established in this business I strongly urge that a minimum of $25,000,000 be appropriated for direct farm purchase loans under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act and that adequate funds be provided for effective administration of the program. Failure to provide these funds will, for many veterans interested in farming, deprive them of a right assured them under the GI bill of rights.

The committee report justifies the elimination of direct farm purchase funds on the basis that such loans are too inflationary. Without careful selection of farms this statement could become a reality. I firmly believe, however, that a minimum of $25,000,000 could safely be loaned to veterans who desire to purchase farms from relatives and others at less than current market prices, to veterans who need to develop and improve farms they already own, and veterans who are able to purchase farms in areas that have not been seriously affected by high land prices without adding to the inflationary trend.

To perform the combined and increased functions heretofore performed by predecessor agencies the Farmers Home Administration will have fewer employees in 1948 than Farm Security had at the time of consolidation. The appropriations made available for the separate operations prior to the consolidation provided for 9,590 full-time employees—8,377 in Farm Security and 1,213 in the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Division. Through the merger this number has been greatly reduced. All 23 regional offices of the Farm Security and Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Division were abolished by May 1, 2 months prior to the date required by the act.

Requests have been made for $35,000,000 for direct loans for 1948 as compared with $50,000,000 for 1947.

Fifteen million dollars has been requested for the purpose of activating the farm mortgage insurance program.

It is intended to emphasize the farm mortgage insurance program. However, it will still be necessary to make loans from Federal appropriations as it will be necessary to take care of veterans' needs, many of whom do not have the necessary down payment to qualify under the mortgage insurance plan. Indeed the most urgent question with respect to the use of loan funds is the extent to which such loans will be available to veterans of World War II now seeking to establish themselves on family-type farms.

As of May 31, approximately 49,000 veteran applications were pending as compared with approximately 8,000 1 year ago. In order to comply with the veteran preference provision of the act nonveteran loans have been suspended in more than 16 States.

It has been necessary to channel practically all remaining funds into veteran loans during the last quarter of the year. Increase in number of veteran loans is emphasized by the fact that only 211 loans were made in the first half of 1946, whereas 1,495 were made in the first half of 1947. Approximately $28,000,000 had been obligated as of February 28, with expectation that the principal portion of the original $50,000,000 authorization would be used by June 30. Of the amount obligated to date, more than half has been made to veterans and the remainder to nonveterans. There are above 40,000 nonveteran applications pending as of this date.

The crop year 1945, which is the latest period for which complete collection returns are available, was the best year up to that date from the collection standpoint. Seven million four hundred and eighteen thousand one hundred and twenty-nine dollars would have been required in 1945 to meet payments due on the basis of equal annual installments, but borrowers actually paid $18,131,313 in 1945 which is $10,713,184 more than schedule. From the beginning of the program active variable payment borrowers had made cumulative payments of $42,667,556 as against $24,299,786 which would have been due under a fixed payment contract. Sixty-eight percent of the variable payment borrowers were ahead of schedule by an average amount of $1,021 or approximately four annual installments. Sixteen percent of the borrowers were exactly on schedule. Sixteen percent were behind schedule by an average amount of $259 or about the equivalent of one annual installment.

The effect of the proposed cut in personnel of the Farmers Home Administration can only be fully understood by taking into consideration the previous reductions made in the personnel of the Farm Security Administration, predecessor to the Farmers Home Administration, and the total job now assigned to the Farmers Home Administration by the Seventy-ninth Congress.

In the fiscal year 1942, the Farm Security Administration had 19,045 full-time employees. The President's budget estimate for the fiscal year 1948 requested $30,000,000 with full-time employees totaling 8,219. The committee bill reduces the amount for salaries and expenses to $18,000,000 which will provide for less than 4,800 employees. In other words, without taking into consideration the employees or the functions of the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Division of the Farm Credit Administration, which were transferred to Farmers Home Administration, the reductions in Farm Security Administration alone from 1942 to 1948 under the President's budget estimate would be 10,826 employees or 56.9 percent. Under the House bill the reductions since 1942 would be 14,245 employees or 74.8 percent. Taking into consideration the personnel of the Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Division, the committee bill represents a reduction of 15,523 or 76.4 percent since 1942.

This agency was established by an act of Congress on August 14, 1946, after thorough investigation, will have on next July 1, assets to be serviced during the fiscal year 1948 totaling approximately $800,000,000 including loans outstanding to more than 1,200,000 farm families. In addition, the President's estimate provided for new loans and insured mortgages totaling $141,505,000. On the basis of the President's budget, the administrative and operating costs of this agency represent 3.3 percent of the assets to be serviced and the loans to be made in 1948.

The loans made by this agency are to the small farmers who cannot obtain suitable credit from any other source. The proposed reduction will not only lessen the opportunity for these small farmers of our Nation to succeed, but will seriously impair the Government's investment in the loans outstanding. Such reductions can only result in losses of public funds direcly attributable to insufficient personnel for collecting outstanding Farmers Home Administration accounts.

The committee seeks to force a drastic reduction in the personnel of the Farmers Home Administration, a reduction of from 8,400 to 4,250. The result will be that the Administrator will have only 2.4 percent of the total assets to be administered for administrative purposes. Certainly we have no right to expect the agency to be administered properly and managed with such limitation upon funds for administrative purposes. The result will be a very substantial loss to the Federal Government, but perhaps this is the Republican Party's idea of economy. You economy-minded Republicans are having a field day, but the country will know what you are doing to the farmers of the Nation and to the welfare of the people of this Republic. You are wrecking the farm program and you know it, but you seek to justify your action in the name of economy. You are not saving money. You are actually wasting money. You are not keeping faith with the veterans. You are breaking faith with them. By failing to provide $300,000,000 for soil conservation you are taking from the farmers of America the money you promised them. You are repudiating your own obligations to those who live on the farm. You know that you are violating all of the established rules of the House and invading the prerogatives of the legislative committee, for which you seem to have very little regard, and you are doing all of this merely because you have the votes and the power to do it. There will come a day of reckoning and each of you will have to defend your position before the farmers of your districts. The responsibility is yours, and here and now you must assume it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF FOREIGN AGRICULTURAL RELATIONS

Salaries and expenses: For necessary expenses for the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations and for enabling the Secretary to coordinate and integrate activities of the Department in connection with foreign agricultural work, including personal services in the District of Columbia and not to exceed $500 for newspapers, $628,000.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PHILLIPS of California: On page 13, line 4, strike out "$628,000" and insert "$428,000."

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, this is just a little effort on my part to improve the services of one agency in the Department of Agriculture. Eleven years ago we gave this agency $180,000 a year. Ten years ago, when it was a much better agency from the standpoint of the farmer, we gave it $380,000. We had in those days men like Fred Motz, Leo Mallory, Walter Schreiber, Nick Nielsen, Harry Reed, and Lloyd Steere, men who made names for themselves all over the world, men whose records were so accurate that they were used by the foreign governments in whose countries they served.

Today we have a sort of adjunct to the State Department furnishing us with reports that are, as I said yesterday, often more of historic value than for immediate use.

I am simply suggesting that if we had a better agency at $380,000, perhaps if we cut them back to $428,000 we will get a better one than we have now. Les Wheeler can run a good office. He has in the past and he can again. Getting less may encourage the Secretary of Agriculture to see that this does not continue to be an appendix to the State Department, but that it becomes again an office of the Department of Agriculture, standing on its own feet, giving a service useful to the farmers, and of which the farmers may be proud.

I ask for an aye vote on my amendment to reduce this amount by $200,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Meat inspection: For carrying out the provisions of laws relating to Federal inspection of meat and meat-food products, $5,000,000, for deposit in the Treasury of the United States as a working-capital fund, without fiscal-year limitation, to be designated as the "Meat inspection fund," which shall be available for all expenses necessary to furnish an adequate and efficient inspection or service, and hereafter every person, firm, public agency, or other organization furnished inspection or service under said laws, including inspection of meat and meat-food products offered for import or export and the inspection of horse meat and horse-meat products, shall pay the United States therefor in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and at rates and fees to be fixed by him, which payments, to be deposited in the meat-inspection fund, shall provide full reimbursement for the estimated cost attributable to the furnishing of such inspection or service, including scientific and technical investigations and laboratory services; investigations relating to violations of, and authorized exemptions under, the laws relating to Federal meat inspection; supervisory, administrative, statistical, business management, and other costs; personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, without regard to section 607 of the Federal Employees' Pay Act of 1945, as amended; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; purchase and hire of passenger motor vehicles; printing and binding, including the purchase of printed tags, labels, stamps, and certificates as authorized by the act of September 21, 1944 (7 U. S. C. 431); and other necessary expenses: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may require advance payment, posting of bonds, or other assurance of payment, in order to protect the interest of the United States, and may withhold or withdraw such inspection or service for nonpayment of charges or fees, or failure to provide the required assurance of payment: Provided further, That inspection or other technical services may be rendered to Government and other public agencies, upon request, under the terms and conditions herein provided: Provided further, That a schedule of obligations and reimbursements of the meat-inspection fund, as of the close of the last completed fiscal year, and as estimated for the current and ensuing fiscal years, shall be included in the budget as submitted to Congress annually: And provided further, That payments shall be made for inspection or service rendered on and after July 1, 1947.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE: Page 23, line 12, strike out the paragraph down to and including line 5 on page 25.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, if adopted, will strike out the provision in the bill relating to meat inspection. Heretofore, as everyone knows, meat inspection has been carried on by the Bureau of Animal Industry at public expense. Under this amendment a revolving fund will be set up and thereafter the packers and processors would be charged a fee for the inspection made by the Federal inspectors.

We have had meat inspection for many years. It is a health measure for the protection of the public and is compulsory as far as meat transported in interstate commerce is concerned. No one will deny the fact it has been effectively and efficiently conducted.

If this amendment is adopted it is contended that for this year something like $6,000,000 will be saved the Treasury of the United States, but no one knows how many millions of dollars we may lose if it results in ineffective inspection. No one knows what effect it may have upon the public health of the country if it impairs the effectiveness of the inspection.

It is my contention inasmuch as meat inspection was instituted for the benefit of the public and the public health it should be paid for by the public and that has always been the theory on which we have proceeded heretofore. It will be said that we have other inspection services where the industry pays the fee. I think that is well stated about the fish industry. I know it is true of the fruit and vegetable inspections that we have. But let me call attention to the fact that as far as other agricultural commodities are concerned like fruits and vegetables, inspection is a voluntary matter, it is not required, it is a service furnished by the Department of Agriculture for the benefit not of the public but of the industry in order to enable the industry to merchandize the commodity on a quality basis. It is a benefit to those who pay the inspection fees.

I do not think anyone knows what will happen if we adopt this amendment. I assume that probably some packers who are now engaged in interstate commerce on a small scale may decide that they will stay within the State in which they are doing business, and to that extent the amount of meat which goes into interstate commerce and is inspected may be cut down. In the case of the large packers they, no doubt, will have to go ahead and pay the fee, but every one of us knows that that fee will be passed on either to the consumer or passed back to the farmer; in most cases it will probably be the latter. At any rate, the public that is paying it now will continue to pay it, whether we pay for it in the form of Federal appropriations, as it should be paid, or whether it is a charge which is assessed by the packer against the public or the farmer.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HOLMES. This is an extremely important problem in relation to the public health, and it is extremely important to the problem of the transport of meat in interstate commerce.

Mr. HOPE. It is.

Mr. HOLMES. Do not these facts add to the importance of the amendment that the gentleman is proposing?

Mr. HOPE. This is, of course, a very important matter from the standpoint of public health, but no one in the House, unless it is the members of the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations, knows anything about whether this thing will work or not. No one knows what the effect will be upon the public health. No one knows what the effect will be upon the farmer if the costs are pushed back onto him. No one knows what the effect will be upon the consumer. I hope that amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I happen to be an apple and pear grower out West. We have compulsory certification of every apple that leaves the State of Washington. The industry pays for all of that inspection. We do that, of course, naturally in defense of our own industry, because in that way we can provide and assure the consumer of our products that everything is in line with Federal-State inspection. The same thing is true of several other industries. It is true also that the industry itself is one of the chief beneficiaries of Federal-State inspection. What we are discussing here is a service to the meat industry for which, so far, the public has been paying out of general funds. I submit that that is manifestly unfair. It is not moral for an industry to have this benefit and not pay its just share.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Is it not a fact that the fruit growers in the gentleman's area are highly organized, and is it not a fact that the gentleman is now addressing himself to a situation which exists in the Wenatchee Valley, and that you are highly organized, and you have a great cooperative enterprise out there, and that you pay your way? But, when you are dealing with meat you are dealing with something that has to do with every township in this country, and there is no way on earth for them to organize as the apple growers are organized.

Mr. HORAN. May I answer the gentleman in this way: It is not the intention of the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations to change any dot or dash in the present system of inspection. All we are dealing with is the fiscal element as to who shall pay for this service. And I might say that we have been in complete agreement in our action by those responsible in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. I just want to say to the gentleman that that is not the information I have from the Department of Agriculture in regard to this work. They tell me they do not favor it.

Mr. HORAN. I do not want to belabor this point too much, because I am not closing debate on this subject. But I want to say that when we asked the gentlemen of the Department whether they could carry on this work under another arrangement, they assured us they could.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Did not Congress just a short time ago apply the same formula to the inspection of other commodities? I have fish in mind. I think there were others.

Mr. HORAN. Certainly; I understand they did.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. I should like to ask this, and I do not know the answer to it. After the department with its $5,000,000 of funds makes an inspection and bills the producer or the packer for it and he does not pay it, what then? Would the department then refuse to inspect him thereafter, or what would be the answer to it, if the gentleman knows? I am serious about it.

Mr. HORAN. I can assure the gentleman from Mississippi there is no danger of a meat packer or anyone else not paying the bill. I can speak from experience on that item. If you want to ship in interstate commerce and there is a just invoice against your name or your firm, you are going to pay that bill. We are not talking about unjust invoices.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. The gentleman suggested that the industry would pay the cost under the terms of this bill. The gentleman did not explain what was meant by the industry. That means it will be passed back in proportion to the meat producer in this case.

Mr. HORAN. That will be paid, as all things are paid, by the buyer on a sellers' market, or the seller on a buyers' market. That is economic law that even the very able and distinguished gentleman from Texas cannot argue me out of.

Mr. POAGE. That is right, but in the case of an industry like meat it means the producer and not the consumer, and not the processor, does it not? It means as far as meat is concerned that the producer is going to pay the bill.

Mr. HORAN. We have that same problem in the fruit industry. I do not think the present action on the part of the Congress in passing this on in an unjust way to the general public is a solution. Not at all.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will be gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. HILL. How will this work regarding the small factories in the small towns and the small communities?

Mr. HORAN. Exactly as it works today, because we have not changed the system one bit.

Mr. HILL. But you will change the system. That is what worries me.

Mr. HORAN. No, we will not; we will not change it one bit.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 15 minutes, the last 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, this is an important amendment. I think it ought to be more fully discussed. It ought to be considered by the Committee on Agriculture rather than in this summary way. I object.

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Kansas has just said, this is an important amendment. I know that even the economy-minded Republicans of this House do not want to take any action which might jeopardize the health of the people of this country. The matter should be considered by our committee, the legislative committee, the integrity of which is now greatly imperiled if not permanently impaired.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. The gentleman has just stated that the purpose of meat inspection is to protect the public, and that is the consumer. There would be just as much meat consumed in the United States if there was not a bit of it inspected.

Mr. COOLEY. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. POAGE. But there will probably be a good many people who will buy it in every city. Therefore, it is not for the benefit of the producer that we inspect meat, but for the benefit of all the people in the United States.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. POAGE. This bill as now written would place the burden, which is for the benefit of all the people, upon a small group of people who produce the meat. Is that not correct?

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is exactly right.

We are dealing with steers, bulls, and hogs, and the health and welfare of the American people, and, frankly, I feel that this economy bloc has actually gone "hog wild."

We have a very distinguished Republican on our committee, the gentleman from Indiana, Dr. GILLIE, who, unfortunately, could not be here today. He was here yesterday and in executive session discussed the great importance of meat inspection. Dr. GILLIE, I know, is regarded most highly by you Republicans. I know he is esteemed highly by his Democratic collegues. He is a veterinarian and spent years of his life in this particular work, the inspection of meat.

Were he here today, I am sure he would support the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], the chairman of our committee, in presenting this amendment.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to my chairman.

Mr. HOPE. The amendment which I offered was offered at the request of the gentleman from Indiana, Dr. GILLIE. Had he been here, he would have offered the amendment himself.

Mr. COOLEY. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. PACE. I am sure the gentleman would want to complete the record by explaining the reason for the absence of the distinguished Member from Indiana, Dr. GILLIE.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman from Indiana, Dr. GILLIE, is attending the funeral of our beloved colleague in Indiana, which explains his absence.

If we have a distinguished veterinarian on our committee who, as Mr. HOPE says, was the author of this amendment, if we are not going to follow him, and if we are not going to follow the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, it seems to me it is unfortunate. Certainly we cannot be talking partisan politics when we are dealing with a matter that is vital to the life and welfare of the people of the Nation.

I do not question the good faith of Members when they say that the costs should be paid for by the packers, but actually we know that it will be paid by the public. The big packers will pay the bill. They will label the meat and sell the meat. But what about the little packer in the rural districts? They are going to sell the meat whether it is inspected or not, and the people will have to pay.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. HORAN. I want to impress upon you once again that this does not change the system of inspection. It merely changes the matter of payment and by whom the payment shall be made.

Mr. COOLEY. It merely changes who pays the freight?

Mr. HORAN. That is right.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman knows full well that the rich, powerful co-ops, such as you have in the fruit area of your district in Washington, can well afford to pay the bill.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. HORAN. I do not belong to a cooperative but I am speaking in behalf of the system which I think is just.

Mr. COOLEY. I think the gentleman has done a magnificent job here in Congress for the apple growers of his district. If the meat producers of America were as closely organized and as well financed, perhaps they could pay the bill. But we are going to have hog killings in every township and bull yearlings strung up to trees throughout the country, and going to market without any inspection. Yesterday when Dr. Gillie talked to us, he painted a very horrible picture of the possibilities of this legislation. He talked about tubercular meat and meat diseases of every kind known to the animal industry. He spoke about the animals being slaughtered and sold to the consuming public. The life and certainly the health and welfare of the people of the Nation are at stake in this amendment and the public should pay for inspection from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have the highest regard for the chairman of the subcommittee and his associates. I am willing to economize as much as they are, and probably more, when it comes to appropriations for Agriculture. But when it comes to jeopardizing the health of the American people, then I must take issue with them.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. HORAN. I want to ask the gentleman if action on this bill changes any law by which a man can be put in jail for selling diseased meat.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No; because the organic law requires that all meat flowing in interstate commerce shall be inspected. But what will happen if this provision goes into operation and the appropriation is denied. You will see hundreds of new small packing plants rising within the different States, doing solely intrastate business, where they are not subject to inspection, and you will also see a great deal of bootlegging, where the meat will be transported across the lines of different States and people will not know the kind of meat they are getting.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I believe the gentleman's State is just as careful and just as particular in preserving the health of the citizens of that State as is the State of Michigan. I wish to say to the gentleman that in the State of Michigan every killing that is made at any plant in that State that is not inspected by Federal inspectors is inspected by State inspectors.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am glad that they have it in the State of Michigan. But when this law was originally enacted it was for the protection of the public so that all meat going into interstate commerce would come under Government inspection and people would know that they were getting good meat that was free from disease and fit for human beings to eat.

I believe the situation is a little different here than it was with pears and apples. Meat is a highly perishable commodity. The inspection must be made immediately after the animal is killed so that the insides of the animal can be examined to determine whether or not the animal was diseased. After the inside is taken out, oftentimes you are not able to discover whether that animal had any disease or not. So I say to you that this is a measure that is in the interest of the public health. If there is any laxity in the enforcement of it, then there may be a complete breakdown in the distribution of good healthy meat throughout this country.

I dislike very much to see our intrastate system of meat distribution broken down and substituted by a lot of small tree slaughterers and others, like happened in the OPA days, when a great deal of diseased meat was sold throughout this country. We owe it to the people to protect them. I am sure there are more people eating meat than are eating pears and apples in the State of Washington and other States.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman as to what percentage of the meat of the United States at the present time is under Federal inspection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do not have the exact figure, but I assume it is at least 50 percent.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will tell the gentleman. It is 70 percent.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman. Seventy percent of the meat of the country is federally inspected.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Not under Federal inspection?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I leave it to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations who has said it is 70 percent. This demonstrates that a large portion of the meat sold to to the American people is federally inspected and goes out with a Federal stamp placed there by a man paid by the Federal Government so that the meat is good and wholesome and from an animal that was free from disease.

I urge support of the amendment for the benefit of the health and welfare of all consumers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] has expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I find myself in this instance going along with other members of the subcommittee. I think this is one of the pertinent places in this bill where the taxpayers' money can be saved upon the basis of a true economic approach. There has been much discussion about who was going to pay the freight if this language stays in the bill. I think anybody who is conversant with the procedure of the way costs are passed along to the consumer, knows that eventually the consumer is going to pay this cost. As far as any Member being concerned about a great consumer constituency being poisoned, I would like to suggest that the Member refer to his county and to his State legislative bodies and have enacted proper legislation for meat inspection. I do not think there is any legitimate reason to be concerned along that line.

I am opposed to the amendment and request the House to vote it down. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made earlier in the day.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this discussion with a great deal of interest because I have been interested in the livestock business all my life. It so happens that I have been through the packing houses in Chicago numerous times; I have been on the killing floors and have seen the inspectors work following the beef, pork, or mutton, from the live animal down to the finished product.

When the Meat Inspection Act was first passed the whole packing industry of the United States, unjustly I think in large measure, was under very severe attack. It might be said that the original act was almost punitive in character, but it has worked out exceedingly well and the meat inspection has been exceedingly well done. Today every reputable packer wants the inspection, as well as the consumers who understand the importance of having healthy beef, mutton, or pork.

Some fear has been expressed lest if we transfer the burden of the cost from the Federal Treasury to the industry, a lot of little packing plants will spring up all over the country situated within State borders who will avoid this burden by not engaging in interstate commerce. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, it is almost impossible that a thing like that should happen for this reason: a modern packing plant cannot be prosperous unless it engages in the production of byproducts as well as in the original slaughter of live animals, and if they engage in the production of byproducts they must be shipped in interstate commerce and that automatically brings them within the inspection law. The day has long since gone by where the little slaughterer is contented with merely killing the steer and burying the hide, the bones, and the offal and selling only the meat. That day has gone by long since.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. It is less than a year ago since that very thing was taking place.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And it was taking place only because of the OPA price ceiling on live animals which created an artificial condition which, thank God, no longer exists.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That took place under the black market; but you cannot have a black market in the free market, and that is what we have today. The man who is going to engage in the livestock industry, be he producer, farmer, rancher, or processor, or the final marketing outlet, wants his product well thought of by the consuming public. When a consumer goes into the butcher shop and sees on the side of a piece of meat "U. S. No. 1" that is the meat he wants; and every packer, great or small, knows that.

All we do by this proposal is to say that the industry, being one of the great beneficiaries of the inspection service, ought to carry the burden of the cost. Every other industry carries the burden of the cost of inspection. I have been in the Chicago yards time and time again and have purchased live animals to be shipped home. Some had to be inspected for tuberculosis. Who paid the cost of inspection? I did. Should I not? Whose beef was it?

That is all this amendment does. I think it is wise and consistent.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. On the same theory that the gentleman paid for the inspection of cattle, then the consumer should pay for the inspection of the meat.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am a consumer. The consumer eventually will pay anything that is part of the cost of production.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Either the consumer or the purchaser.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One or the other, yes. Between them it will be paid. You never can tell where it is scattered. That is true of all expenses. When I buy a pair of shoes in a store here in Washington I pay part of the rent of the store. I do not know to what extent that happens, but it happens in all business. There is nothing new or strange about that. It always happens.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. Did the packers appear before the committee and present their opinion on this particular change?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know. I was not a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 10 minutes, the last 5 minutes to be reserved for the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to take the time of the committee now and further I hesitate to disagree with the distinguished gentleman from New York. I rise in support of the amendment. May I say to you this afternoon in these United States that the livestock industry of this country has been built up because of the quality of the products we sell to the people of our country. If we adopt the legislation as offered by the committee we are going to upset the whole meat-inspection program that we have been using for these many years. Not longer ago than day before yesterday I spoke to a member of this committee who is a veterinarian of high standing. He feels the same as I do. He feels that we better leave these regulations as they are. If we are going to change the meat-inspection law, let the bill come in as a separate bill, be referred to the proper committee, and have all the parties to the controversy given a chance to be heard. That is the very thing I objected to in connection with the rule on this bill. The rule covered a straight 100-percent piece of legislation. This is not an appropriation item at all. The consumers do pay for this inspection. We have been paying for this inspection and we are not objecting. No member of this committee has objected to paying for this meat-inspection service.

I want to ask, Where is the pressure coming from to change it? Where is it coming from to change our meat-inspection regulations. If you want a change in the meat-inspection laws, put it in a legislative bill; if there are people who wish them changed from the livestock industry, from the packing industry, from the consumers, let us have hearings where all can give their testimony.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HOLMES. Does the gentleman think that that very important stamp on the dressed carcass of an animal marked "U. S. Inspected" would continue to be used as widely and as thoroughly as it is being used now?

Mr. HILL. It would not mean a thing. Today it is the United States of America behind that stamp. If you adopt this amendment you will still have it. If you do not adopt it you could easily loose the real quality and general benefit of this most efficient service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN].

Mr. KARSTEN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, while I represent a wholly metropolitan district, where you do not find farmers, I am also interested in the welfare of the farmer. I dislike to see our farm program crippled. It has been demonstrated many times in our history that the prosperity of the people in the cities is in a large measure dependent upon the prosperity of the people on the farms. We have come to find in our economy that what hurts one group often reflects itself in consequential injury to other groups.

The people in the cities are dependent upon those on the farms for food and for the necessities of life. Those on the farms are dependent upon the cities for markets for their products.

At this time we are making great efforts to bring about price reductions. The high prices we are experiencing affect all of our citizens and most of us will agree that the burden of our existence would be much lighter if prices can be brought down to a reasonable level.

Meat is the mainstay of the family diet of the average American family. Like other commodities, the price of meat has jumped more than double during the past few months. Contained in this bill is an item for Federal meat inspection. Theoretically, the bill places the burden for the payment for inspection service upon the processors and handlers, but all of us know that this expense is ultimately going to be passed on to the consumers in the form of still higher prices for meat.

We have a rigid sanitary code, prohibiting the interstate shipment of meat that has not been Federally inspected. We have made great progress in protecting the American people by the enforcement of these regulations, and to do anything now that might weaken them, to my way of thinking, is taking a chance with the health of the American people.

It has only been a few weeks ago that we passed a bill in this House providing several million dollars for the eradication of hoof and mouth disease, not within our own country but in Mexico. Congress went far, and I believe rightly so, in this instance in safeguarding the people of our Nation against this danger. Disease in cattle is no respecter of State lines nor even the boundaries of countries.

For over 40 years, the Federal Government has borne the cost of Federal meat inspection. An outstanding record has been made. It would certainly be inconsistent for us to refuse to provide funds to continue this service.

I urge that funds adequate to continue Federal inspection of meats under present methods and standards be restored to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE].

INSPECTION COST WILL BE PASSED ON TO FARMERS

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the bill proposes to eliminate annual appropriations for meat inspection by providing this year a nonrecurring appropriation for a $5,000,000 revolving fund and requiring packers to pay fees to cover the cost of service.

The committee, in saying that the cost of meat inspection should be borne by the product, probably is saying in effect that the cost will be borne by the producer.

The packers operate on a margin, and obviously are not going to absorb the cost. Packers will either pass the cost on to consumers or back to producers, and necessarily so.

Consumers are already grumbling about food prices, with just cause, and some interests are capitalizing on dissatisfaction with high food prices to spearhead a drive against the entire farm program and against national efforts to hold down prices generally. It is extremely doubtful whether consumers will pay increased prices to cover the cost of inspection under present conditions, and it is certain they will not as supplies come more nearly into balance with demand.

This may well mean that the costs of meat inspection will come out of the prices and income of farmers—the people who for many years in the past have had to subsidize consumers by taking prices and income below the parity level of fairness. This meat inspection is a small item of cost, but it can be one more fixed wedge between the price paid by the consumer and the price received by the farmer.

Until there is some way of distributing the cost of meat inspection as fairly as it is now distributed through taxation, we should support the inspection service by appropriations. Certainly, we should not force the farmer, who normally gets only a little over half of the consumer's meat dollar, to pay for this consumer service.

From the standpoint of public policy, there is a clear advantage in maintaining meat inspection through public appropriations. This method helps to assure the public high-quality service. If the service is maintained by fees paid by packers, they may—even though they pass the cost back to producers—acquire a feeling of proprietary interest in the service—a vested right to control or influence the service. We should keep our meat inspectors as free from both subtle and direct pressure as our customs inspectors and internal-revenue investigators. Meat inspection is, and should be, treated as an essential public service, paid for and controlled by the public, acting through Congress.

The amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] should be adopted.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. On the point at issue I would like to say that when the processors begin paying the salaries of the inspectors you are not going to have free and independent Federal inspection. I have seen that happen many times in State inspection with a number of State slaughterhouses.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at the conclusion of the gentleman's speech.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I am apprehensive about any provision which will change our meat-inspection laws or practice. I know that during the recent war the safeguards of inspection were let down and that at the risk of the Nation's health we tried to make meat available to our people regardless of its sanitary controls and inspection. All of us must have regarded that as merely a temporary situation and hoped it would be very temporary. It may be that the provision as written into the bill might be satisfactory and effect some saving, but I am inclined to think that the saving is at too great a risk.

Several have spoken about the pride which the great packers take in their product, and argue that they would maintain the high quality under the proposed plan, but I am not sure in my own mind that such would be the case. I am old enough to remember some of the conditions prevailing at the turn of the century in the days when Theodore Roosevelt was President of the United States and before the passage of the Pure Food and Drug Act of 1906. In those days notable books were written, such as The Jungle, portraying the terrible conditions in the big packing plants, and indicating what a menace to the national health those conditions presented. We are thankful that President Roosevelt read some of that literature and took an Executive interest in cleaning it up.

No doubt the menace from animal disease and unclean meat products at that time was as great a menace to the national health as adulterated drugs or any other food product which Dr. Wiley later fought to eliminate. I cannot see how it would be possible to return to such a sad state of affairs, but I want nothing done in this bill that might lead to it. Therefore, as a measure of safety, I shall oppose this attempt at saving a little money at the risk of the Nation's health.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE.]

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, on the merits of the amendment, the proposal is to let the packers pay the inspection fee, which means the consumers will have to pay it. Of course, when the money is paid by the United States Treasury the consumer is paying it; so there is not too much of a saving, as I see it.

I want to direct my remarks to the distinguished chairman of the committee. This is unquestionably, as he readily will admit, legislation on an appropriation bill. Is there any disagreement about that?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am not too certain about that. I think that this might very conceivably be in order under the Holman rule, because while it is legislation, it provides for a reduction of expenditures on its face, and while I have sought no parliamentary ruling on it, I am not so sure that the point of order would lie.

Mr. PACE. The law expressly says now how the cost of this inspection shall be paid, you propose to change it and you are therefore changing the law. Assuming that it is legislation, which I think it is, the gentleman from Illinois stated that under the Reorganization Act the Senate committee was not even permitted to report out a bill with legislative language in it. Then when this bill reaches the Senate committee, this provision and other legislative language in the bill will be stricken out. It cannot be reported to the Senate with this language in it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let us clear that point. Very definitely not. The Senate has no authority to pass upon whether or not an item in a bill coming from the House is in order so far as that rule is concerned.

Mr. PACE. Using the words of the gentleman himself—and I am not trying to put new words in his mouth—he stated that under the Reorganization Act the Senate committee was not permitted to report to the Senate an appropriation bill containing legislative language. It therefore seems to me the amendment should be adopted, and this question should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture, where full hearing can be held and proper legislation reported to the Congress as to the best method of handling these inspection costs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York, who has been in the cattle business all his life, made the case against the pending amendment to strike this out. This is not unadvised action that we take. Is there anybody in this Chamber who believes that the committee on its own responsibility would undertake this action without careful consultation with the Department of Agriculture? Now, first let me make it emphatic that the committee did not draw this language. This language, may I say to my good friend from Colorado, was drawn in the Department of Agriculture by the budget officer in consultation with the Bureau of Animal Industry and with the Department Solicitor. That is where it comes from. Now, we had ample discussion with Dr. Miller and with Dr. Simms, the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the testimony both on and off the record is quite clear. I asked Dr. Miller:

What fee do they pay, if any?

Dr. MILLER. No fee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Is there any reason why they should not pay a fee?

Dr. MILLER. The only reason is that there is no requirement for them to pay a fee.

Then I asked him whether or not it could be done. He said:

Now, if, as a public policy, it is desirable to have the packing industry pay for the cost of inspection, we can administer an efficient inspection service under that plan.

There is no change. Not a single lay inspector will be changed. Not a single veterinarian will be changed. Not a single one of the 125 clerks will be changed, and there are some 2,986. All that will happen is the same service will be rendered that they render now. At the end of a quarterly period they will render a bill to the packer for the amount of service that has been rendered, and with respect to the observation made by the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD], there is no subsidy in it. The Federal Government still pays these salaries. This is nothing else except a so-called capital account, as it were, with a fiscal-year limitation, and it is revolving in nature, so that the fees are taken in every quarter. These people are still under the discipline and still on the pay roll of the Department of Agriculture. There is no change.

It occurs to me that before all these bland statements are made on the floor that perhaps you ought to refresh yourself a little on the record and see exactly what is before us. Now, that is the whole situation in a nutshell. In addition thereto it will save $6,140,000 this year, and we will be able to recapture an additional $5,000,000 of capital account next year, so that there will be a saving from here on out of at least $11,000,000 or more every year for the Treasury of the United States.

There is one other element that ought to be included here. Do not forget the meat that goes abroad. The countries overseas have regulations, rules, or statutes under which no meat can be exported to their countries unless it is inspected. Out of the Federal Treasury we pay for the inspection of meat that derives to the benefit and the profit of the packers of the country as it is sent into every corner of the world. Should there not be some pay for it? That is no advantage to the Federal Treasury.

In addition, they maintain 7 laboratories. They conduct chemical and pathogenical tests. They have laboratories that work in the field of meat, oils, cereals, and curing materials. There is the whole story. We do it in some respects on perishable vegetables and commodities and there is a fee. On wool standards there is a fee. On cotton fiber there is a fee. On cotton standards there is a fee. On grain standards there is a fee. So this has been carefully worked out, and it is consonant with the fee system that applies to so many agricultural commodities today. Therefore I hope that the amendment to strike out this provision which will save money and put this burden upon those who have the advantage, without impairing its efficiency or efficacy whatsoever, will be voted down.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. It seems to me the gentleman is missing the point that has been raised, in my mind at least. It seems to me if the inspection is changed, of course the big packer——

Mr. DIRKSEN. The inspection is not changed.

Mr. GRANGER. This is what will happen if the people who pay the salaries change——

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Federal Government pays the salaries.

Mr. GRANGER. Just a minute. What will happen? The big packer can pay the fees and he will pay the fees, and he will be very diligent in seeing that everyone else pays these fees, but what it will mean in the long run is that the little packer, who cannot have an inspection of his own without this service, will simply be wiped out.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That question has not been raised with respect to $20,000,000 worth of fees that the Department of Agriculture collects. It may be that the distinguished gentleman from Utah thinks he knows more about it than do Dr. Simms or Dr. Miller, but we have some other ideas about it, and the Department of Agriculture thinks this will work out exactly as it is working out at the present time.

I suggest that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOPE) there were—ayes 83, noes 102.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. HOPE.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 114, noes 124.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF DAIRY INDUSTRY

Salaries and expenses: For necessary expenses, including not to exceed $500,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia, in carrying out the provisions of the act of May 29, 1924 (7 U. S. C. 401–404), including investigations, experiments, and demonstrations in dairy industry, for carrying out the applicable provisions of the act of May 9, 1902 (26 U. S. C. 2325, 2326 (c)), relating to process or renovated butter, as amended by the act of June 24, 1946 (Public Law 427), and the act of May 23, 1908 (21 U. S. C. 94 (a)), insofar as it relates to the exportation of process or renovated butter, $1,011,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 27, after line 12, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"For repair of buildings, fence, electric line, and feed bunk, recently damaged by tornado at dairy field station, Woodward, Okla., $5,300."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is a committee amendment and speaks for itself. It is merely to repair damage done by a windstorm at a United States facility at Woodward, Okla.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, here is a proposition unbudgeted, unsupported by the Department, and unwarranted by any precedent of the House.

We have had vastly greater national disasters. For instance, at Texas City the other day, in which the loss in life and loss in property was incomparably greater. If we start in making provision for compensatory relief for damages occasioned by every windstorm that blows, we are creating a precedent that will rise to haunt us for years to come.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIZLEY. I assume the gentleman knows that this is a building that belongs to the Department of Agriculture at Woodward, Okla., and these repairs are for Government buildings at Woodward, Okla. They were blown down by a tornado. If the Government does not repair them and rebuild them, who would rebuild them?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, there is ample provision here for repairs to all necessary damage to Government property. Of course, practically every time we have a windstorm a post office or other Government building is blown down or damaged. The proposition has not been presented to the Budget Bureau and the Department does not recommend it.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This amendment was approved by the subcommittee. Obviously, windstorms and acts of God are not going to wait particularly upon legislative processes. Here are some dairy farms that have to be put into condition for use. If you want to leave them there, according to this ingenious argument of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], there is a chance to save $5,300, but they are going to be facilities that cannot be used. Certainly this work ought to be done because these are Federal buildings under the direction of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. RIZLEY. The gentleman is exactly correct. I was amazed and astonished at the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]; he surely must not have any idea what the facts are. These were Government buildings destroyed by tornado, some completely destroyed. Now he says they are going to practice economy by not repairing or rebuilding these Government buildings. I do not quite understand that philosophy or that argument.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield.

Mr. JENNINGS. It occurs to me that my very good friends are straining at a $5,000 gnat and wanting to swallow a lot of million-dollar camels.

Mr. RIZLEY. I am sure the distinguished gentleman from Missouri is not objecting to this amendment simply because Woodward happens to be in my district and that I happen to belong to the Republican Party; I cannot imagine that is his reason for it. It is just hard for me to conceive the idea that he does not want to do anything about restoring Federal buildings destroyed by an act of God.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield.

Mr. MORRIS. As I understand, this matter was considered by the committee; it was not just grabbed out of thin air.

Mr. RIZLEY. Of course it was not grabbed out of thin air. It is a committee amendment, based upon an itemized statement of actual damages caused by the tornado.

Mr. MORRIS. Certainly when a government project is destroyed or damaged, we should repair it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is the gentleman sure he said loud enough that Woodward, Okla., was in the congressional district of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. RIZLEY]?

Mr. RIZLEY. Yes; may I say to my distinguished friend from Texas, he understood the gentleman from Oklahoma correctly. Woodward is right in the heart of the great Eighth Oklahoma Congressional District, the outstanding agricultural district in Oklahoma; in fact, one of the outstanding agricultural districts in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Arboretum: For the maintenance and development of the National Arboretum established under the provisions of the act approved March 4, 1927 (20 U. S. C. 191–194), including travel expenses of the advisory council, $436,900, of which not to exceed $350,000 shall be available for the acquisition of adjoining land, and not to exceed $2,500 may be expended for employment pursuant to the second sentence of section 706 (a) of the Organic Act of 1944 (5 U. S. C. 574) as amended by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (Public Law 600).

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment that relates to the same matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 30, after line 7, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Southern Great Plains Field Station: For replacement and repair of buildings, equipment, and supplies, utilities, fences, and other general repairs and clean-up operations from damages due to the recent tornado at Woodward, Okla., $45,600."

Mr. DIRKSEN. These, Mr. Chairman, are also buildings that were destroyed by the windstorm and must be replaced and repaired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. And these buildings were owned by the Government?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Owned by the Federal Government; yes.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. I would like to ask about the information relative to this damage. While this was considered in the subcommittee there was no evidence of any sort whatever and it was not presented to the whole committee. I would like to know from whence comes the information as to the extent and amount of the damage?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I can tell the gentleman because this was prepared in the Department of Agriculture. A seed house costing $15,000 was completely demolished; a machinery shed costing $7,000 was completely demolished. There was a seed cleaner dust bin demolished costing $500. That results in a total of $22,500.

Then there was a machine shed, four frame dwellings, a frame pump house, office building, frame soil house, and three metal bins; also a quantity of machinery and equipment, including tractors, grass seed clipper mills, binders, cultivators, and so forth; then there was office and laboratory equipment and seed and supplies, blown away or damaged by water, then a power line was destroyed and two transformers demolished; there was also the rebuilding of fences and tree removal, where trees had blown into the area.

The total amount was $50,900.

Mr. WHITTEN. The gentleman has answered my question. He does have the figures from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In the greatest of detail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Agricultural chemical investigations: For conducting the investigations contemplated by the act of May 15, 1862 (5 U. S. C. 511, 512), relating to the application of chemistry to agriculture; for the biological, chemical, physical, microscopical, and technological investigation of foods, feeds, drugs, plant and animal products, and substances used in the manufacture thereof; for investigations of the physiological effects and for the pharmacological testing of such products and of insecticides; for the investigation and development of methods for the manufacture of sugars, sugar sirups, and starches and the utilization of new agricultural materials for such purposes; and for the technological investigation of the utilization of fruits and vegetables and for frozen pack investigations; $511,500.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 35, line 16, strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "and there shall be transferred to the Bureau of Agricultural and Industrial Chemistry, from Government surplus without compensation therefor, a certain parcel of real property of approximately one acre (consisting of lots 37 and 38 of Deal and Kreiser subdivision, and lots 24 and 25 of tract 728 in the city of Pasadena, Calif.), valued at approximately $15,800."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, this language appeared in the Budget but was inadvertently omitted from the committee print.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the amendment. It should be approved.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Forest products: Experiments, investigations, and tests of forest products under section 8, at the Forest Products Laboratory, or elsewhere, $1,000,000, of which at least $11,050 shall be expended for research in the utilization of waste woods.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin: On page 41, line 21, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,555,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I am not unaware of the advice that is usually given to newcomers of this House that they should keep their eyes and ears open and mouths closed for a while, and while I have been here a little over 3 weeks I feel compelled, because of my direct concern with the slash in the fund for the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wis., to speak up, and I do it reluctantly, because I have a great deal of respect for this subcommittee, and I am not unaware of the great respect in which the chairman of the subcommittee is held throughout my own Middle West. But, I am prompted to do that, and particularly to take issue with the statement of the subcommittee in their report on page 21 that—

> The work of the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wis., has never enjoyed the high esteem of the committee or of the Congress. Much of the work pursued at this laboratory is academic or visionary in character and has not, in the opinion of the committee, given practical results consonant with the vast sums which have been applied over the years.

As a result of that feeling on the part of the committee they reduced the requested appropriation, which was in accord with their appropriation last year when the pay raise is taken into consideration, to the flat sum of $1,000,000. I cannot help but feel that this slash in funds is due to a misunderstanding of the practical value of this institution in my home State and the failure to understand the work that they have accomplished and that they are now accomplishing.

First of all, I think we all should know that Mr. George Hunt, the present director who took over not more than 2 years ago at Madison, is a sincere and practically minded research director. I am not familiar with what type of directorship this institution has had in the past. But, I am familiar with and I know personally the highly qualified gentleman who is director of this institution at Madison at the present time.

I would like to also call to the attention of this Committee the statement of my colleague, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN], a member of that committee, when he pointed out to the members of this subcommittee on page 138 of the hearings, as follows:

> Mr. Chairman, they are all utilizing a part of our natural resources that otherwise would go to waste.

Any of you who live in the forestry areas and have seen the tragedy that beset their lands, where the part that could be used for good timber was cut and the rest of it was permitted to be spoiled, can understand very well the language of the gentleman from Washington on page 138 of those hearings.

Mr. Trayer, Chief of the Division of Forest Products, who testified before the committee, was asked to provide a summary of some of the completed projects of the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison during December 31, 1946. Mr. Trayer furnished to the committee, and they appear beginning on page 111 of the report, a list of 825 projects that have been completed by this laboratory. It was made plain that these projects are illustrative and not inclusive of all the projects that have been completed. Among them were a great number of wartime projects, such as packaging work for the Army ordnance. They reduced shipping damages in some cases up to 50 percent. In 1 year alone they reduced the lumber requirements by over 1,500,000,000 board feet, and instituted new packaging procedures. For the War Production Board, by establishing a pilot plant, they revolutionized the process of obtaining alcohol from waste wood products, something we needed badly in wartime and something that we got for almost nothing.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RIVERS. This laboratory at Madison, Wis., serves the entire United States on all products and is not confined to any one area?

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. That is very definitely true. They have the assistance of seven other use stations for utilizing these products throughout the country, but they serve the whole United States.

Mr. RIVERS. They have saved this Nation countless millions of dollars.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. That is also true.

The wartime record can be shown to have continued during peacetime, and to have existed during peacetime prior to the war.

One of the things they have done is develop a process for the production of newsprint from lumber that could not be used for that purpose before. Over on the other side of the Capitol they are investigating the newsprint situation today. Would anyone here say that in view of that shortage the project for permitting this use is something that is visionary or something that is not practical?

I cannot help but submit to this committee as a whole, in spite of my respect for the subcommittee, that these projects have been neither academic nor visionary but they have been practical, and that they have returned to the people of America a thousandfold every dollar that has been invested. I hope this committee will see fit to adopt the amendment restoring the appropriation for this worth-while Government agency.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes, the last 4 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS].

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think anyone can say there was a mandate at the last election to cut the activities of this very important laboratory. This is the most important laboratory operated by the Department of Agriculture and the Forest Service in the whole Nation, to my knowledge. For the 6 years I have been in Congress we have been fighting, with help from all over the Nation, to maintain this important laboratory and others at places where the research for the improvement of forestry management and the improvement generally of forest products is carried on. In our activities we found a great need for the continuation of the activities of this laboratory. The gentleman from Wisconsin has told you very ably that this is not a sectional thing but a national thing. It serves the entire Nation. It has brought returns a millionfold to the taxpayers and those who are interested in the products of the forest. Nobody can estimate the value of this thing to the entire American people.

I hope that the Committee will not seriously object to this amendment. We would be wise indeed to make it possible for this laboratory to carry on with this very distinguished director, because I am confident if more of us knew more about it many more of us would be here defending and justifying its continued expanded activity.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES].

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Chairman, I subscribe to what our able friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin, and my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from South Carolina, have had to say about the importance of the Madison laboratory. Its work should be continued without reduction.

It may be that the people who are conducting experimental research in Madison need to have a fire built under them so that we can see more tangible results from their work. The commercial application of research and its value to the Nation's economy is its real justification. But the fact remains, Mr. Chairman, Madison is now engaged in highly important experimental work which should be carried through to completion as rapidly as possible.

At this time in our Nation's history, when reduced forestry resources threaten to become a more and more serious matter, we can ill afford to eliminate experimental work which may within a short time make it possible for us to utilize in industry many wood products not now being used.

As only one illustration, I have in mind experimentation which is going on in the utilization of scrub oak, gum, and poplar, which commercially are now considered to possess very little value.

Not only shall we find it necessary to use better methods for the maintenance and conservation of our forestry resources, but in addition we may have to depend largely upon these now virtually useless woods in the future manufacture of paper, fiberboards, and tannin. The Madison laboratory has in process important studies on these woods. During the war we used billions upon billions of feet of our finest timber. We must face the fact that our best timber is gone. Today we are cutting timber faster than we are growing it. We cannot indefinitely continue that process without getting hurt and hurt bad in this country. Our economy is too strongly dependent upon timber to neglect it.

The laboratory in Wisconsin, the largest of its kind, the one which is carrying on the most complete and comprehensive experiments on the entire subject of the utilization of forestry products, is in a position to make material contributions to the Nation, and I think it would be poor economy to limit its activity at this highly strategic period in its history.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, over the years the appropriations for the Forest Products Laboratory has received a great deal of consideration. May I say to my esteemed friend the gentleman from Wisconsin, in whose district this laboratory happens to be, that some years ago I went up to take a look for myself. I was sort of looking around at some of our agricultural installations and, frankly, I cannot disclose on this floor what I found. That does not apply to the present Director but to the previous Director. Subsequently, when we had hearings on the matter he came to Washington. He invited me to dinner. He wanted to talk to me. So I went to see him at the Metropole Club. He fairly wrung his hands and said, "What can I do? What can I do?" I said, "My friend, the best thing you can do is get on a train tonight and go back to Madison where you belong." So I took a look at some of the things going on there. I think the committee was charitable when they say so much is highly visionary and highly academic. Go through this whole list that they recite and they will give you a list as long as your arm of the things they have done. They have showed statistically that "the fiber cavities of wood do not change on swelling and shrinking for the average of many species." That is what they show. They have showed that "the relative humidity at which wood impregnated with aqueous solutions starts to shrink is determined by the relative vapor pressure over the solution."

Now, is not that marvelous? Our friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] years ago used an expression when we were dealing with these regional laboratories, "We want no chemical curiosities." That is one of the things they are turning out—a lot of arithmetical, geometrical, chemical, and pathological curiosities. So they can fill this book with that sort of thing, but this committee wanted some results at the practical level. That is the reason we cut this down, because we thought it was a waste of funds.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. SIKES. Does not the gentleman realize that that type of information is essential in the manufacture of pulp and paper and synthetic products?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; I realize that is just as necessary as knowing something about the stratosphere, but if it is not applied to some actual benefit for humankind then why maintain the laboratory? We have got enough scientists who are living in stellar realms today who find great delight in manufacturing equations of one kind or another, but the final test is, What does it amount to at the barnyard level? That is what we are interested in.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RIVERS. That might be curious to you but it is not curious to somebody who knows something about growing timber.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, this is very serious with us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DAVIS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 54, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary through the Forest Service to advice timberland owners and associations, wood-using industries or other appropriate agencies in the application of forest management principles to federally owned lands leased to States and to private forest lands, so as to attain sustained-yield management, the conservation of the timber resources, the productivity of forest lands, and the stabilization of employment and economic continuance of forest industries, and to carry into effect, through such agencies of the Department as he may designate, the provisions of the Cooperative Farm Forestry Act, approved May 18, 1937 (16 U. S. C. 568b) (not to exceed $660,034), and the provisions of sections 4 (not to exceed $83,700) and 5 (not to exceed $65,766) of the act approved June 7, 1924 (16 U. S. C. 567-568), and acts supplementary thereto; in all, not to exceed $809,500, of which not to exceed $54,636 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia; and not to exceed $30,000 for the construction, alteration, or purchase of necessary buildings, and other improvements: Provided, That in carrying into effect the provisions of the Cooperative Farm Forestry Act, no part of this appropriation shall be used to establish new nurseries or to acquire land for the establishment of such new nurseries.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as one who spent considerable time before the Agricultural Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, I want to express appreciation for the patience and uniform courtesy shown by the chairman and members of that subcommittee, during their hearings, and to commend them for the thoroughness of their deliberations.

I am extremely gratified that the committee has allowed the full amount of budget estimates in certain important items affecting forestry. I refer particularly to the appropriations for forest fire cooperation, for farm and other private forestry cooperation and for experimental forests and ranges. In the South we have very little public land and these cooperative programs of protection from fire and of technical aid to landowners are vital to progress in forest conservation. And our forests in turn are the lifeblood of many communities and industries.

However, other provisions in this bill which carry reduced appropriations for vital forestry services do not seem consistent with the needs for a program in keeping with the great importance of the Nation's forests. For example, the amounts provided for investigations in forest management, forest products, and forest resources carry in total, reductions amounting to $1,210,000 in comparison with the appropriations for fiscal year 1947.

New methods of turpentining trees developed under the forest-management investigations program have been of inestimable value to our naval stores industry. Further improvements are needed and any slowing down of progress now will be felt by thousands of people.

I am particularly concerned over the very heavy reductions for research in forest resources investigations. This is the item under which the widely recognized forest survey of the United States is conducted. We have had an initial survey in the South virtually completed and our industries found it of great value in planning their operations. I do not share the opinions of the committee as expressed in their report that this work is of little practical value and I am sure that many forest industries in the South share my feeling. We want to see this survey kept up to date as a basis for further planning.

Likewise, I cannot accept without comment the opinion of the committee that research in forest products as conducted at the Forest Products Laboratory is visionary. Here again there are in the South many recipients of the research results flowing from the laboratory who will not agree with the committee opinion or appropriation action. As only one important example, I mention experiments on the use of scrub oak in the manufacture of paper and board and the derivation of tannin from its bark. Thousands of acres in the South are producing this now worthless tree.

Other portions of the bill concerning research in agricultural crops show no such proportional reductions. This I am glad to see, but in the southeastern United States we have more forest land than cropland. And we have a lot of forest land that ought to be back in forest land. Our forests are depleted, and their production is low compared to what it could be. Over half the southern forests are in industrial or similar ownerships, both large and small, with the remainder owned principally by farmers. There is a considerable acreage in public forests and parks. Practical technical information is the most important tool that these owners can have at hand in operating their forests, and this tool is a result of research and investigation. I am greatly disappointed that forest-research services to our people will be weakened with the passage of this bill.

I am also disturbed over other provisions in the bill as they affect forestry. Total reductions approximating $16,000,000 for the United States Forest Service cannot be taken lightly at a time when national resources have suffered several years of intensified depletion during the war. We discovered during these years what shortages of a vital resource really means. Then they were primarily due to necessary diversion of lumber and other forest products to the war effort. All home-building and other activities forming a part of peacetime progress came to a standstill. This same thing could happen in the face of shortages due to scarcity, and forest resources are ever growing scarcer. Right now we are using timber faster than we are growing it, and our best timber is gone. If we do not take aggressive action to adopt and implement a broad forestry program designed to rebuild this resource, we are asking for eventual return of public control of production, distribution, and prices such as we had during the war. These things can be avoided only when an abundance of resources are present. I want to see our economy stay free, but we must face the fact that the Federal Government must exercise leadership and pioneer in this matter of forest conservation if we are to really get on top of the job. There is considerable doubt in my mind that the Congress has ever supported forest conservation as fully as it should be supported. For these reasons I regret any retrenchment or any giving of ground in our public efforts to advance conservation in forestry. In fact, we could more properly be debating the amount of increased appropriations for this activity rather than confining our deliberations to reductions.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

FOREST DISEASES

Mr. Chairman, the committee cut $80,720 from the budget estimate of $440,000 for investigation of diseases of forest and shade trees and forest products, and methods of their control. The amount allowed, $359,280, appears on line 25, page 28, and lines 1 and 2, page 29 of the bill. In the report, page 16, under the heading "Forest diseases," the committee states that the $80,720 cut was that part of the fund heretofore "allotted for work on diseases of young natural stands and plantings (including white pine blister rust, chestnut blight, and rust of southern pines)."

Very little testimony appears in the hearings relative to the work covered by the $80,720 disallowed. Dr. Cullinan, Assistant Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, Soils, and Agricultural Engineering, of the Beltsville Experimental Station, was asked a few questions. His testimony begins on page 773 of the hearings. Evidently no one connected with the experiment station thought any of the projects were in danger, as there has never been any question about the fine work the Beltsville station has been doing in connection with the projects eliminated.

The work eliminated is essential if we intend to protect our forests which, as everyone knows, we are fast depleting. In 1909 our saw timber was 2,826,000,000,000 board feet. In 1945 the estimate was 1,601,000,000,000. This indicates that in 36 years we reduced our saw timber 44 percent. At present we are making terrific drains upon our saw timber. Last year we cut or destroyed 53,900,000,000 board feet of saw timber and against this the estimated growth of saw timber amounted to only 35,300,000,000 feet. Thus it will be seen we overdrew our saw timber account by 18,600,000,000 board feet.

Now, if we are going to stand by and see diseases ravage our forests—the chestnut blight has already killed all of our American chestnut trees—we are going to be right up against it for timber in a very short time.

I am not offering an amendment to restore the cut, because I think the proper way to proceed is for the Senate to bring in the scientists from Beltsville for examination. I am fully convinced if this is done the cut will be restored.

Our forest problem is becoming such a serious problem that we cannot afford to assume the risk of our forests being further depleted from diseases. We should do everything in our power to protect our forests.

Most of the projects that the cut eliminates are in their final stages. It would be absolute folly to discontinue the work at this time.

In the interest of preserving our future forests, it is important that the diseases which attack young trees be held in check. The Forest Service, National Park Service, Soil Conservation Service, State agencies and others depend on the Bureau for information on controlling the diseases.

In addition to devising better control methods, important progress has been made in developing hybrids of white pines resistant to white pine blister rust, of chestnuts resistant to chestnut blight, and loblolly pines resistant to fusiform rust. Further selections and testing are necessary before the varieties should be released for extensive planting. Discontinuance of the work would jeopardize the investment in these experimental plantings.

The forests of the future must develop from young trees. Diseases of young trees frequently prevent the growth of desirable timber stands and plantations. It is important to study these diseases to determine methods of controlling them, also to develop disease-resistant hybrids. The Forest Service, National Park Service, Soil Conservation Service, State agencies, and private owners, depend on the Bureau for assistance in controlling these diseases. The sudden termination of long-time research in this field not only disturbs cooperative arrangements with State experiment stations and other agencies, governmental and private, but also causes large losses resulting from discontinuing long-term investigations and breeding projects, and failure to prepare reports and publications relating to them.

The cut would eliminate 19 average annual positions and affect the work at 12 locations scattered over the entire United States. Since the work is part-time at 9 of the locations, the elimination of funds for the project will have the effect of curtailing important work on other projects. Altogether, forest disease work will have to be discontinued at 6 locations: Saucier, Miss.; Chico, Calif.; Flagstaff, Ariz.; Savannah, Ga.; Syracuse, N. Y.; and Glenn Dale, Md.

The disease investigations and research under this project which would be eliminated include:

First. White pine blister rust, including selection and propagation of pine and ribes resistent to the disease, $25,800.

Because of white pine blister rust, forest reproduction of white pines can now be attained only with costly control measures. So that future plantations of this important forest tree may be safe from the rust, several promising selections of eastern white pine resistant to the disease in initial tests have been developed by cooperative work with the Wisconsin Agricultural Experiment Station and the forestry school at Syracuse University. Further testing is needed before these strains should be released to Government, State, and private nurseries for large-scale propagation and distribution. On the Pacific coast, similar selections are being made of the sugar pine, and promising new hybrid pines developed by the Forest Service are being tested for rust-resistance. Assistance to other agencies is also being continued in the development of better methods for the control of blister rust.

Accidental introduction of white pine blister rust from Europe in about the year 1900 brought the gravest threat to the immensely important white pines of North America, the most important species in the United States being the eastern white pine, western white pine in the Northwest and California, and sugar pine in Oregon and California. While mature pines may be greatly damaged by the rust, the greatest destruction is to the seedlings and young trees which are girdled and killed by the disease. Forest reproduction of white pines in the presence of the rust is hopeless. The rust does not spread from pine to pine but goes from pine to currants—ribes—and from them back to pine. Discovery of this fact led to eradication of the alternate ribes hosts as a control measure.

Many of the essential facts concerning blister rust and its spread under different conditions of climate and host plants have been determined. We now need to intensify our work on the selection and propagation of resistant pines, so that future forest plantations may be safe from the rust. This work is well started. In cooperation with the Wisconsin Agricultural Experiment Station and the forestry school of Syracuse University in New York, several promising selections of eastern white pine have been made and have withstood intensive initial tests. After further tests these strains will be released to Government, State, and private nurseries for large-scale propagation and distribution. On the Pacific coast, this kind of work is being developed for the sugar pine and we are also testing the rust resistance of promising new hybrid pines developed by the Institute of Forest Genetics, United States Forest Service, Placerville, Calif.

Horticultural varieties of currants resistant to blister rust have been selected and are being tested at our northeastern laboratory at New Haven, Conn. This would revive a horticultural industry through providing rust-immune currant varieties that would not threaten the pines.

Experimental plots in Idaho, Washington, Oregon, and California are designed to improve the efficiency and lower the costs of present eradication methods. Where large amounts are being expended on control of infectious diseases, it is always justifiable to make reasonable expenditures for research to improve the control methods, especially as the disease spreads to new climatic areas and infects new alternate hosts.

All of this research would be discontinued.

Second. Chestnut diseases, including breeding, testing, and propagating blight-resistant hybrids, $28,530.

Extensive breeding and selection work has produced many disease-resistant hybrids and Asiatic strains which are being tested in forest plantings. They are also being tested for their tannin content, since a domestic source of tannin is vitally needed, especially during war when it has been a critical material. The blight-resistant chestnuts tested thus far have as high tannin content as disease-susceptible American chestnuts. Further testing is necessary before the varieties should be released for extensive plantings. Discontinuance of the work now would result in the loss of much of the investment in these experimental plantings.

The loss of the chestnut from the blight permanently reduced the productivity of millions of acres of forest land in the area east of the Mississippi River, as trees replacing the chestnut are of less value. Its multiple uses for lumber, tannin, nuts, durable posts, and poles made it invaluable for the farmers' woodlots. Extensive breeding and selection work has given us many disease-resistant hybrids and Asiatic strains now being extensively tested in forest plantings. Within a few years we expect to have sufficient data on their relative value to justify recommending certain ones to State foresters and for the public at large, for extensive forest plantings. To completely discontinue the work now when paying results are so near would result in the loss of much of the Government's investment in these widespread experimental plantings.

Tannin is strategically vital for production of sole leather in time of war. During World Wars I and II ships had to be diverted to bring tannin from Argentina and Africa. At present, blight-killed chestnuts, which will not last indefinitely, furnish over 60 percent of our domestic vegetable tannin. In case of another war some other domestic source of tannin is vitally needed. Blight-resistant chestnuts tested so far have as high tannin content as American chestnuts. In time, enough of them could be grown to serve as a living tannin stock pile. In view of the critical shortage of domestic vegetable tannins, testing of blight-resistant chestnuts and working them into our forests should be accelerated, not stopped entirely.

Chestnut orchards are important in limited areas in California and scattered plantings occur in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho. The few chestnut blight infections so far found have been eradicated in cooperation with these States. There is a good prospect that the disease could be kept under control at a low cost in that area, even though the orchards are mostly composed of the very susceptible European chestnut. Discontinuance of our part of this cooperative work may result in the blight becoming established in the Western States.

This country in normal times imports fifteen to eighteen million pounds of chestnuts from Europe, but the blight is spreading rapidly in Italy and in time this supply will be cut off. Blight-resistant chestnut trees distributed by this Bureau are producing good crops and give indications of being the basis for a large chestnut orchard industry in the Eastern States. Nut decays and other troubles need further study, especially in the Gulf States, but our cooperative work with the horticulturists looks very promising for this entirely new industry.

Third. Fusiform rust, brown spot, and pitch canker of southern pines, $11,960.

Thousands of acres of forest plantations and young natural stands in the South are now being ruined by fusiform rust of loblolly and slash pines—a disease totally different from white pine blister rust—and brown spot of longleaf. The fungi that cause these diseases have been determined. Good progress is being made in controlling these diseases by various methods developed for existing young stands and by testing resistance of pine strains for future planting. Southern pines furnish fully one-third of the domestic annual lumber cut; they also have great value as sources of pulp, ties, poles, cooperage, veneer, turpentine, and rosin. Virgin stands are almost gone; the future supplies depend on reproduction and new forests. In the South, 10,000,000 acres need reforestation, largely with pines. Upwards of 20,000,000 pines are being planted anuually on southern farms. The cut in funds would eliminate all of this research and would necessitate closing our field headquarters at Harrison Experimental Forest, Saucier, Miss.

Fourth. Dwarf mistletoe and other diseases of young natural stands, $9,380.

Dwarf mistletoes rank next to heart rots as a cause of loss in western coniferous forests, where they are a major factor in decreasing growth on millions of acres and are ruinous to the young forest reproduction. The House cut will eliminate the studies on determining the most practicable and efficient methods for mistletoe control so that these methods may be made available for extensive use by timberland operators, as well as cutting out all work on other diseases of young natural stands. Cutting mistletoe out of overstory trees improves them and protects the young reproduction by removing the source of mistletoe seed. In established plots we are studying the extent and frequency of mistletoe cutting required for control, and the conditions under which affected large trees should be harvested. When labor becomes abundant much work of this character will certainly be done by the large timber interests, including the national forests, State forests, and very extensive privately owned forests. There is a large demand for the information, and we should lose no time in determining the most practicable and efficient methods for mistletoe control so that these methods may be made available for extensive use by timberland operators.

BAMBOO DISEASES, $850

A previously unknown serious root disease of timber bamboo has been discovered during the past year in north Florida. Other diseases are impairing bamboo culture in South Carolina, Georgia, and Louisiana. Initial studies on these diseases have been made at the request of bamboo growers. Bamboo is being increasingly planted in the South for diversified uses, one of which is for the production of paper pulp. The growing bamboo industry needs expansion of the work on destructive diseases.

I hope the Representatives interested in protecting our forests from diseases will appear before the Senate committee and urge that the cut be restored.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Can the gentleman name one single pest they have helped to eradicate?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I certainly can.

Mr. GROSS. I wish the gentleman would name them.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I refer the gentleman to the chestnut blight which came right down through his State and cleaned out every chestnut tree in Pennsylvania. They have developed at least six types of hybrid chestnuts at the experimental station at Beltsville which have stood up against the blight for over 20 years. They want to carry this experiment on for a few years more to determine which type is the right type with which to restock our Appalachian forests. That is going to take time.

Then I call the gentleman's attention to the pine blister rust. We have checked it. We are to the point now where we know how to eradicate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The appropriations in this bill for the Forest Service are not as large as they ought to be. From what has gone on in this House yesterday and today, it is very evident that any motion to increase the appropriations for the Forest Service would be voted down. I hope that when this bill gets over to the Senate the Members of that body who feel kindly toward the Forest Service will be able to restore at least some of the funds which have been reduced.

Mr. Chairman, I beg the indulgence of the House even at this late hour, when I know the Members are tired, to say a few words in support of the Forest Service. This House recently established a special committee to study the newsprint situation. There is a great shortage of newsprint in this country, and we get the most of our newsprint from foreign sources. During the war we greatly depleted our forests because of the great need for lumber. Even before the war, and for many years prior thereto, we have been very negligent about our forests. Many sawmill people cut out the timber with little or no thought of the future. In many instances seed trees were not left. Great stretches of country, especially in the longleaf pine section, have been nearly denuded of timber. It was certainly a short-sighted policy, and today we are experiencing the results of that policy. Erosion is taking place at a rapid rate. This causes accelerated water flow and it all adds up to more frequent and greater floods.

Mr. Chairman, I do not have time to further portray the results of our unwise use of the once great timber resources in this country. But the bright spot in the whole situation is that we have learned at long last that we must conserve our forests, that we must restore our soils, that we must put back as much as we can the elements and natural resources which have been destroyed over a period of 50 years or more. A good many years ago this Nation embarked upon a plan of reforestation, upon a program of reseeding our denuded lands, conserving and restoring our soils, and the restoration of our natural resources in general. We have spent considerable money in that direction, but we are going to have to spend more. We must realize that there is just so much land in this country. We must realize the absolute necessity of growing forests for our children and those of future generations. It is plain good business to do so. It is unfair for those living in this age to continue to deplete our natural resources without making adequate provision to provide something for those coming after us. I therefore urge, Mr. Chairman, that more ample provision be made for the growing of timber for the future welfare and prosperity of the whole country and for the further conservation and restoration of the natural resources of our country. I hope that the Appropriations Committee in the future will make better provision for these great national needs for all the people than are made in this pending bill.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the majority leader and other Republican leaders are in a desperate position. Their very utterances, as well as their actions, evidence this fact. They—the eastern-dominated Republican Party—have already ignored the just claims of the great West and Northwest by the unjustifiable slashing they gave in the Interior appropriations bill. The eastern-dominated Republican Party is now doing the same thing to the farmers and the rural areas of our country. The Republican Party leaders do not tell the country that before he sent his budget estimates up to Congress, President Truman reduced the departmental requests by about $7,000,000,000. Their only cry, as stated by the majority leader, is that "There is stubborn opposition to every effort we make to cut the cost of government." I don't understand it that way. What we are opposing is the false economy of the Republican Party.

Real economy is one thing; false economy is another. I wonder if the people of the West and Northwest consider the sharp reductions in the Interior Department appropriations, which played into the hands of the utility barons, as real economy of false economy? I wonder if they consider what has happened to be in their best interest? I also wonder whether our farmers consider the sharp reductions in this bill as constituting real economy or false economy? Do they consider the blow which has been dealt them by this bill to be to their best interest?

The false economy of the Republican Party in the Interior appropriations bill was harmful to the West and the Northwest and also to the fishing industry of the country. The false economy of this bill is harmful to the farmers of America, to the school-lunch program, and is also harmful to our fishing industry.

The only economic groups who think they will benefit by these reductions are the big business interests of our country. They are the ones who have dictated and who are applauding the Republican false economy program—despite the fact that this false economy is a powerful factor in producing the business recession that now faces the country.

The people of the country might just as well wake up to what is going on in Congress. Eastern big business controls the Republican Party, and that means eastern domination of the Republican Party in Congress. Under the Republican Party, with this eastern domination, the Government is giving primary consideration to dollar values, with human values forgotten. Under the Democratic Party the Government gave, and properly so, primary consideration to human values, to the best interests of our people as human beings.

No, the issue involved in these drastic reductions is not real economy. The issue we are fighting is false economy.

The Clerk read as follows:

Flood control: For expenses necessary, in accordance with the Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936, as amended and supplemented, to make preliminary examinations and surveys, and to perform works of improvement, $500,000, including personal services in the District of Columbia, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, with which shall be merged the unexpended balances of funds heretofore appropriated or transferred to the Department for flood control purposes: Provided, That no part of such funds shall be used for the purchase of lands in the Yazoo and Little Tallahatchie watersheds without specific approval of the county board of supervisors of the county in which such lands are situated: Provided further, That allocations of funds for the fiscal years 1947 and 1948 for works of improvement on individual watersheds shall be in the respective amounts set forth in the Department's budget justifications to the House Appropriations Committee and shall not be decreased except as may be necessary by reason of a decrease in the estimates of available prior year balances.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am greatly concerned about some of the drastic cuts being made in this appropriation bill which are detrimental to agriculture. My record for economy in government speaks for itself. I am also quite sure that the farmers of America want economy in government and want savings made in the proper places. This appropriation bill, however, would seem to take the props from under agriculture in many instances. No one knows what the future holds for agriculture. It is the Nation's basic industry, and we, from the Midwest at least, have learned long ago that food for our people simply does not grow on trees. Just now we are being called upon to produce food and more food, not only for our own consumption but for the entire world. The farmer should be encouraged in the splendid work he is doing to feed the starving people of all nations. If we have another depression in this country we had better be sure that we have a foundation ready for agriculture on which to build and survive.

I want to make special reference to the elimination of section 32 funds which provides agriculture with money from custom receipts with which to maintain price supports under surpluses. Section 32 on which agriculture has depended all these years is now rudely jerked from under us at the very time when agriculture is facing the greatest surplus it has ever faced. All appropriations for this fund are eliminated under the provisions of this bill and, in my judgment, such action is ill-advised.

I also want to say a word about the cut in appropriations for conservation and use payments. This program has been carried on for a number of years, much of it during the time when agriculture was in real distress. The program was again specifically authorized by the Congress last year and, as a result, contracts were entered into with our farmers in good faith and now we find that under the provisions of this bill such contracts are being invalidated to the extent that the appropriations are not sufficient to carry them out. This is simply breaking a contractual obligation.

Last year the Committee on Agriculture, of which I am a member, sponsored the enactment of the Hope-Flannagan bill to carry on agricultural research. Appropriations for this service have also been drastically reduced in this bill. The program is still in its infancy and sufficient funds should have been provided to carry on this work to its fullest extent. If there is anything needed in agriculture today, it is research. I hope that sufficient money will be appropriated to carry on this splendid work.

I regret that I cannot agree with the Appropriations Committee on many of the items brought to our attention today. I only have time to mention a few. The Soil Conservation Service is most important. It should be carried on to the fullest extent and the Budget estimate for this service should be allowed. I realize, however, that we must pass this appropriation bill in order to carry on the necessary functions of government and only regret that this committee has seen fit to so drastically cut appropriations in so many instances. I, for one, want to speak out in protest on behalf of the Nation's farmers.

The Clerk read as follows:

Soil conservation operations: For carrying out preventive measures to conserve soil and water, including such special measures as may be necessary to prevent floods and the siltation of reservoirs, and including the improvement of farm irrigation and land drainage, the establishment and operation of conservation nurseries, the making of conservation plans and surveys, and the dissemination of information, $38,000,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation may be expended for soil and water conservation operations in demonstration projects.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

KEEP SCS AS IS

Mr. Chairman, I have made quite a study of the work of the Soil Conservation Service people as they assist soil conservation districts. I have observed progress at close range. I have talked to hundreds of farmers in my congressional district, and to State agricultural leaders and county agents. I think I know a few things that all of you may not be familiar with.

Every one of the 14 counties in my congressional district is organized into a soil conservation district under Iowa State law. The Soil Conservation Service is giving technical assistance to each of these districts, and doing a magnificent job, too. The farmers need this help, and they want it continued and expanded. I know these farmers and their soil-conservation problems. And I know they, the majority of them, Republicans and Democrats alike, would be opposed to sharing the technical assistance they now receive with the new districts that are coming in. But I fear that is exactly what will happen even if we accept the full amount in the President's budget proposals. And so, with all of my congressional district organized into soil conservation districts I think I am in a position to make a few observations based on my personal experience and study.

There has been a lot of talk in the past 2 years that the Soil Conservation Service should be combined with the extension services of our land grant colleges, and that the latter should have charge of soil and water conservation work.

There are a lot of things wrong with this idea. I shall mention only a few of them. In the first place, the Extension Service is the educational agency for agriculture. It was set up for that purpose, and it wants to operate that way. I well remember the testimony of M. L. Wilson, director of extension work, during hearings on the 1947 Agriculture Department appropriation bill. Director Wilson, testifying on the farm labor program made it clear that the Extension Service would like to be relieved of the farm-labor program, so that all the colleges and those connected with them could all be put into the educational program. Director Wilson said that he thought all the extension directors in the States felt the same way; that too much of a load could not be put on the extension workers; that educational work was what these men were fitted for, and what they wanted to do.

H. C. Byrd, president of the University of Maryland, one of our leading land-grant colleges, said this in a speech last December in Chicago:

> If work experience means anything, I can say to you that in my opinion we have done a better job in Maryland than we would have done had the Soil Conservation Service been a part of the AAA or a part of any other unit of the Federal Department of Agriculture.

That is a direct quote from President Byrd of the University of Maryland. The Extension Service folks of the land-grant colleges, I am sure, feel the same way about it. They have got all they can do in the agricultural educational field—that is their job.

The Extension Service does have a big part to play in the soil-conservation program in their own field—that of education. In most States Extension is doing a good job in the field of conservation education which is necessary to prepare farmers for the technical help the Soil Conservation Service gives individual farmers through soil conservation districts. In fact, more educational work is needed in order to speed up the job of getting permanent conservation on the land. Dr. R. K. Bliss, who retired about a year ago as extension director at Iowa State College, made an inspiring soil-conservation talk over the radio on June 12, 1946. In this talk Dr. Bliss pointed out that soil conservation is Iowa's greatest economic problem. He said further, and I quote:

> What the program lacks is the educational and organizational drive to get everyone—farmers, schools, city people—all interested in soil conservation. This educational job falls largely on the Extension Service.

That is the way Dr. Bliss, former Iowa extension director, feels about this problem. So, you see, Extension has all it can handle in the field of conservation education. It is not equipped to deal with technical phases of an action program, nor does it want to do so.

I would like to quote once again from the Chicago speech of President Byrd. Dr. Byrd said:

> We must have a continuing, aggressive national agency devoted exclusively to the problems of land conservation. We have that now in the Soil Conservation Service. The job is too vital, too complex, and too basic ever to become a side line to another activity. We cannot permit the national job to be split into segments, or to be subordinated to a variety of other agricultural programs.

That is a direct quote from the president of the University of Maryland and I agree with him.

SCS ORGANIZATION SOUND

Now let me comment on another charge that has been made against the Soil Conservation Service which I consider to be unfair and untrue—and I think I can substantiate what I am about to say by facts from the record. The charge is that the Soil Conservation Service is a top-heavy organization, that its overhead is high. The Soil Conservation Service has one of, if not the lowest overhead of any agency in the Department of Agriculture. The Soil Conservation Service, more than any other agency I know about, has taken its job out on the land. It has consistently reduced its overhead year after year. I think it is an efficient agency, an economical agency. I only wish all the agencies of Government had half as good a record.

Iowa is one of the eight States in the upper Mississippi region of the Soil Conservation Service, with headquarters at Milwaukee, Wis. The other seven States are Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Minnesota, Missouri, Wisconsin, and Illinois. In the regional office at Milwaukee, and in the eight State offices in that region, the Soil Conservation Service has a total of 291 employees, including clerical, accounting, budgeting, and purchasing personnel who perform functions required by law of all Government agencies. Of the 291 employees in the regional and State offices in these eight States, the Soil Conservation Service has 95 professional grade administrators, technicians, specialists, and supervisors.

I want to make it clear that I do not consider the Soil Conservation Service, with 95 professional and 196 clerical and stenographic regional office and State office employees in the same 8 States, is wasting the taxpayers' money with a top-heavy organization. I am convinced the Soil Conservation Service is streamlined for an efficient job, that it has the bulk of its personnel—86 percent of its employees by Department and Budget Bureau overhead standards, to be exact—out in the field offices to serve the people on the land. In fact, if you consider that practically all of the professional employees in the regional and State offices contribute valuable specialized technical assistance in the field and not in an office—the real overhead—administration and facilitating service—of the Soil Conservation Service is nearer 6 percent than 14 percent.

The Soil Conservation Service operates efficiently and economically—more so than any other agency in the Department of Agriculture. It is not a top-heavy organization. In reality, about 94 percent of their employees are working directly at the job of getting a permanent conservation program established on the land. We must not hinder this all-important program which the Soil Conservation Service is carrying on so effectively to conserve the precious soil of America.

The Clerk read as follows:

> For expenses necessary to enable the Secretary to carry into effect the provisions of sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, approved February 29, 1936, as amended (16 U. S. C. 590g–590q), and the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (7 U. S. C. 1281–1407) (except the provisions of sections 201, 202, 303, 381, and 383 and the provisions of titles IV and V), including personal services in the District of Columbia; not to exceed $6,000 for the preparation and display of exhibits, including such displays at State, interstate, and international fairs within the United States; $165,614,290, to remain available until December 31, 1948, for compliance with programs under said provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and the act of February 29, 1936, as amended, during the period July 1, 1946, to December 31, 1947, inclusive: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000,000 of the total sum provided under this head shall be available during the current fiscal year, for salaries and other administrative expenses for carrying out such programs, but not more than $1,950,000 shall be transferred to the appropriation account, "Administrative expenses, section 392, Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938": Provided further, That payments to claimants hereunder shall be made upon the certificate of the claimant, which certificate shall be in such form as the Secretary may prescribe, that he has carried out the conservation practice or practices and has complied with all other requirements as conditions for such payments and that the statements and information contained in the application for payment are correct and true, to the best of his knowledge and belief, under the penalties of the act of March 4, 1909, as amended (18 U. S. C. 80): Provided further, That none of the funds herein appropriated or made available for functions assigned to the Agricultural Adjustment Agency pursuant to the Executive order (No. 9069) of February 23, 1942, shall be used to pay the salaries or expenses of any regional information employees or any State or county information employees, but this shall not preclude the answering of inquiries or supplying of information to individual farmers: Provided further, That no funds shall be available for salaries or other administrative expenses in connection with the formulation or administration of any 1948 program of soil-building practices and soil- and water-conservation practices, under the act of February 29, 1936, as amended, or programs under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, except those pertaining to marketing quotas under the latter act: Provided further, That the Secretary may, in his discretion, from time to time transfer to the General Accounting Office such sums as may be necessary to pay administrative expenses of said office in auditing payments under this item: Provided further, That such amount shall be available for the purchase of seeds, fertilizers, lime, trees, or any other farming materials, or any soil-terracing services, and making grants thereof to agricultural producers to aid them in carrying out farming practices approved by the Secretary in the 1947 program under said act of February 29, 1936, as amended: Provided further, That the Secretary is authorized and directed to make payments to farmers who complied with the terms and conditions of the agricultural conservation programs, formulated pursuant to sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, if the Secretary determines that, because of induction into the armed forces of the United States, such farmers failed to file, or were prevented from filing, applications for payment under any such program during the period the applicable appropriation for such program was available for obligation, such payments to be made out of the unobligated balance of the appropriation, "Conservation and use of agricultural land resources," in the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1946: Provided further, That an application for payment on the prescribed form is filed by any such farmer (or the person entitled to payment in case of death, disappearance, or incompetency of the farmer under regulations issued pursuant to section 385 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended (7 U. S. C., 1940 ed., 1385)) within 1 year from the date of his discharge from the armed forces, or by December 31, 1947, whichever is later: Provided further, That no part of any funds available to the Department, or any bureau, office, corporation, or other agency constituting a part of such Department shall be used in the current fiscal year for the payment of salary or travel expenses of any person who has been convicted of violating the act entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," approved August 2, 1939, as amended, or who has been found in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of the act of July 11, 1919 (18 U. S. C. 201), to have violated or attempted to violate such section which prohibits the use of Federal appropriations for the payment of personal services or other expenses designed to influence in any manner a Member of Congress to favor or oppose any legislation or appropriation by Congress except upon request of any Member or through the proper official channels: Provided further, That where farmer participation in the program in any State, region, or area is not sufficient to require the full amount of the money apportioned thereto any such sum or sums in excess of such requirement shall be reapportioned to States, regions, or areas whose original apportionments have not been sufficient to meet such requirements.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON: Page 48, line 26, strike out "$165,614,290" and insert in lieu thereof "$300,000,000."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment to see if we can agree on time?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto and amendments to this paragraph close in 30 minutes, the last 10 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may we see how many Members want to talk on this?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The matter has been discussed in general debate and elsewhere and I think the membership is quite familiar with the issue.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have not been able to speak and I should like to address myself to this matter for at least 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The chairman of the committee has not had an opportunity either, even in general debate.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the gentleman, that applies only to the pending amendment?

Mr. DIRKSEN. And all amendments thereto.

Mr. CANNON. And not to any further amendments?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I feel I must object in that there are several amendments I know will be offered and from the number of Members who want to speak this will leave approximately 1 minute each.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, suppose we agree to run on for a little while, then see if we can limit time. I withdraw the request.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it is only in recent years that the country has become conservation conscious. Even at that we are a little late. But we are beginning to realize belatedly that we must conserve what remains of our natural resources. Much of our wildlife is already gone and can never be replaced, and millions of acres of arable land have been so depleted and eroded that it can never be reclaimed.

So, at this late date there is a feeling throughout the country that we should conserve what resources still remain.

Our basic resource is the land. Everything goes back to the land. We must produce from the land the food and the raw materials and the fiber upon which every industry in the country is dependent. It takes 100 years to make one inch of soil, and during the war years we have ruined our soil, we have drawn upon it as never before. In response to this thought-producing situation we passed in the last Congress an authorization for a $300,000,000 program of conservation, one which met with general approval on both sides of the House, and in both Houses of Congress.

Under that authorization the Department of Agriculture has announced this program, and a large percentage of the farmers of the Nation have entered into what they believe to be binding contracts with the Government, and most of them have performed what they conceive to be their part of the contract.

This program is of special interest to the small farmers. Out of the 3,404,126 farmers who have participated in the program, 2,746,951 will draw $100 or less than $100, and nearly half will draw less than $40.

It is the small man who has a stake in this program, the man who is not able to finance his own conservation unless specially encouraged. It especially applies to the rented farm.

Here is a long-time program under which we preserve the basic fertility of the soil. It has been remarkably successful. Concurrence in the committee report, eliminating entirely the 1948 program and cutting down to $150,000,000 the appropriation for the current program, means that the Government will be able to pay these farmers less than 60 cents on the dollar.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot repudiate the Government's obligations in that irresponsible manner.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hear one of my colleagues asking what the amendment is. The amendment is to increase the amount of payments on what is sometimes referred to as political conservation rather than soil conservation from $165,000,000 to $300,000,000.

I think it is significant that we have already passed the part of the bill which applies directly to the conservation of the soil. Being a farmer, I believe in the conservation of soil as only a farmer can, but I believe I have a moral obligation to myself and to my neighbors and to society in general to take care of that soil myself. No one pays me for taking a bath, but it is good for me. It is good for the farmer to take care of his soil himself.

We have passed the section dealing with Soil Conservation Service, and we approach the Production and Marketing Act, in the first paragraph of which is an amount for soil-conservation payments. We are not talking about soil now, we are talking about payments out of the Federal Treasury. All of the breast beating and the crocodile tears we are going to have today are not over conservation of the soil, they are over the political payments to those who comply.

In his budget message to us earlier this year the President of the United States said:

A year ago the budget message recommended gradual reduction of these payments, and that recommendation is now renewed. More than 60 percent of the total payments go to about one-eighth of the Nation's farmers. Most of this money, thus, is being paid to a comparatively small number of farmers, who, because of their strong position in American agriculture, would undoubtedly continue the best farm-management practices without the persuasion of a bonus from the Treasury.

I subscribe to that part of the President's message.

We should shift our effort from this kind of subsidy to providing technical guidance to all farmers for soil conservation and management along the lines of the Soil Conservation Service—

The section dealing with which we have just passed without objection—

and the Extension Service—

Which this committee did not dilute in any fiscal manner.

The President of the United States concludes:

I therefore propose that the appropriation act limit the conservation and use program for the crop year 1948 to $200,000,000 instead of the $300,000,000 program to which we are committed for the crop year 1947. This will not affect expenditures materially until the fiscal year 1949.

I have read from the committee report, page 6.

On all of those commitments or contracts to which the President refers there was small print which said that this was dependent upon the money being appropriated, and the commitments referred to by the President were made on that basis. I submit that in this debate upon which we are now launching we should restrict our arguments not to the conservation of the soil, which I do not think is debatable, but to the matter of political payments out of the Treasury for practices that any good farmer ought to follow. As the President himself points out, 60 percent of these payments go to one-eighth of the Nation's farmers.

The table below outlines some very interesting facts regarding AAA payments:

[Based on 1945 and 1946 program]

Size of payment to individual payee	Number of payees	Percent of total	Payments		Percent of payment proposed 1947	Amount
			Amount	Percent of total
$0 to $60	2,150,602	63.17	$55,844,000	22.08	100	$55,844,000
$60.01 to $100	596,349	17.52	45,461,000	17.98	75	34,095,750
$100.01 to $500	616,098	18.10	107,584,000	42.55	50	53,792,000
Above $500	41,077	1.21	43,960,000	17.39	25	10,990,000
Total	3,404,126	100.00	252,849,000	100.00	----------	154,721,750

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman regard these payments as political payments rather than real soil-conservation payments?

Mr. HORAN. I am afraid that I will have to because they are not large enough to conserve a farm and the farmer still has to use his own best judgment to conserve his soil.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman's committee provided $165,000,000 for this.

Mr. HORAN. We provided that in our best judgment to carry out the practices for 1947.

Mr. COOLEY. If the gentleman regards these as political payments, why did he allow $165,000,000 to come out of the taxpayers' pockets for something that he considers a political purpose rather than a soil-conservation practice.

Mr. HORAN. Simply because it was pointed out to us that the commitments had been made.

Mr. COOLEY. All right; but if political commitments were made, certainly the Republican Party is not interested in keeping political commitments. The commitment was for $300,000,000.

Mr. HORAN. The commitment was for what we estimated the amount to be and we felt it should be carried out.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, no one thinks any more of WALT HORAN than I do or appreciates the value of his services more. I am sure the statement he has made here today is based not upon the knowledge he has of his own business, which is apple growing, or pear growing, but upon his ignorance of the soil-conservation practices for which the payments are made. If my good friend, WALT HORAN, could go down to the grass roots and see the purposes for which these payments are made and see the cost to the farmer who gets these payments he would see that practically none of these payments are not earned. When you are planting nitrogen in our soil by cover crops, is that political? It is preserving the soil in the best possible natural way. It costs money to earn these payments from the Government.

It has been slurringly charged here that these are political payments. Gentlemen, I assure you nothing could be further from the truth. If you want these soils destroyed; if you want millions of little farmers—who simply have not the initial cash outlay necessary to sow these soil-building, soil-enriching cover crops without this Government investment promised by law—to be compelled to cease these soil-conserving practices, then go right on and vote your pledged word to these farmers who relied on it. But you cannot repudiate this honest debt by killing this amendment and escape the righteous condemnation which always follows such fraud.

I want to read to you from last year's RECORD when our former distinguished colleague, Judge Tarver, of Georgia, offered a committee amendment unanimously adopted by the Subcommittee on Agriculture—if my information be correct—for this $300,000,000 pledge. It is our promissory note. He said:

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I am presenting for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole the question to which I made reference a few moments ago. That is, whether or not you are going to authorize for the crop year 1947 program, $300,000,000. I am presenting it in language which is so definite in character as to admit of no misconstruction. It is the time now to decide whether you want to reduce the 1947 crop-year program, not next year after the plans of the Department and those of State AAA authorities and the farmers have already been completed. If we want to reduce it, reduce it now and reject my amendment and offer some other amendment to indicate a lower figure.

But if you want to fix it definitely and in such form as to enable the farmers of the country to rely upon it implicity so that even the Bureau of the Budget cannot disregard it, then adopt the amendment which I have offered.

I may say that I have submitted this amendment to the members of the subcommittee and it is, therefore, offered as a committee amendment, since it met with their approval.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

So, it is perfectly clear and beyond question, that it was last year when you were free to make the unwise cut now made, that you should have made it for the crop year 1947. Nor can you attempt to palliate your repudiation today of your appropriation of March 8, 1946, by saying that you did not understand the significance of that pledge made 14 months ago. Judge Tarver warned you then, in language too plain to be misunderstood, not to make the pledge unless you meant it. He challenged you then: "It is the time now to decide whether you want to reduce the 1947 crop-year program, not next year after the plans of the Department and those of State AAA authorities and the farmers have already been completed. If we want to reduce it, reduce it now and reject my amendment and offer some other amendment to indicate a lower figure." You cannot misunderstand that. You did not then. You do not now. The issue now presented by the pending amendment is stark clear. It is: Shall we repudiate our promissory note, signed, sealed, delivered, acted on by millions of American constituents in good faith ever since? Or to phrase it another way: Shall we pay our honest debt?

Today we are writing the appropriation bill for next year—the fiscal year 1948. We have a perfect right to write our pledge for the 1948 crop-year program at $300,000,000, or for half that sum, or nothing. But whatever amount we pledge, we should redeem to the dollar by appropriate provision in next year's appropriation bill.

So I am here in honesty and good conscience, never more serious in my life, to say that we have no moral right to fail to pay the promissory note we wrote in last year's appropriation bill and upon which three-quarters of the farmers of this Nation have acted in good faith and spent at least 80 percent of the money that Uncle Sam promised them to improve their land, plus their sweat and blood that went in, in addition, in the faith they had in the integrity of the Government and its pledged word—the law we wrote and made a statute. So if you wish to reduce such payments for succeeding years, then go ahead. Slaughter the whole program, if you wish. That is within your moral right, but you have no moral right to fail to pay, now that it has matured, your promissory note that you wrote last year for $300,000,000. If you want to continue at that same level, it is the best money you can invest in the future of this Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] has expired.

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. TEAGUE. Mr. Chairman, the budget reductions recommended by the Appropriations Committee for the Department of Agriculture concerns me a great deal. It should concern every individual in this country for all of us, particularly those living in metropolitan and industrial areas, are entirely dependent upon the farmer for the maintenance of our specialized type of economy. We have only to look about us to the other less fortunate nations to see this fact. England's food situation is desperate. She, along with India, China, Italy, Greece, Germany, and various other nations, is sorely faced with the effect of the population pressure upon the land, and the inability of their own agricultural resources to provide adequate sustenance for their peoples.

Our population has now reached 141,000,000 and the population is continuing to increase at a rate of about one-half million people each year. Our position as the world's wealthiest and most powerful nation is, in a large measure, to be attributed to the ability of the farmers and ranchers of this country to adequately provide food and fiber in such abundance that we have been able to maintain one of the world's highest standards of living.

World War II is not too far back in our memories for many of us to recall the narrow margins by which we escaped serious food shortages. By no means is it so far back for all of us to recall the large quantities of food produced in this country for our allies. Few of us realize, however, that crop yields per acre harvested during the five war years—1942–46 inclusive—averaged a great deal more than during like periods in the past. Interesting comparisons are obtained by comparing yields during the 5 years, 1942 to 1946, with the 5 years, 1929 to 1933.

Here are a few comparisons: Corn yields increased 42 percent, grain sorghum yields increased 25 percent, feed grain yields increased 33 percent, wheat yields increased 28 percent, cotton yields increased 42 percent, and hay yields increased 19 percent. These figures are increases in yield per acre harvested, acreage increases during the war years not withstanding. These and other agricultural yield increases account in no small measure for the difference between victory and defeat in World War II. These yield increases cannot be attributed entirely to good weather or ideal production conditions, for the increases are not spectacular wartime increases. A study of the statistics reveals that they are a result of sustained year-by-year increases in efficient production.

These gains were made through years of effort and experience of good farmers, through years of research and educational services by the Department of Agriculture, our State colleges, our experiment stations, our Extension Service agencies, and through our soil-conservation programs. These gains represent dividends from the Government's continued investments in good farming and contribute immeasurably to the maintenance of our complex type of economy. To discontinue or to arrest the continuity of this work will constitute a disservice not only to farmers but to our entire population of this and future generations by endangering our continued effort to keep agricultural production ahead of our population increases.

There has been a considerable amount of half truths spoken and written in recent weeks concerning price support programs to farmers and its alleged contribution to the current high costs of living. Actually few agricultural commodities are supported or have been supported during the period since the end of the fighting. To be sure, prices have increased for practically all commodities, but such increases are inevitable during periods of prosperity. High incomes, widespread employment, and high rates of production mean rapid movement of merchandise, rapid rates of circulation of money, increased buying power, and a heavy demand for goods and services. But farm prices have not increased at a disproportional rate compared with nonfarm prices.

Let us consider a few facts that are revealed in the recent publication of Agricultural Prices, a monthly publication of the Department of Agriculture. Wholesale prices doubled between the 1935 to 1939 period and April 15, 1947. Retail prices for food also doubled. Farm prices, prices received by farmers, increased two and six-tenths times the 1935–39 average and the farmers' cash income from marketing increased two and seven-tenths times. The farmers' costs, or prices paid, including interest and taxes, increased one and eight-tenths times the 1935–39 average. The ratio of prices received to prices paid, including interest and taxes, but excluding the farmers' labor costs, increased only 40 percent. His wage bill, as represented by the index of farm-wage rates, increased three and three-tenths times the 1935–39 average. Weekly factory earnings had merely doubled during this same period. The farmers' income is somewhat enhanced by a 13-percent increase in the volume of farm marketings, but marketings of nonfarmers has increased considerably more than this.

The farmers' economic position undoubtedly is better than in the 1935–39 period and I am sure we are all glad that it is. But his improved financial position is partly accounted for by his production of much of his own household food requirements and because he can be and is more frugal. But his apparent financial condition must be partly discounted by the fact that he has yet to replace much of his farm equipment, the production of which was curtailed during the war period.

According to the marketing and transportation situation reports of the Department of Agriculture, the public is still spending about 23 percent of its more than doubled annual income for foods. Had the people of this country purchased the same quantities of foods in 1946 as they purchased per capita during the 1935–39 period, their expenditures for food would have declined from 23 percent to 17 percent of their income. The difference between 17 percent and 23 percent, or 6 percent of the public's food bill, I assume, must be attributed to increased quantities of food purchased. A high rate of employment and increased wages has afforded more people better diets and a better living.

The position that this Government took with respect to obtaining the high wartime production for nonfarm sources required huge cash outlays and a heavy assumption of risks for capital investments and essentially guaranteed profits to the wartime producers of nonfarm items. The position it took with respect to farm production essentially was a guarantee against sudden price declines to protect the farmers' investments, not Government investments, in crops that took months—in some cases 14 to 18 months—to produce and market. Bear in mind the farmers' business turn-over, at best, is once or twice each year, while businessmen turn their stock several times each year. I dare say, the approach employed to obtain the agricultural production was and will be by far the more economical. Another 19 months remain for the Government to fulfill its obligations to the farmers. We, of course, must fulfill that obligation. Any abuses under the program should be brought to light and stopped, but we should not seek to penalize all farmers simply because minor abuses may be possible. Nor should we penalize the national welfare by the discontinuance, or retarding of research, educational and administrative programs that have so greatly contributed to our world-wide agricultural leadership.

The Seventy-ninth Congress laid the ground work for the enhancement of our agricultural leadership in the passage, by unanimous vote of both Houses, of the Marketing Research Act of 1946. This act, potentially, is the greatest positive piece of agricultural legislation passed by the Congress in many years. Thus far, however, it has been only a potentiality. Funds have never been appropriated so as to permit the Department and the State colleges to proceed to carry out the wishes of the Congress. We should not stand in the way of this program any longer. The time will come, altogether too soon, when the results of this program will be needed to facilitate the efficient movement of agricultural production to the urban consumers. Much can be done to enhance the value of our agricultural production—to farmers and to consumers—through the efficient placement of the products in the form and at the time and place people want and need those products. To delay this program further will tend to destroy a part of its value, for time is one of our more valuable assets.

A great deal of latitude is possible and feasible in the improvement of our marketing and distribution system. Continued pursuit of the solution of problems now affecting the system will enhance the value of our agricultural economy to the benefit of farmers, dealers, and consumers. Savings of food and fiber and their byproducts, and increased efficiency in the handling of these commodities and products means increased earnings to farmers and businessmen, lower prices and greater nutrition to consumers, and a greater wealth to this country. With conditions what they are in the world today, the sooner we get started with this program the better it will be for all of us.

I am unalterably opposed to appropriation cuts in the Agriculture appropriation bill which would force the Government to renege on its promises to the agricultural producers. I believe that some savings can be made, but I do not want the heart cut out of the AAA conservation program or any other vital and necessary service just for the sake of reducing the budget. That is false economy.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, if the statement in last year's bill and the statement by the Department of Agriculture to farmers that payments upon fertilizer and lime to be used upon that individual farmer's land will be made subject to the approval of the Congress and to appropriations by the Congress makes a contract, then I cannot understand English. As a matter of fact, I think it might be of interest to the Congress to know and to realize just for whose benefit this operation is. Frankly, I have never had a farmer in my district—and it is an agricultural district—favor this operation to me. I have had many of them oppose it because they do not believe in subsidies. But I found out the other afternoon, beyond dispute, just what is the source of this operation and the support for it. It is the fertilizer trust and the National Agricultural Limestone Association. Their lobbyist, a fellow by the name of Robert M. Koch, was around to see me the day before yesterday afternoon. He had taken a poll of some people in my district, and of Mr. DIRKSEN's district, and of Mr. PLUMLEY's district, and Mr. ANDERSEN's district, to find out how the farmers in those districts felt. I suppose these post cards were sent around to them by the fertilizer and limestone agents. He brought the thing in to indicate how strong the farmers were for it. I have not heard from a single one of them.

Now, I wonder, are we passing on a bill for the benefit of the farmers, or for the Fertilizer Trust and the Limestone Trust? It is about time we began to think about what we are doing.

Clearly, this item is for the benefit of the Fertilizer Trust and the Limestone Trust, and we ought to wake up and realize just exactly what it means. Why, the gentleman went so far as to indicate that if there was opposition to this, they would be able to see that none of these farmers voted the Republican ticket again. I am ready to meet that challenge. I do not believe the farmers in my territory are going to be run around by the nose by the Fertilizer Trust and the Limestone Trust. I do not believe that the Congress of the United States is going to be a tool of, and supine to, the Fertilizer Trust and the Limestone Trust; and I hope that in opposing this amendment the Congress of the United States will show its independence of the Fertilizer Trust and the Limestone Trust.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

The enormous cuts in appropriations for the Department of Agriculture come as a shock to the American farmer who is being called upon now to feed the entire world. At no point in this bill are these cuts more disastrous than in the reduction of funds for the AAA program now administered by the Production and Marketing Administration. When appropriations were set at $300,000,000 for this item in 1946, a precedent was established, and in good faith the farmers have acted on that precedent. They depended upon it. Many of them have entered into commitments under it. Farmers performed their part of the bargain, and it is unfair that the Federal Government should repudiate its part of the program. Unless these cuts are restored, this is going to mean money out of the pockets of our farmers on matters that they have entered into in all good faith. In 1947 the farmers of Oklahoma were allotted $7,459,000 as Oklahoma's share of the $300,000,000 appropriation. Over 70 percent of these funds have already been spent. Increased interest in conservation has been so great that already many counties have spent all their funds. This is one of the finest programs ever authorized by this Congress. It is a program for America. It is a program to build up our own country. It is a program for the conservation of our soil upon which we depend for all the basic necessities of life. It is a democratic program largely carried out by the farmers themselves. In all respects its operation has been thoroughly American. I sincerely hope that the committee will restore the full amount of the budget estimates for the PMA. Next to our children, our soil is our greatest national asset. Yet, despite this fact, we find these enormous reductions in budget estimates, both in our triple-A program and in our program for school lunches which has been reduced from $75,000,000 to $45,000,000. In its action on the school lunch item in the deficiency appropriation bill, this Congress has emphatically expressed its position with respect to this valuable program. I sincerely trust that it will restore the full amount of this item which, compared to the amount of money we have spent to feed foreign countries, is almost negligible.

In rescinding all section 32 funds, the Appropriations Committee is saying in effect that although the advantages of tariff to industry are to be maintained, no offset will be allowed to the farmer. This action, in my opinion, will mark the beginning of an unfortunate precedent. I sincerely hope that the Committee will see fit to restore this item.

Many of the reductions in the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget contemplated in this bill relate to loans on which the Government has made a profit. This is certainly true of REA. This program is not a gift to the farmers; it is a profitable investment. Every dollar spent for this program is coming back to the Government with interest. In many sections of the country this program is in its infancy. In many counties in my own State and district, it is just getting started. In this bill we are saying to farmers in such areas that they are not entitled to the benefits which have already been extended to farmers in many other sections of our country. The farmers are prosperous, and in times of prosperity they desire to build up their farms and to enhance their value for the future.

Likewise, our farm-tenancy loans, which have been considered the highest form of risk, have already proved in practice that they are sound. This program benefits the small farmer, the tenant farmer. It is a program which is converting many sections of our country from that of farm tenancy to one of home ownership. It takes no persuasion to convince anyone that home ownership is the foundation of a stable democracy.

I trust that this House will not break faith with the American farmer. I trust and sincerely hope that we may be able to restore the drastic cuts which have been made in the budget estimates for agriculture in many particulars. We all want economy but not false economy, not economy which will cut the heart out of our farm program.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we cannot agree on a time to limit debate and whether Members who want to be heard just want to extend their remarks.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I am a farmer. I have been extremely close to the agricultural programs since 1933, and was chairman of my county AAA committee from its inception until in 1942 I was made a member of the State AAA committee, and subsequently chairman of the State committee. During the period from 1933 to 1945 I participated in most of the national conferences which developed the detailed operational programs provided for by the Congress. During much of this same period, I was president of the association of vegetable producers in my State, and served for many years as a member of the national fruit and vegetable committee of the American Farm Bureau Federation. I also served for a period of time as chairman of the Virginia Peanut Growers Committee.

One of the basic policies in existing legislation is concerned with the maintenance and improvement of soil fertility. The agricultural conservation program has contributed immeasurably to the resources of our soils and to the productivity of our national agriculture. In the appropriation bill last year, the Department of Agriculture was authorized to develop a program of agricultural conservation for the current year to the extent of $300,000,000, to be appropriated by this Congress. I question the wisdom of so drastic a curtailment as is proposed in this bill. I do concur in the belief that producers generally are financially able to bear a much greater proportion of the costs of conservation practices than they are now doing. I believe the authorization for next year can be substantially reduced without seriously retarding the constructive conservation that has been started, but I do not think it wise to completely eliminate provision for sponsoring agricultural conservation in future years.

I do not think we can classify agricultural conservation as a subsidy to farmers. The protection, preservation, and upbuilding of our soil's resources is of extreme importance from the standpoint of national welfare. In spite of all our educational activities among farmers, and in spite of the tremendous amount of progress that has been made toward developing in them a consciousness of the necessity for protecting their soils, the time has not yet arrived when individual farmers, acting entirely on their own volition, will carry out conservation measures which are so necessary for the protecting of soil fertility, and for the assuring to our Nation agricultural productivity adequate for our needs.

From my long association with our various agricultural programs I am not convinced that the present Federal policy toward agriculture is the best policy to pursue in the indefinite future. I have some convictions with respect to changing our approach and eliminating the detailed involvment of the Federal Government into the production, habits, and procedures of individual farmers. I think we can avoid any semblance of regimentation, and simultaneously promote a sound agriculture in the best interests of our Nation. I am planning to offer certain suggestions of this nature for the consideration of the Agriculture committee.

Until we have improved legislation with respect to agriculture, I think it is incumbent upon us to utilize to best advantage, and as economically as possible, those facilities which are provided in existing legislation. I think it would be unwise for us to eliminate all our emphasis on soil conservation and believe we should approve this amendment.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Chairman, I am supporting an increase in the appropriation for soil conservation and for the Production and Marketing Administration for the reason that for generation after generation, we have been exploiting our soil—the greatest heritage which God has given to us and our children; and only recently have we begun to replenish that soil.

This is not alone the responsibility of the individual farmer, but it is the responsibility of the Government of the United States. Fundamentally, the stability of this country rests upon its soil. When that soil is depleted to such an extent that it will not sustain our economy, then we must go the way of the great nations of the past who neglected that great heritage and went into decay.

To deny these funds now, in my opinion, would be one of the greatest mistakes in judgment that the Congress of the United States could make. We are just beginning—the real surface of soil conservation has only been scratched. I think now, especially, when we are heading into a new period of world recovery when not only the fate of our own Nation but the fate of the world is tied up in whether or not the people of the world have plenty to eat and plenty to wear, it would be particularly tragic if we, the Congress, should recoil from our responsibility and affect a penny-wise, pound-foolish economy.

It is needless for me to stand here and argue to the Congress the merits of soil conservation. It would be childish indeed, because the benefits are well recognized, and the fruits of the program speak for themselves.

So I shall not take any more of your time, but my vote is for an increase in the appropriation.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is regrettable that so much politics has been injected into the nonpolitical subject of an agricultural appropriation bill. The Nation cannot survive without food and fiber. This food and fiber are and must be produced by agriculture. Yet it is apparent that there are those among us who are more interested in making this a political bill than they are in the well-being of and production on the part of the farmer and economy on the part of government.

Everybody concedes that during the last political campaign the Republican Party promised elimination of all possible waste and pledged itself to the strictest economy in the operation of government, including the Department of Agriculture. In keeping with this pledge, every item in the President's budget has been carefully scrutinized by a diligent subcommittee on agricultural appropriations. Weeks have been consumed in this study. The Department has been required to justify every request made in its budget. This has been an interminable job on the part of the committee. Be it remembered that the testimony in the hearings before this subcommittee was taken down in shorthand and is before us today for consideration. These printed hearings have been available for study by members generally. The volume consists of printed pages and is mute evidence not only of the painstaking care of the committee but also is proof that the cuts made in this bill are justified.

Yes, these printed hearings prove conclusively that cuts were not made with a meat ax, as alleged by some of the speakers. The whole Department, and all of the activities in the name of agriculture carried on by the Department, have been laid on the operating table and the parts of the organization unnecessary to efficient functioning have been eliminated. A reading of these hearings is conclusive proof that the delicate knife of the surgeon has been used; that there has been no meat-ax operation, and that only nonessential expenditures have been eliminated.

Mr. Chairman, there is a difference between essential things and desirable things. With a national debt of approximately $260,000,000,000 we must take stock of our resources and our ability to pay. We can all think of improvements in our homes and of desirable changes possible, but none of us would think of making these changes if in doing so we were marching directly toward bankruptcy. Our country must be kept solvent. There is a limit to the amount of money the taxpayer can contribute to government, and the people are demanding that the Congress recognize this fact, cut expenditures, balance the budget, provide for the payment of the national debt and proceed from here on out on a sound fiscal basis. Now this cannot be accomplished without more economy in government, and there is only one way to bring about this economy and that is by cutting and reducing every penny of outgo that is not absolutely essential at the moment.

Mr. Chairman, as I have told the House so many times, I represent one of the most productive agricultural districts in the country. Our activities on the farm are varied and there are few provisions in this appropriation bill that do not have a direct bearing on some part of agriculture within my district. Consequently I am vitally and earnestly interested. I want to do the right thing for my district. I realize, however, that the prosperity of the country and the well-being of the several congressional districts are dependent upon the national economy, and that it takes prosperity in all of the districts to make national prosperity. There are some cuts in this bill which do affect my farmers more than farmers in some other districts. Naturally these constituents do not want these cuts and have so advised me. However, I have faith in them, and when they consider the national picture I feel sure they will not ask for favors in their particular cases. The real trouble in bringing about economy in government is that, while each group and most individuals favor economy, yet all want the economy applied to the other fellow.

In popular vernacular it is not a question of "let George do it," but it is a question of "do it, but let George pay for it." It is just too bad that the honest, sincere, and conscientious effort of the Appropriations Committee to keep faith with the people and weed out wasteful and unnecessary expenditures is being made a political football. I feel sure that no one will accuse me of being offensively partisan in the consideration of any legislation. It is true that the Republicans, preceding the last election, did promise to reduce the number of Federal employees and to bring more economy to the Government. I thought that in this effort the cooperation of the Democrats could rightfully be expected. Apparently I guessed wrong, because up to this good hour, while this appropriation bill is being read for amendment, there has been a solid Democratic vote against practically every cut proposed by the majority. Yes; most of the Republicans have voted for the cuts, yet partisanship has not so unanimously prevailed. There has not been a vote on an amendment where the Republicans voted on strict party lines. Indeed, the well-being of agriculture is not and should not depend entirely on the edict or strategy of any political party organization.

If a Member is convinced that a reduction is not justified and will injure rather than help the country, then he is doing wrong if he does not vote accordingly. On the other hand, if he responds to a crack of a political party whip, for political purposes only, then he is doing his country a disservice.

Mr. Chairman, I have given careful attention to the printed committee report. I have gone through the bill. I regret that in my opinion the safety of our country requires the elimination of some worthy activities on the part of the Government for the time being; that is, I favor doing some of the things suggested in the President's budget but, under all the circumstances, am convinced that this is not the time. I know, as we all know, that when this bill goes to the Senate additional sums will be added, and that the final Agriculture appropriation bill will be a compromise between the views of the two Houses.

In voting for this measure, I am giving due consideration to the studied conclusions of the committee reporting the bill, which knows more about the details than the rest of the House can hope to know in the time which can be given for consideration.

In conclusion, may I beseech the Members to forget the center aisle which divides our seats politically? Let us think entirely of our responsibility to agriculture and the country at large rather than campaign issues in the 1948 election. Political strategy is all right in its place, but it is entirely out of place when dealing with a nonpartisan question upon which the very existence of the Republic rests.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if we can agree to a limitation of debate on this section.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have not spoken on the bill yet. Unless I can get 5 minutes I will object.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the membership should realize that if everybody is going to be recognized on every amendment we are going to be here for a long, long time.

Mr. BROOKS. What is wrong about giving the farmers a break?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That sounds interesting, of course.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section of the bill and all amendments thereto close in 40 minutes, the last 15 to be reserved to the committee.

Mr. CANNON. That is perfectly agreeable, with 15 minutes reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. In order that there may be no misunderstanding the Chair will read the names of those seeking recognition at the time the motion prevailed: Messrs. ANDERSON of California, POAGE, BROOKS, WOOD, ALLEN of Louisiana, PACE, CASE of South Dakota, WHITTINGTON, and 15 minutes for the committee.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is recognized.

A MATTER OF HONOR

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, whatever I shall say is not prompted by the Fertilizer Trust or the Limestone Trust. I do not think either of them operate in my congressional district or in South Dakota to any extent. What I shall say goes to the question of the moral obligation of this Congress.

In passing, however, in order that the country may know that the ranchers in my district earn their payments I wish to say that the great bulk of these payments go for building stock-water dams.

Mr. Chairman, the year I was first elected to Congress was 1936, one of the tough drought years in the northern Great Plains. In 1934, and again in 1936, I campaigned on the slogan "A dam, an irrigated garden, and some trees on every farm in western South Dakota." When elected, I pursued every honorable course to make that goal come true.

I proposed the use of the old resettlement grants to encourage water conservation. I supported the Water Facilities Act. I wrote the bill which was called the Case-Wheeler Act, or, more officially, the Water Conservation and Utility Act, to get double duty from relief dollars. I urged that the old triple A program place its emphasis upon actual water-conservation practices. I supported at every opportunity the building of stock-water dams as the logical conservation practice for these payments in my district.

And I have seen a transformation in the water resources on the ranches in my congressional district in the last 7 years.

In 1940, in my district alone, 8,040 dams were built on 7,746 farms or ranches. In 1941, there were 6,247 dams built on 6,101 farms. The program slackened a bit during the war because of labor and machinery problems, naturally, but still progress was made. And in 1946, the first postwar year, 7,788 dams were built on 5,831 South Dakota farms, of which 5,565 dams were on 4,178 farms in my congressional district.

Since the inception of the program in 1937, the first year I was a member of Congress, through 1946—10 years—there have been constructed a total of 57,812 dams on 51,147 farms in South Dakota, 70 percent of which are in the western half of the State, the so-called short-grass country. The dirt moved in building these dams totaled 76,194,754 cubic yards.

Along with this dam-building program went tree planting, rotation grazing, and contour stripping. I mention these things, Mr. Chairman, to dispel once and for all any idea that in my district the fertilizer trust has anything to do with the program, or that any such trust has anything to do with my attitude in this matter.

The people in my congressional district work for these conservation payments and these exist to show what they have done.

I will, of course, agree with anyone who says that good as any program may be, there may come a time when you cannot afford to put out the cash for it. If the time has come to say that we will not authorize a conservation-payment program for next crop year; that is one thing, and the sound-thinking people of my district will not complain if that is the situation. I have never seen the time, however, Mr. Chairman, when it was desirable to welch upon an obligation, either individually or nationally. And it is to that point I now address myself.

A year ago when this matter was before the House of Representatives the gentleman who was then in charge of the bill, Mr. Tarver, of Georgia, specifically called attention to the fact that there was language in the bill which proposed to put a ceiling upon the amount of these practices for which 1947 contracts might be entered into with the farmers. He called attention to the fact that that was a ceiling of $300,000,000. After directing attention to it he then offered an amendment and advised the House he was doing it so that it would in effect make the ceiling also a floor and permit the representatives of the Department to enter into contracts with the farmers on the basis of conservation practices amounting to $300,000,000.

The amendment specifically changed the language in the proviso of the bill with that avowed intent.

Mr. Tarver had called attention to what he proposed to do in advance of offering the amendment and then when he offered it did so in these words:

I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for March 8, 1946, page 2081:

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I am presenting for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole the question to which I made reference a few moments ago. That is, whether or not you are going to authorize for the crop year 1947 program $300,000,000. I am presenting it in language which is so definite in character as to admit of no misconstruction. It is the time now to decide whether you want to reduce the 1947 crop-year program, not next year after the plans of the Department and those of State AAA authorities and the farmers have already been completed. If we want to reduce it, reduce it now and reject my amendment and offer some other amendment to indicate a lower figure.

But if you want to fix it definitely and in such form as to enable the farmers of the country to rely upon it implicitly so that even the Bureau of the Budget cannot disregard it, then adopt the amendment which I have offered.

I may say that I have submitted this amendment to the members of the subcommittee, and it is, therefore, offered as a committee amendment, since it met with their approval.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. I wish to see if I thoroughly understand the amendment. The bill as now written puts on a ceiling of $300,000,000 for next year.

Mr. TARVER. Exactly.

Mr. POAGE. As I understand it, if we adopt the gentleman's amendment, we have in effect approved $300,000,000 for next year without either putting it up or down; in other words, it is a kind of floor as well as ceiling.

Mr. TARVER. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 62, noes 19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. Chairman, it will be noted that this issue was raised as specifically as the English language could raise it. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] asked:

As I understand it, if we adopt the gentleman's amendment we have in effect approved $300,000,000 for next year without either putting it up or down; in other words, it is a kind of a floor as well as a ceiling.

Mr. TARVER. That is correct.

Immediately thereafter the chairman put the question and the amendment was adopted. The record is clear.

The representatives of the Department were entitled to lay out the program in the various States upon the basis of a $300,000,000 program for this crop year of 1947, and they did so.

Now, there may be some Members who can salve their conscience by saying somewhere, in fine print, upon the contract submitted to the farmer—there is some suggestion this thing might be changed by a subsequent appropriation of Congress—but my conscience permits no such evasion.

Under the language of the record as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 8, 1946, I cannot go to the farmers and ranchers in my district who have engaged in contracts for the building of dams and who are now told, many of them, that under the cut proposed they will have to refund the money already received and paid for contracts for the building of dams into which they have already entered, and qualify the promise that was made by the House of Representatives and, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to do so.

I shall vote for the pending amendment, as a matter of honor as I interpret the record.

(Under permission subsequently granted by the House, Mr. CASE of South Dakota appended the following table to his remarks:)

The CHAIRMAN. The chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE].

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, hesitant as I am to take the time of this House to again read the record to which reference has been frequently made, I cannot fail to ask each Member to read once more pages 2080 and 2081 of the RECORD of March 8, 1946. That is the record of this House when it considered this bill last year. A part of that record reads:

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Committee amendment offered by Mr. Tarver: on page 48, lines 21 to 23, strike out all the language within the parentheses and insert in lieu thereof the following: 'amounting to $300,000,000, including administration.'"

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I am presenting for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole the question to which I made reference a few moments ago. That is, whether or not you are going to authorize for the crop year 1947 program, $300,000,000. I am presenting it in language which is so definite in character as to admit of no misconstruction. It is the time now to decide whether you want to reduce the 1947 crop-year program, not next year after the plans of the Department and those of State AAA authorities and the farmers have already been completed. If we want to reduce it, reduce it now and reject my amendment and offer some other amendment to indicate a lower figure.

But if you want to fix it definitely and in such form as to enable the farmers of the country to rely upon it implicitly so that even the Bureau of the Budget cannot disregard it, then adopt the amendment which I have offered.

I may say that I have submitted this amendment to the members of the subcommittee and it is, therefore, offered as a committee amendment, since it met with their approval.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. I wish to see if I thoroughly understand the amendment.

The bill as now written puts on a ceiling of $300,000,000 for next year.

Mr. TARVER. Exactly.

Mr. POAGE. As I understand it, if we adopt the gentleman's amendment, we have in effect approved $300,000,000 for next year without either putting it up or down; in other words, it is a kind of floor as well as ceiling.

Mr. TARVER. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 62, noes 19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

There may be Members who feel that they can escape responsibility for this commitment by citing the fact that the Department of Agriculture has always shown a suspicion of the promises of Congress and has put some fine-print provisions in most of the conservation contracts with farmers advising that the payments were contingent on congressional appropriations. I am not one of those who feel that I can break my promise on such a flimsy pretense. As a matter of fact, the Congress has given its solemn promise that the farmers would have $300,000,000 for soil-conservation payments during the crop year of 1947. The farmer could well understand the warning of the Department of Agriculture and still rely implicitly on the direct promise of the Congress itself. You and I made that promise. I am going to try to keep my promise. I wish that all of my colleagues on the majority side would join with the distinguished chairman of the Agriculture Committee and some 8 or 10 other Members who evidently respect their promise even in the face of party pressure. No one can read the record and seriously deny that this House did promise the farmers of America that they would have $300,000,000 for soil-conservation practices during the crop year of 1947.

We told the Department of Agriculture that they should work on a program of $300,000,000—not more and not less, but exactly $300,000,000. They have worked on that kind of a program and they have made promises to the States on that basis. The law required the allocations to be on the basis of $300,000,000. The money has been promised to the counties on that basis. The law we passed so required it.

So that those of you who do not understand this may know just how it works, I will give you an illustration from down in Texas, and it works the same way in every State. The $300,000,000 is first allocated to each of the several States. Then the State divides their allocation between the counties.

As an example, in Bell County, Tex., the county was allocated $129,200, to carry out the 1947 agricultural conservation program. Of this amount $110,656 had been obligated prior to May 24, 1947. Sixty-eight thousand three hundred dollars has already been earned. That is the farmers of Bell County have already done work which entitles them to more than this bill will pay.

In McLennan County, Tex., $140,600 was allocated for the 1947 crop year, and of this amount $110,589 had already been earned on May 23. That means that if we break faith with these farmers and give them only the half of what we promised, which the committee proposes, it will not only be impossible to pay for the work that has been done but, in addition, those farmers are going to have to refund to the United States Government at least $30,000 that they had every right to believe was theirs. Nor will it be possible for any of the farmers of McLennan County who recently signed up to receive any payment at all for the practices which he carries out.

This means that the United States Government, instead of carrying out its promise to the farmers, is going to find itself in the position of an Indian giver, going around and taking from the farmers what it solemnly promised.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee has suggested that this program is simply for the benefit of the sellers of limestone and of fertilizer. I feel that this is a very unfair and unfounded charge. No processor of fertilizer gets a dime out of the construction of a terrace. No producer of limestone makes any profit from the construction of a tank or stock pond. As a matter of fact, this charge simply could not be true in my section of the country, and I believe my section has done just about as much as any section in the way of soil conservation. As far as I know, there is not a ton of limestone sold in my district. Probably there should be, but our people feel that it is even more important to keep the soil where it is—to keep it from washing away. We use very little fertilizer. We should use more, but first we feel we must stop our soil from washing away. Maybe, when we have stabilized our soil, we will find ourselves using more limestone and fertilizer, but certainly for the crop year of 1947 the charges of the gentleman from New York are unfair and impossible.

Nor can I salve my conscience, as the gentleman from California does, by saying that it will be all right to break our promise because the farmers of California are rich. Unfortunately, my farmers are not rich. Unfortunately, even with present prices my farmers are making less than most factory workers. But if every farmer were as rich as the gentleman from California boasts his farmers are, it would not, as I see it, be any excuse for welching on our promise. If I sign a note, I try to pay it even if it falls into the hands of the richest man in Texas. I would hate to think that my Government was not as scrupulous in keeping its promises as I feel private citizens should be.

I have had no opportunity to discuss the merits of these payments. I feel that these payments have resulted in a real recognition of the importance of soil conservation. I feel that there is nothing more vital to the long-time welfare of our entire country than the preservation of our soil. I feel that it is clear that these expenditures are of tremendous benefit to our country. I think the bill should not only include $300,000,000 for the 1947 crop year, but it should also provide for a continuation of this worthwhile program. However, I cannot but fear that a committee or a party that will repudiate a solemn promise for 1947 can hardly be expected to give consideration to the needs of the future. Therefore, while I feel that this amendment should go further and make provision for a program for 1948, I shall enthusiastically support the amendment as being the very minimum that this Congress can do if it has any regard for the commitments of our Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I want to follow through a bit on what the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from South Dakota have said. I think it is tragic to break faith with a large group of the population of the country. It is especially tragic to break faith with the farmers, and that is what I think they are doing. But just as important, in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, is the result to the country and to the world generally of this breaking faith with those who till the soil. I have already heard from one farmer in my district who is disturbed about commitments that he has already made. He was out in the field working. He was out in the field plowing, seeking to produce the food and the fiber that this world needs so badly at the present time. He was out there as he should have been, and as millions of other farmers are today, working and producing. Word came to this farmer from Washington that there is a great disturbance in the farm program; that there is a great change going on up here in the plans that he thought he could rely upon in his planting season. He is disturbed mentally. He is disturbed financially, and the result upon his activity and his production in this country is going to be immediate. The country is going to suffer from this change and from this breaking faith by the Congress with the farmers of the Nation. We are going to have less food at a time when the world critically needs food. We are going to have less fiber at a time when the world is half clothed as a result of the greatest war in all history. And I say that perhaps above and beyond our breaking faith with the farmers in passing this amendment is the tragic result upon the production in this country and its effect upon the world as a whole. It is incalculable. I am truly sorry to see this provision in this bill.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, although I intended speaking on this bill later during the discussion, I cannot refrain from voicing my protest at the effort of the committee to force the Congress to invalidate binding contracts entered into between the United States Government and farmers all over America. The sum of $300,000,000 was authorized by the Seventy-ninth Congress on March 8, 1946 to be expended during the crop year 1947, under the soil conservation program. Unless we live up to our contract the American farmer will lose all faith in his Government, and rightly so. This program has meant much to the South and the West. It has been a good investment in from the standpoint of improving the soil. It has provided the needed incentive to cause the general upbuilding and improving of our soil. It is the only forward step our Government has ever taken toward this end. No one can deny that the program has been successful and I say, Mr. Chairman, that this fact, coupled with the legal and moral obligation made by the last Congress makes it mandatory that we adopt this amendment to carry on this vital program. I strongly denounce this entire bill and the political party who sponsors it. It is too much to hope for when we permit ourselves ever to believe that the Republican Party will sponsor any legislation favorable to the farmer. History reveals that they never have. In this matter now under discussion a sense of honesty and fair dealing demands favorable action on the amendment restoring this ill-advised cut. When we do this we can face the farmer and feel free from the guilt which will be ours if this amendment is lost. Let us not make the farmer the goat of partisian politics. Give him his just dues. God knows he is entitled to it if any group in America is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, it has always been my thought that the Congress of the United States should move cautiously on the question of the subsidization of any industry, but in the event that such subsidization is ever justified by the Congress it is my thought that the most deserving group in America is that group of men engaged in agriculture. I was in my home town last week end, at which time I was visited by a group of farmers, headed by the local chairman of the county organization. They presented me with figures to show that the farmers in that county, under the program that this Congress guaranteed to the American farmers last year on the 8th day of March, in the language that has been read to you by the gentleman who preceded me, have already earned under that program more this year than they got last year in the whole crop year.

In the presentation of the amendment which fixed this sum in the bill that was passed here in March of last year, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee handling this appropriation, the Honorable Malcolm Tarver, of Georgia, used this very exact language in addressing the Congress, which was adopted by the House and written into the law, and it affects this crop year, and I want to read it to you. He said:

> I am presenting it in language which is so definite in character as to admit of no misconstruction. It is the time now to decide whether you want to reduce the 1947 crop-year program, not next year after the plans of the Department and those of State AAA authorities and the farmers have already been completed. If we want to reduce it, reduce it now and reject my amendment and offer some other amendment to indicate a lower figure.

That was a challenge to the Members of Congress to determine then what the farmers might expect in 1947, and we here said then, "We will authorize this expenditure that is carried in this amendment for the crop year of 1947."

If this proposition were a private matter between any two individuals or corporations in America in a court of justice that sort of an implied agreement could be enforced by judgment of our courts.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. Congress made it illegal for them to offer any other program except the $300,000,000 program, did it not?

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman is correct.

Aside from the merits of the program which the funds provided by this amendment are designed to finance, and my limited time forbids a discussion thereof, I maintain that this Congress cannot now afford to break faith with the farmers of America by now welshing on its pledged word which has been acted on in good faith by them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WORLEY].

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Chairman, let us see what the farmers themselves think of the action which the Republicans recommend here today. I hold in my hand a resolution from the Childress County, Tex., Farm Bureau Federation, which reads as follows:

"Whereas during the past 15 years, the Government of the United States of America, working through and by its own Department of Agriculture, has encouraged and fostered the idea of soil conservation, it being the aim of the Department of Agriculture to build up the farming land in this country so that future generations, yet unborn, may live in a land that is self-supporting and enjoy the abundance of life that past generations have enjoyed.

"Whereas the House Appropriation Committee of the House of Representatives reported the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill on Friday, May 23, 1947, and such bill contained various reductions that will tend to cause the Department of Agriculture to cease its operations on portions of its farm program, and will curtail other functions of the Department that are vitally necessary for the welfare of our people.

"Whereas at the beginning of the crop year, 1947, a handbook was printed and distributed by the Department of Agriculture, in which certain soil-conservation practices were outlined and payments for carrying out said practices were established.

"Whereas newspapers are carrying articles originating in Washington, D. C., to the effect that although farmers have been promised certain payments for carrying out soil conservation practices; and although a good many of these practices have already been carried out by the farmers, that the Congress of the United States, by voting a reduction in the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, will deny the farmers the payment in full that was promised them in the handbook for 1947.

"Whereas the farmers of America have carried out their part of the 1947 program in good faith: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Childress County Farm Bureau Federation, go on record as opposing the reductions in the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, as the members of the organization think that the promises made the farmer for 1947 should be met in full and that a long-range program for the advancement of soil conservation should be carried out; that a copy of this resolution be mailed to the office of the Texas Farm Bureau Federation, and a copy mailed to President Edward A. O'Neal, of the National Federation, asking them to do everything in their power to have this reduction restored when the appropriation bill is passed on by the House and by the Senate."

The foregoing resolution was passed by the members of the Childress County Farm Bureau Federation at their regular meeting on May 26, 1947, at Childress, Tex.

MRS. FRANK L. TAYLOR,
Secretary.

On motion duly made and seconded the members voted to ask the secretary to mail copies of the foregoing resolution to the following: Hon. Eugene Worley; Hon. Tom Connally; Hon. Lee O'Daniel; Mr. Clinton P. Anderson; Chairman Hope, House Agriculture Committee.

I also quote a wire I received from Mr. Joe Hatton, district farm bureau director, sent from Amarillo, Tex.:

I have been in several Panhandle counties. Farmers are greatly alarmed at House Appropriation Committee action. We are counting on your help in getting essential funds restored on section 32, on AAA, and on other measures' appropriation, and vital to all of us.

Another from Mr. W. J. Clements, of Childress, Tex.:

Childress County farmers, ACA, feels that Congress is breaking faith with farmers by reducing soil-conservation payments that were promised first of year for 1947. Suggest you call Republicans' attention to this breach of contract, and use all your influence in restoring funds for 1947–48 program.

And from Mr. A. E. Wise, president, Randall County Farm Bureau, of Canyon, Tex., I received the following:

We note there has been a drastic reduction in appropriation for conservation program. Farmers have gone along for all-out production during war years. We now have greater need for rebuilding soil by various conservation practices than at any time before. Farmers have kept faith with Congress during last few years. We urge that Congress now keep faith with the farmers. We sincerely request that AAA conservation funds for 1947–48 programs be restored.

These are but a few of many I have received from farmers and ranchers in the Panhandle of Texas, all of which severely criticize the deletions which the majority members of the committee recommend.

It seems to me this legislation is indeed breaking faith with hundreds of thousands of people and is overlooking the really fine benefits which the Soil Conservation Service has secured.

I am fully aware that what I say and what other Democrats say from agricultural sections of this country will fall on deaf ears here in the House. The steam roller will continue to roll and arbitrary cuts and slashes will be made by the majority party because they have the votes to do it. It is obvious, of course, the majority intends to cut REA, which does not cost the Government one single penny but which does provide farmers with some of the comforts of life which are enjoyed by city people. The majority party does not seem too much concerned with lightening the load of the farm housewife who will be relieved of much drudgery and heavy labor by REA lines. Nor do they seem to think electricity in general for the rural areas is sufficiently important to properly finance this program which means so much to the rural people.

The same meat ax will also fall on the appropriation for farm tenant-purchase loans to 49,000 World War II veterans who want to buy a place of their own.

There is not a Member of this House who does not believe in cutting Government spending, but there is a decided difference of opinion where these cuts should occur. Mr. Chairman, there is such a thing as foolish and unwise economy. We see it here today.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Chairman, certainly no Member of Congress is naive enough to believe that an action taken by a preceding Congress can bind this Congress.

I call to the attention of the Members a few figures in connection with the farm industry in the State of California. I am from a section of California where the farmers are not dependent upon a dole to keep them in business. I come from a section of the country where we practiced soil conservation for many, many years before a paternalistic Government came in and told us how much lime, how much fertilizer, and how much cover crop should grow on our orchards and our farms. Look at this newspaper article from one of the counties in my district:

Twenty-million-dollar farm crop in Santa Cruz County recorded in 1946.

Remember that figure, $20,000,000—

Fruit and nut crops, $7,000,000; vegetable crop, $7,000,000—

And so on. Then way down here in fine print:

Government payments: Beef-production payments, $7,000; agricultural conservation, $35,000; sugar-beet program, $19,000; dairy subsidy, $52,000.

There is $114,000 in Federal payments out of a total farm crop in that one county of $20,000,000, and only $35,000 of it for agricultural conservation. To me it just does not make sense. If we are ever going to take the farmer off the dole, reduce Federal expenditures, and practice some real economy in this country, this is the time to do it.

Santa Clara County, the sixteenth richest agricultural county in the United States, is located in my district. Last year this county had crops which brought in $82,000,000 to the farmers of that county, one of the richest agricultural counties in the entire country. I now show you the report of the county agricultural commission. Here we are, "Agricultural conservation," under "Federal payments," $116,000, out of a total farm income of $82,000,000. I maintain we are still operating under an agricultural program that was designed to see to it that two-thirds of all the benefits for agriculture in the United States go to one-third of the farmers. It is not an equal program. If we are going to take the farmers off the dole, now is the time to do it.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield with pleasure to the majority leader.

Mr. HALLECK. Many are predicting dire political consequences in connection with any cut that is made in the expenses of Government. However, I believe the temper of the people today is such that their votes are not for sale on that sort of basis.

What I should like to inquire of the gentleman is this: Out in my State of Indiana corn is bringing $1.81 a bushel, wheat $2.45 a bushel, soybeans $2.70 a bushel, and oats 95 cents a bushel. Does the gentleman believe the farmer out there feels that the Federal Treasury is expected to provide him with free fertilizer and free limestone for his farm?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I certainly do not, and as I pointed out earlier, now is the time to take them off the Government dole. This conservation program is not needed by farmers who know their business, who have practiced soil conservation for generations and who can run their farms without being told by the Government how high and how green their cover crops must be before they can collect an infinitismal amount of Federal funds for doing something they would have done anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, we have just heard from two splendid gentlemen, one from the State of Washington and one from the State of California, who happen to live where the apples of Mother Eve grow the finest in the world they think. They would have us adopt a farm policy for the Nation depending upon the needs or rather the lack of needs of these two virtual Gardens of Eden. But we do not all have such wealthy regions to boast of. We are glad that these sections are so wonderfully blessed. Certainly nature has bestowed upon them a bountiful supply of the good things of life.

But, Mr. Chairman, we are not here legislating according to the measure of needs of the fattest sections of our fair land. These gentlemen perhaps feel that their sections are so prosperous that they do not need this assistance in rebuilding their lands and natural resources. We are trying to legislate for the average farmer in the Nation. I am speaking for the average farmer. I am speaking for the farmers, many of whom certainly are not able to do the things that people can do in the districts of the gentleman from California, and the gentleman from Washington. Many of us live in districts where the farmers do not have all that means. Perhaps the most prosperous farmers in the Nation can do all these things alone without any help, but most of them cannot. But even regardless of that, Mr. Chairman, this question of rebuilding, conserving, and restoring our soils and natural resources is one which does concern the entire Nation, rich sections as well as poor sections. This is national, not sectional.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN] indicated that the committee had put enough in this bill to cover the amounts of the soil conservation payments which have been obligated up to this time. Well, if that is what he and his committee meant to do. I would like my friend from Washington to listen particularly to what I am going to say. I know he is thoroughly honest. If that is his philosophy, I suggest to him that he has fallen far short of it because a great many of the parishes of Louisiana and the counties of the Nation have already taken up most of the allocation, and far more than the committee allowed in this bill. The committee allowed a little more than 50 percent of the amount requested, and the record shows that in many sections, particularly in the South, nearly 100 percent of the funds have been obligated. Up to April 30, 69 percent in Louisiana had been obligated.

Here is one parish in Louisiana which had an allocation of over $72,000 and as of April 30 they had taken all of the allocation up except $1,500. Here is another parish that had an allocation of $78,000 and on April 30 they had taken up all but $713. Another parish had an allocation of $62,000, and they had taken up as of April 30 all but $1,814. So, I respectfully submit to the committee that if they intended to do what the gentleman from Washington indicates, then the committee fell far short of that goal even at the time of writing the bill. It will take the full appropriation of $300,000,000 to meet the allocations made and soon to be made.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is a question of honesty involved in this appropriation. What you want to do in the future is a question for the Congress to decide.

But here is a question of living up to what we Democrats think is a commitment made last year. I discussed this more fully yesterday in general debate and do not have the time in my few moments now to go into details, but to deny this appropriation seems to us going back on an obligation made last year and this Congress has not heretofore repudiated such and we on this side of the aisle are not going to do it now and we hope you on the left will not.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is 100 percent correct. I commend his remarks to your thoughtful consideration. His statement is sound. I appeal to you gentlemen on the left not to do this, not to cut this out at this time for the crop year 1947, at least. I appeal to you to support the full appropriation of $300,000,000 so that the farmers can go ahead and complete the work which they are doing for 1947, at least.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, during the general debate on this bill on yesterday I stated that our soil was one of our Nation's richest resources. A look at what has happened in other countries, where the soil has been dissipated and permitted to wash away, verifies the truth of that statement. In a few minutes we will be called upon to vote on an amendment which will determine whether we will furnish the necessary money to carry on this program as set up, and which has resulted in the increased fertility and productivity of our soil, or whether we will take a backward step and withhold the necessary funds for the successful operation of this program.

Mr. Chairman, I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri which provides for the funds, pledged to the farmers of America by Congress last year, for carrying on this highly beneficial program for agriculture during the crop year 1947. To withhold these funds at this time, after allocations have been made to States and counties and where payments have been earned, or partly earned, by our farmers, would be tantamount to a breach of contract made by our Government with the farmers of our country.

Mr. Chairman, on many occasions, since I have been a Member of this body, I have heard with pride the statement made from the floor of this House that our Government has always kept its agreements and has never repudiated a contract. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope we will not depart from this high principle by our vote on this amendment today.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, to avoid any misunderstanding it should be said that this paragraph does two things. First, it does not appropriate or authorize $1 for this program for the year 1948. That means that if the paragraph is approved as it is, and that part is not touched by this amendment, this program will be completely terminated at the end of this year. That is what some have wanted done. I do not.

Then, secondly, this paragraph seeks to appropriate approximately one-half, or $165,000,000, of the $300,000,000 which the last Congress authorized the Department of Agriculture to expend this year in this work. Someone said a moment ago that no one would be foolish enough to contend that this Congress is bound by the action of the last Congress. If this amendment is not adopted and $300,000,000 is not authorized, it will be the first time during my service in the Congress that the Congress of the United States has failed to carry out its own contract. If there is any doubt that the last Congress authorized the Department of Agriculture to promote this program and the farmers to participate in it, I here have the appropriation bill passed last year with the section marked, which I would like to have anyone who has any doubt to come up and read. It authorized the program this year in the amount of $300,000,000. The committee will contend that the farmers were put on notice that that was subject to appropriation. I have the work sheet in my own State of Georgia. It does contain in fine print down at the bottom this language:

> Payments under 1947 are subject to appropriations provided for this purpose.

In the case of the State of Oklahoma there is no reference. In the case of Arkansas there is no reference. In the State represented by our distinguished majority leader the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], and in Iowa and Michigan, I have the work sheet in my hand and there is no reference whatsoever as to being dependent upon appropriations or any other provision.

I insist that the question now is, Shall the Congress of the United States maintain the contract it made with the farmers of this Nation? Many of them have completed the practices; the program is of great benefit to the farmers and to the Nation and should be greatly increased. I hope the amendment to appropriate the full $300,000,000 will be adopted.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman, the importance of the conservation of our soils, our greatest natural resource, has been repeatedly stressed during these debates. In my own State of Texas it is estimated something more than 11,000,000 acres of what once were fertile farm lands have been rendered worthless through erosion—striking testimony to the neglect of soil-conservation practices in other years. However, the vital question involved in this amendment is not whether soil conservation is a good thing or whether the particular activity which would be financed by the proposed $300,000,000 appropriation is in all respect the best program possible. The simple issue which has been made abundantly clear by the debate is that of common honesty.

As has been pointed out by numerous speakers the $300,000,000 under consideration is in keeping with the commitment made by the last Congress and upon which Government officials and cooperative farmers throughout the Nation have acted in good faith. It is to cover the program for the current crop year. Contracts have already been made. In many instances farmers have already made expenditures and in many cases funds have been allocated and spent and unless this amendment is adopted will have to be refunded by the farmer to whom they have been made.

I have received numerous letters from farmers and others in my district calling attention to the seriousness of this matter. I quote from one such letter:

> If this bill should go through as reported out of the committee, we wonder where the money is coming from to pay for the practices that have already been carried out, since the farmers did not have the money to secure the materials and they most surely will not have it now, to repay the CCC for the funds they have put out in assisting them to carry on conservation work.

This is a most serious matter. As I view it the Congress rests under the solemn obligation of keeping faith with our people. This we can do only by providing the $300,000,000 in funds the last Congress promised would be forthcoming. I trust this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

SOIL CONSERVATION

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak briefly on the Soil Conservation Service appropriation. My State, South Carolina, is entirely covered with soil-conservation districts organized under our State law. All the districts are now receiving assistance from the Soil Conservation Service, but not as much as they need to get the job done in time. Much of the land in South Carolina has been farmed for over 100 years. Indeed, some of our South Carolina soil has been in production since the days of the American Revolution. During most of that period we lost a lot of topsoil through erosion despite the use of certain conservation practices, such as terracing and crop rotation, as well as our farmers knew how to apply these practices to their land. Although these early attempts at conservation did not succeed, at least they paved the way for a coordinated attack on the erosion problem such as I saw under way in the Broad River Conservation District and other such districts last fall. Local farmers are taking the lead in organizing groups to speed up the work but the farmers in my district tell me they need the continuing help of Soil Conservation Service technicians in planning and applying conservation practices on their land.

I was somewhat disturbed when I noted the small increase for technical assistance allowed the Soil Conservation Service in the President's budget. I was disturbed because I knew that new districts were being formed in neighboring States and, in fact, in nearly every State in the Nation, and that the increase allowed would not provide adequate help next year for the new district being organized this year. I feared, and I still fear, that the old districts will be asked to divide their technicians with the new districts. This will mean less help rather than more help for districts in South Carolina next year. We have made good progress and the rate of application of conservation has been speeding up year by year since 1941.

We cannot afford to slow down the conservation work in South Carolina now, so I want to recommend that this committee provide for the new conservation districts organized this fiscal year at the same rate at which all districts were assisted in this fiscal year. As I recall, this is something over $22,000 per district.

The need for conservation assistance of the kind provided by the Soil Conservation Service has not decreased; more farmers in more districts want it and need it. I ask that you increase the appropriation so that the old districts can go ahead at least at the 1947 level in 1948 and so that new districts will be provided for at the same rate as the old districts. This will require an increase of about $5,000,000 for the 1948 fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, we have under consideration a program that the farmers of the United States are relying upon for the crop year 1947. Whatever be the views about a continuance of that program after 1947, the Congress has said to the farmers that this appropriation would aggregate $300,000,000 for the crop of 1947.

I think we might keep in mind that there is a difference between fertilizer and lime or slag. I ask any Member of this body who knows, of his own knowledge, of any payment that is being made this year or that was made last year for fertilizer under the terms of this appropriation. There is a difference between fertilizer and lime or slag. Slag and limestone are not fertilizer but they are soil building like Austrian peas and other legumes. I know of no limestone or slag trusts in Mississippi. There is no subsidy in the appropriation. Every dollar the farmer receives under this program has to be earned. It has to be a practice that builds up the soil or that drains the land. I know of no payments whatsoever for fertilizer in my State or in any other State. I have inquired from the committee if it has been the practice to approve reimbursements for fertilizer and I am told that no such testimony has ever been presented to the committee.

I just want to say whatever be the merits or demerits of this program, the committee is forestalled and prevented from asserting the demerits of the program because if it be just and fair to appropriate $165,000,000, it is certainly just as fair and just to authorize an appropriation for $300,000,000. We must not discriminate. If one farmer has received his benefits because he has earned them now, should another farmer who earns them next month or the month following be denied those benefits? I say, under the circumstances and under the terms of the Agricultural Appropriation Act passed by the House in March 1946 for the fiscal year 1947, for the 1947 crop year, the Congress of the United States cannot afford to break faith with the growers of agricultural products in this country who have earned the benefits, none of which are reimbursements for fertiiizer.

While the payments are justified on their merits, I do insist that Congress should keep faith with the American farmers. The $300,000,000 was committed for the crop year 1947. The adoption of the amendment is imperative if Congress is to keep faith with the American farmers.

I extend to say that I remind the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN] that while the President recommended for the fiscal year 1948 a reduction in the soil conservation benefit payments, the President was careful to state that Congress had made a commitment for the crop year 1947. There is evidently a confusion by my good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and my good friend the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] respecting fertilizer and limestone. I know there is a Fertilizer Trust and there may be, in some sections, a Limestone Trust, but fertilizer, as I use the term, applies to nitrates and phosphates. This is entirely different from lime and slag. Fertilizer is used to increase the growth of the current crop. Lime and slag are used for soil building by supplying elements lacking in the soil. I know of no payment under the act as now being administered for fertilizer. There are payments in connection with lime and slag. The payments must all be earned. They are for the benefit of the lands and the building up of the soil. They consist of improving pastures, conserving waters, better drainage, cover crops of vetch and peas. There must be no quibbling.

As shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 8, 1946, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Tarver, was careful to state, when the amendment that he proposed for $300,000,000 was approved, that it was a definite commitment for the 1947 crop. Personally, I believe that commitments directly and indirectly have been made that will require the entire amount, and I cannot escape the view that the $165,614,290 contained in the bill will not be sufficient to pay those farmers who have already earned their payments. I repeat that I shall not quibble. It isn't a question of the condition of the contract, nor whether the contracts have been signed. It is a question of the commitment of the Congress and of the practices of the farmers relying upon that commitment. If we fail to provide the $300,000,000 there can be no escape that we are not keeping faith with the farmers. It may be that contracts for about one-half, or for approximately $165,000,000 have been earned, but in practice, other payments have been earned in all probability that have not been reported. Further, in actual practice payments are earned before the contracts are really signed. It begs the question to say that the contracts contain a clause that the payments are conditioned upon appropriations being made. The farmers know that the program in 1947 is in force, and they rely upon Congress to provide funds for carrying out that program in accordance with the commitment made by Congress when the agricultural appropriations bill was under consideration in March 1946, as I have said.

I believe in economy and the elimination of waste and extravagance, but there is a false economy.

I extend further to say that I oppose the elimination of section 32 funds. Under the act of August 24, 1935, as amended, section 32 provides for permanent appropriations. The farmers thus receive the equivalent of the tariff accorded to manufacturers. The retention of section 32 funds is essential. There are other acts that provide for import quotas and export subsidies, but these acts are interdependent with section 32 of the act of August 24, 1935. There must be a program before the acts for export subsidies and import quotas on cotton or wheat or other agricultural products can be invoked or justified. There can be no program under existing law without section 32 funds.

In this connection, I have always advocated ample appropriations for the Commodity Credit Corporation and for the Rural Electrification Administration. I supported and will continue to support adequate appropriations to enable worthy tenants and worthy citizens to become home owners and land owners under the Jones-Bankhead Act, and under the Farmers' Home Administration. I will continue to support adequate appropriations for agriculture.

I gladly urged and supported an increase in the appropriations under the Research and Marketing Act of 1946. Research is fundamental in industry. We should profit by the advances of industry as a result of research and investigation. The Research Act was passed to promote research in connection with the utilization of cotton, cottonseed, and the utilization of other agricultural products. The research of man often contributes more to human progress than the resources of nature.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I feel it is time for every man in this Congress to go on record against the proposed inexcusable scuttling of one of our most vital Government agencies—the United States Department of Agriculture. I am not so gullible as to believe that every man will. There are still too many one-tracked so-called economy-minded gentlemen in the House who can see no further than what can be kept in the Nation's pocketbook today—and let tomorrow go hang. In fact, some of them remind me of the housewife who, to save a few pennies on tonight's supper, is willing to buy inferior foodstuffs for her family. Because, gentlemen, that is what this cut in appropriations for agriculture will mean in the long run.

This is a question I feel particularly qualified to speak on. I am proud to say I was born and bred on a farm in Louisiana, our Nation's sugar bowl. I grew up there. I know the farmer's problems. I know his difficulties. I know his back-breaking toil, his heartsick disappointment in bad-crop years. And I know the invaluable help the Department of Agriculture has given him. And this is the help this bill would take away.

I condemn the cut in toto, but there are some phases of it that are even worse than others, if that is possible. For instance, the cut for soil-conservation research, which is something we should all be interested in—city dwellers as well as farmers. For without soil conservation our present bountiful crops cannot hope to be continued indefinitely. The soil will wear out. It will be eroded. It will be washed away. And without research we cannot have the knowledge of how to prevent this.

And in this connection I want to remind you again that in 1946 an amendment was offered on this very floor of the House to fix the AAA payments or soil-conservation payments at a given sum, $300,000,000 to be exact, and at that time the House was given an opportunity to accept or reject the measure. It accepted, and thereby fixed a precedent. Not only that, it made a solemn commitment to our farmers. The program was signed. The farmers joined in in good faith. This bill would be a direct blow to that faith. It would justify our farmers in feeling their Government had failed them.

I condemn the elimination of section 32 funds for surplus disposal. Farmers in every section are alarmed over this taking away of funds that were promised them, money that was dedicated to this purpose. The elimination is, in short, a denial of a solemn obligation, much the same as though a private individual defaulted on a note accepted in good faith by a friend.

Another point I would like to bring out is that the Department of Agriculture has, I believe, an enviable record of aggressive support for really constructive economy by their previous elimination of unnecessary personnel, excessive expenditures, and duplication of services. One would think then that this Republican-dominated economical Congress would appreciate this. But no. Full use was made of these voluntary savings of the Department by a failure on the part of Congress to require such drastic reductions in many badly overstaffed agencies of the Government which had failed to do any house cleaning on their own initiative.

And do not forget, gentlemen—all the farmers are not Democrats. Republican farmers will fall in this debacle too. The one-gallus farmer who works from "kin see to k'aint see"—or from dawn to dusk, the moneyed owners of the rolling wheat fields of our great Midwest, the gentlemen farmers of our historic South, the farmers on the rocky New England hillside—all will suffer. And I say to you, all are entitled to know to whom this suffering, if it comes, can be attributed. To the Grand Old Party—our Members across the aisle, who now willingly take credit for the bill, but who later may find themselves yelling for somebody to come and "help me turn this b'ar aloose."

But what I am asking the Members of this body is that we think of our country as a whole. Think of our farmers as the backbone of that country, as they are. Think of their unparalleled record during the war, when with insufficient labor, broken-down machinery, and every other man-made difficulty, their record was second to none in our winning our victory, helped only by God's bounty in providing good growing seasons, by the sweat of their own brows, and by the Department of Agriculture.

Or think of the matter selfishly, then, if you will. If our farmers are made to produce without guidance or help of any sort, inevitably the entire country will suffer. For the farmer is the life line for us all. Through no other source can we get foodstuffs for our families at prices we can manage to pay. Through no other source can we get the raw materials to run our great industries. Through no other source can we keep our commitments to the starving persons of Europe.

And speaking of food, there is one more subject I would like to touch on briefly. That is the school-lunch program, the appropriation for which has been cut from $75,000,000 to $45,000,000, while in the self-same bill many times this amount is carried for stricken people overseas. This cut would seem to me even more fundamentally short-sighted than that in the agriculture appropriation. By this cut we are short-changing our citizens of tomorrow. It does not become us, gentlemen, who sit here comfortably fed, to deny bread to those children back home who are hungry. For I tell you this is not a matter of refreshments served at school by a prodigal government. It is often a matter of the difference between health and malnutrition for children of low-income families, many of whom come to school with little or no breakfast and for whom this school lunch is the only correctly balanced nutritious meal they have at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The remainder of the time has been reserved for the committee.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the Members on the left will not feel that I am too much disturbed about their political futures when I make this statement, but I do think that some of the things I may say may be worthy of their consideration when they cast their vote on this proposition. My time will not permit me to describe the calls which were made on the farmers of America to produce and to plant every available acre and of the Nation's interest in the fertility of its soil, our greatest natural resource. Nor do I have time to describe the great value of this soil conservation program to the Nation as a whole. But whether this is a good program or a bad, the Congress has committed itself for this amendment.

First, I should like to say that this argument—and the distinguished chairman will present this later—that a small percentage of the people get the larger end of these payments is beside the point. The whole purpose of this type of payment is for soil conservation, work on the land, and it is based on the amount and the cost of the work on the land. The more land on which those improvements are made the greater the amount the Federal Government will pay, still being only one-third of the amount actually expended. Where the amount of land improved is small the amount of payment by the Federal Government is small. Before a man earns $1 on the average he must spend out of his own pocket $2. The Federal Government under this program said that the Federal Government is interested in the fertility of our soil and in this great natural resource and if you folks who happen for a temporary period to own this land will spend $2 out of your own pocket to continue the fertility of that soil or to improve it, the Federal Government, because of its interest, will put up $1. That is the way the program has worked.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Reference has been made to the alleged fact that none of this money goes for fertilizer and limestone. My understanding is that this money in considerable measure does go to provide limestone and fertilizer.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. Let me answer the gentleman from Indiana. I will say that on the average the expense to the farmer is twice what the Federal Government pays as a contribution toward this good practice. As far as fertilizer is concerned I have never known of a case where fertilizer was supplied, but limestone, yes. Limestone has elements that go to feed the soil and condition it.

The amount of payment is determined by how much a person spends out of his pocket to carry out this program. Here is another thing I would like to point out and that is that last year when this bill was considered Mr. Tarver fixed by his motion that the program for this year be fixed at $300,000,000. He stated in the House:

> I have submitted this amendment to members of the Appropriations Subcommittee and they are not opposed to it; and therefore I offer it as a committee amendment.

This amendment was adopted and was an outright commitment as to what provisions would be made by the Congress this year.

The claim and the contention of the Republican gentlemen on the left that notwithstanding that amendment last year that the provision of this contract between the Federal Government and the farmer who does his work does provide that it—his payment for his practices—is contingent upon the appropriation is correct. I agree that that is the general situation, the contracts did provide such language as that in most instances; but what I should like to call your attention to particularly is that while it does contain the proviso that it is dependent on your appropriations, the action of this Congress last year said there would be $300,000,000 appropriated. While therefore the contracts were dependent upon the appropriation, the action last year told the farmers what the appropriation would be and I say that what that language in those contracts really means is that if the farmers spend out of their own pockets a sufficient sum of money to obligate the Federal Government on its part to pay $600,000,000 that the payment by the Federal Government would be limited to $300,000,000 and the notice in the announcement or contract means that in that case the farmer could only expect his pro rata part of the $300,000,000 as a refund for his expenditures for lime or other aids. I do not care about the rich farmers in the State of California, represented by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON], who may well be able to stand this loss and contribute this money to the cause of the Republican Party because it seems so important to them. Last year when this Congress and the members of this committee said $300,000,000 shall be available for 1947, and the farmers acted, spent their money and earned it, it is up to us to see that the Government lives up to its contract, regardless of the rich farmers in the district represented by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

We gave our word. This Congress, it is said, is not bound by what the Congress last year did. Certainly the individual Congressmen are bound and I think morally the Congress is bound.

Mr. Chairman, I would make the payment to the richest man in California before I would break the word of the Federal Government.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN], a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, that does not interfere with the time remaining on this side, does it?

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands it, 5 minutes of the time is reserved for the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CANNON. The committee yields the last 5 minutes on this side to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The committee will be first heard from this side of the aisle. It is my understanding that we were to close debate and have 10 minutes available for that purpose. I do want the gentleman from Texas to have time and I thought that was understood in our arrangements. The Chairman has to refresh me as to what time is available.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the agreement that was reached, the last 15 minutes was to be reserved to the committee, of which the majority side would take 5 minutes, 5 minutes to be reserved for the gentleman from Texas, and 5 minutes for the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I think I have given more time to the study of the conservation of soil in my section of the country than to any one thing. I happen to live in one of the richest sections of the United States—the black land and rolling sandy loam belt of Texas. It grew up for many years in grass. There were trees only along the branches. For centuries that grass had fed that soil and it was rich in vegetable matter.

Along the creeks and the bottoms they cut the trees away. This is fertile bottom land. The slopes were prairie and, as I have just stated, they were very fertile lands. Little was done to conserve them. That rich ground has no subsoil. It goes down to solid rock, the same color of soil. It is the worst land to erode in the world.

We did not terrace our slopes. The dirt washed down and filled the channels of the creeks. Now, when it rains it spreads all over the bottoms and many of the bottoms or most of them are in willows, elms, and grass. The slopes are eroded to the extent now that east Texas, having been abandoned for crops in many instances, has more cattle in it than west Texas.

When I drive along the road or look out of the train window and see the fertile soil of the country washed down to rock bottom and gutted with ditches, it hurts me almost like the stick of a knife. And, I say to you deliberately that I think our greatest domestic problem—I do not care what anybody else says—is what we are going to do for the preservation of what fertility is left in our soil and what we are going to do to reestablish the fertility that has already left this land. If we are the same kind of vandals for the next 25 years, even, that we have been in the past 50 years in the destruction of the fertility of our soil, we will not have any amount of surpluses to sell abroad, but we will be using every acre of this worn and torn land to raise the things that we have got to consume inside the United States of America.

Now, this program has started. It is a great program. The farmers have depended upon it. Let me say to my good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] without dragging in the Fertilizer Trust or the Limestone Trust, it does not take any limestone or fertilizer to build a terrace on land to slow up the water and keep the soil from washing into the creeks and rivers and then into the sea. It does not take any limestone or fertilizer to dig a pond for the conservation of water, and also as a matter of flood control to keep the soil from washing down the creek off the slopes. Furthermore, I feel exactly about this question as does the gentleman from South Dakota, and that is whether or not my Government is going to keep what I think was a solemn contract it made with the farmers last year.

In the appropriation bill last year, in my opinion, we made a solemn pledge to the American farmer that we would appropriate this year, $300,000,000 for soil conservation. By passing this bill in its present form, we are not keeping our pledge to the American farmer. This bill in its present form simply wrecks the soil conservation program from one end of the country to the other, and today all of Texas and in the counties of the district that I represent, terracing equipment is idle because agricultural committees cannot give farmers the assurance to go ahead with their work. All dirt moving machinery to build terraces and earthen tanks are standing still. Rock phosphate is on the tracks ready to move, but farmers had to stop buying it. Farmers, merchants, business and professional men and agricultural men in agricultural sections are remarking, with strong disapproval, of the steps being taken in this Congress. In other words, let me repeat, if many millions of dollars more are not put in this bill than the amount proposed by the committee, soil conservation is dead.

We called upon these farmers, their wives and small children when their more grown-up sons were fighting the war for us to produce more and more to feed our armies abroad, our workers at home, and our allies on the field of battle with us. They responded; they produced more in 1943 than they had ever produced before. They produced more in 1944 than they had ever produced before. They produced more in 1945 than they had ever produced before. They have done their part—we should do ours by at least keeping our pledges to them which our Republican brethern, by the provisions of this bill, are not doing.

Another provision in this bill cuts the budget estimate for Rural Electrification $25,000,000. I am tremendously interested in rural electrification because in 1936 I was the author of the bill that started the rural electrification program and it has brought the comforts and conveniences of rural electrification to millions and millions of farm homes. There was little rural electrification in many sections of the country when the rural electrification law began to operate. Only one out of every 50 farm homes in the State of Texas had rural electrification in 1935. Today more than half of the farm homes in the State of Texas have rural electrification. What I want to do is to appropriate enough money here to lend to cooperatives so that every farm home in this country may have these comforts and conveniences.

There were only 11,466 farms in Texas electrified in 1934, or 2.3 percent; in 1946, 212,508 farms in Texas were electrified, or 55.2 percent. Take the counties in the district that I represent: Collin County, in 1930 there were 335 farms that had rural electrification; in 1945 there were 2,782 farms that had rural electrification. Fannin County, in 1930 there were 198 farms that had rural electrification; in 1945 there were 2,268 farms that had rural electrification. Grayson County, in 1930 there were 246 farms that had rural electrification; in 1945 there were 2,232 farms that had rural electrification. Hunt County, in 1930 there were 338 farms that had rural electrification; in 1945 there were 2,768 farms that had rural electrification; Kaufman County, in 1930 there were 185 farms that had rural electrification; in 1945 there were 1,228 farms that had rural electrification. Rains County, in 1930 there were 6 farms that had rural electrification; in 1945 there were 380 farms that had rural electrification. And Rockwall County, in 1930 there were 62 farms that had rural electrification; in 1945 there were 426 farms that had rural electrification.

When I had up the rural electrification bill for passage in 1936 and we were authorizing $410,000,000 to be appropriated over a period of 10 years, people came to me and said you are throwing away this money—you will lend it to farm cooperatives—the farmers will take lights and when their bills are presented at the end of the month they will take them out. I do not know of a single farm home that has had the opportunity to take rural electrification that has not paid its bills or had the lights taken out. When these people had an opportunity to set aside their coal-oil lamp, with its inconvenience and work, and could have light they took it and kept it. This program does not cost the Government of the United States one penny. All of this money is loaned to rural electrification cooperatives for a period of 20 years and today I do not know of a single electrical cooperative that is not ahead with the payment of its interest and its yearly installments. What I want to see and what I contend is that every farm home not only in the district that I represent and in my State, but in the Nation, be given the opportunity to have the conveniences and comforts of rural electrification, and I shall fight for this in the future as I have in the past. Some people say that the amount appropriated here is sufficient, but there has not been a year since the rural electrification program was inaugurated when farmers did not apply for more electrification than all the money that was carried in the bill. If this budget had not been cut $25,000,000 and $50,000,000 more had been added to it, the farmers of America would have asked for every dollar of it to electrify their homes. There are 2,500,000 farm homes in America that do not have electricity.

We are asking many people to remain on the farms to produce what we eat and wear, and ex-servicemen are being encouraged to go to the farm. Thousands of veterans have been looking forward to buying a farm. Thousands upon thousands of them are enrolled in vocational-agricultural schools where they are learning better to operate a farm. We have set up these vocational-agricultural schools in practically all the counties to teach them better modes of farming. They are not going to the farm and stay there unless they have two things—one is rual electrification and the other is an all-weather road.

The Congress in 1944 passed a law to authorize $1,500,000,000 for a 3-year program of expenditures of $500,000,000 per annum for roads. I, and others who worked with me, saw to it that $150,000,000 each year was allotted to the States to be allotted and spent by the highway commissions of the States and the county commissioners court for building farm-to-market roads. This makes many millions for the State of Texas. If the legislatures of the various States will raise money to match these funds and add to them, we can build thousands upon thousands of miles of roads in our farm communities.

We also passed within the last 10 years a Farm Tenant Purchase Act under which we appropriated from thirty to fifty million dollars a year for these years to lend to farmers who wanted to buy homes. The bill we now have under consideration carries not $1 for this program. So, if the bill passes the House and the Senate in its present form, the farm-tenant-purchase program is also dead. You proclaim your friendship for the farm-ownership program of the Farmers Home Administration—but you recommend no funds.

The budget this year carried an estimate of $75,000,000 to carry out the school-lunch program which is popular because it brings nourishing food to school children. This bill in its present form cuts that estimate $30,000,000 which, of course, means that the proper kind of program for the school lunches cannot be carried out.

Let me again say to you, that when these farmers and their families have been called upon at any time in our country's history to produce more and give their sons and daughters to the service of their country, they have never failed to respond. We should today, as their Representatives, respond to their wants and their great needs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, much has been said in the course of the discussion about whether or not we are confronted with a solemn obligation. I hope I am not insensible to my solemn obligations either in my private or in my public capacity. Let us determine, therefore, whether or not this program is contingent on action by the Congress. There is no better authority, notwithstanding all the words that have been uttered in the well today, than the man who sits at the top and directs this matter, namely, Mr. Dodd, the Under Secretary of Agriculture.

I asked Mr. Dodd in the course of the hearings whether or not it was made clear to the farmers that in every case the payment that was made for any kind of practice was contingent upon action by the Congress in providing appropriations, and here is his answer, and you will find it on page 1249 of the hearings.

This is the Under Secretary of Agriculture talking:

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is, therefore, made abundantly clear to every participant and cooperator that, before he signs up, there is one contingency involved, and that is that the program is necessarily contingent upon legislation and appropriations?

Mr. DODD. That is correct. That is made clear.

They printed it on the form. You talk about fine print. The print on this form is no finer than all the other print on it. There on the front page, not at the bottom, and not off in one corner, but across the middle of the front page of this farm plan are these words:

Payments under 1947 agricultural conservation program are subject to appropriations hereafter made for this purpose by the Congress.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIZLEY. I think that is generally true but I want to point out to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois that on the forms used in the State of Oklahoma there is no such language. Why there should be any difference I do not know.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The form I read from is for the entire western region.

Now let us pursue this matter of forms a little more. I sent to the Department of Agriculture through the instrumentality of our very capable executive secretary, Mr. Orr, for the forms for the crop year 1947. The money that is carried in this bill, ostensibly for fiscal 1948, applies to the crop year 1947. Here is a memorandum from the budget office of the Department of Agriculture:

Forms in connection with the 1947 program are not available, as they have not been approved by the Comptroller General.

There have been no signatures on the new forms as yet.

When you speak of the reassurances and the assertions that were made last year, obviously one Congress cannot bind another, and this Congress is free to take any action it sees fit. So what happens to this argument that something appeared in the hearings last year that is a binder upon the first session of the Eightieth Congress? That matter has suitably been determined here time after time that we are under no obligation in that respect.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am speaking about this proposition of whether or not this Congress must necessarily be bound by the last Congress.

Mr. PACE. But it is not in the hearings, it is in the act itself; it is in the law.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I understand, but that does not modify the fact that, in accordance with every understanding, and the understanding that is testified to here in the 1948 hearings, it is contingent upon the appropriations this Congress makes in order to make this program effective, and there is the language. How is it made available to the farmers? Here is the Department's own story. They printed 971,500 copies of the State handbook, and in addition thereto they struck off millions of copies of circulars to get into the hands of every farmer. Here is the language, not of the chairman of the committee, but of the Department of Agriculture:

The information is made available, and it is the obligation of our people at every level to make that information plain for all cooperating farmers.

That is what the Department says, that they tell their people in the field that they must make it plain. So there is no obligation upon the Congress, by their own testimony, and it is entirely contingent.

I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preferential motion offered by Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN:

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I have not had the opportunity to present a few minutes' argument in behalf of an amendment of mine, which is at the desk, and which argument I was not able to present due to the limitation of time. Consequently, I am using this parliamentary maneuver to gain the floor and urge consideration for this amendment which will be offered shortly.

The $15,000,000 allocated in this bill for the county and township AAA committees will, frankly speaking, not do the job this year. As I said yesterday, these men will have just about as much to do allocating one hundred and fifty millions as double that amount. To me, the county and township set-up means the heart of our price-support structure. This is the machinery we must have so as to be ready to seal grains for the commodity-credit loans. These loans are the floor under our price structure, and without a decent price no farmer can live as they are entitled to live. I regret this necessity of our not continuing the triple-A payments, but, as I have stated before, Mr. Chairman, agriculture can do without these payments so as to help our Nation meet the tremendous national debt of $259,000,000,000. We, as farmers, are willing to contribute the triple-A payments to the United States in return for a floor under our farm prices. That floor is provided for through commodity-credit loans. I repeat, we need our county and township committeemen to service these loans. Where would we as farmers be without the Steagall amendment? The money in this bill will not do the job, and I hope that you people will see fit to further allocate to them an additional $5,000,000 for that purpose, so that we can preserve the all-important county and township committees, and pay them for their work, so that they will be available in the future for whatever operation which might be necessary to assure adequate minimum support prices.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the preferential motion.

Mr. Chairman, let me make clear what is involved here. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota deals with the administrative expenses for the conservation and use program. As the matter now stands, when the committee determined to cut back the amount of money that would be distributed to the farmers and left available $150,000,000 it became necessary, of course, to cut back the administrative expenses at the same time. If you did not do so, you would be in the unhappy position of spending nearly $7 in administrative expenses for every $43 of benefits distributed to the farmer. You arrive at that figure simply by taking $150,000,000 and dividing it by 3,500,000 cooperators. Then, if you took the amount originally had for administrative expenses, it would leave a very substantial amount to distribute a very small amount of money. The committee cut that back to $15,000,000 and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota increases it to $20,000,000.

The long and short of the whole matter is that we are trying to finish the work in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, but the gentleman's amendment would add $5,000,000 for administrative expenses. So he proposes to pay more money for less work. That amendment ought to be defeated because the Congress would be in an indefensible position in seeking to approve such a high administration cost for a modest amount of distribution.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Is the amendment now pending before the House?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is the amendment he will offer and for which he sought time by making the preferential motion to strike out the enacting clause because the time for debate has been limited.

Mr. PACE. But it is not before the House?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is not before the House. The vote will come on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] to increase the amount in this bill by the difference between $165,000,000 and $301,000,000. He proposes to raise this bill by a substantial $135,000,000. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. Chairman, if time is yet remaining, I might add this one thought. You know there has always persisted in my mind a statement written by Charles W. Kingsley, the great author. He said there are two kinds of freedom—there is the false freedom where a man is free to do what he likes, and there is true freedom where a man is free to do what he ought.

The whole story here is that there is some soil conservation that the farmers ought to do themselves instead of asking recompense out of the Federal Treasury.

We are trying to preserve a little of the initiative and that spirit of freedom that has been manifest in this country and made it so great and give the people a small measure of the load to carry instead of putting all of it upon the shoulders of the Federal Government.

I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN].

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 124, noes 126.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. CANNON to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 151, noes 156.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN: On page 49, line 5, after the word "exceed", strike out "$15,000,000" and insert "$20,000,000".

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Is any debate permitted on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair answers in the negative. All debate on this section has closed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The matter is not subject to debate. Debate has been closed on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has been closed on the paragraph. The Clerk will report the substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. CANNON: Page 49, line 5, strike out "$15,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$23,584,956."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 118, noes 137.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN) there were—ayes 81, noes 124.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUGAR ACT

To enable the Secretary to carry into effect the provisions, other than those specifically relating to the Philippine Islands, of the Sugar Act of 1937, as amended (7 U. S. C. 1100–1183), including personal services in the District of Columbia, $55,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1949: Provided, That expenditures (including transfers) from this appropriation for other than payments to sugar producers shall not exceed $1,326,115.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Chairman, I have requested this time in order to bring to the attention of the House the latest development in the investigation of the frauds and irregularities which occurred in last August's primary election in the now famous Fifth Congressional District of Missouri, when a Member of this House, Roger C. Slaughter, my predecessor, was "purged" following endorsement of his opponent by the President.

It has just now been reported to me that last night—following yesterday's report of the county grand jury—the office of the Kansas City Board of Election Commissioners was broken into, the steel safe door on the records room was blasted off with explosives, and all of the ballot boxes containing the ballots cast in the primary election were removed and taken away. News of this latest outrage by the criminal political gang which has ruled Jackson County for many years was received this morning during a session of an investigatory committee of the other body, while the Attorney General of the United States was testifying before the committee.

Believe it or not, the Attorney General assured the committee that he intended to order an investigation of the circumstances. What he wants to do is apply a hasp and lock to the well-known empty barn.

He had his opportunity to investigate that primary election. It was a matter of common knowledge that there had been widespread fraud, miscounts, ballot stealing, and vote buying—all of the same things which had resulted in mass convictions in the Federal courts following the 1936 election. After last year's primary in Missouri, the Attorney General issued a directive to the FBI—allegedly to make a thoroughgoing investigation. We now know that he directed them merely to interview the members of the board of election commissioners and two reporters for the Kansas City Star, John P. Swift and Ira McCarthy, who themselves had investigated and exposed specific, flagrant instances of fraud and corruption. This close limitation on the scope of the activities of the FBI shows plainly that the intention was to whitewash, not to investigate.

Mr. Chairman, the man who called for the purge of Roger Slaughter in that primary election is the same man who, in 1940, while a Member of the other body, bitterly opposed the reappointment as district attorney in Kansas City of Maurice L. Milligan, whose courageous devotion to the duties of his office had resulted in the indictment and conviction of a small army of election crooks.

I incude in my remarks at this point a copy of yesterday's report of the grand jury of Jackson County, Mo., together with certain telegrams which have been received in the last 15 minutes. I urge the Members of the House to read the grand jury's report in its entirety, and especially two paragraphs.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF JACKSON COUNTY, MO.,
AT INDEPENDENCE,
CRIMINAL DIVISION A, MARCH TERM, 1947,
May 27, 1947.

HON. JOHN R. JAMES: We, the grand jurors, sworn and charged to inquire within and for Jackson County, having in mind the charge given us by your honor, and having completed 8 weeks of investigation directed almost entirely to a consideration of evidence of irregularities and fraud in the August 6, 1946, primary election, in the several townships and voting precincts of said county and in the city of Kansas City, and the city of Independence, Mo., respectfully submit our report.

In our investigation we have duly examined and counted the ballots cast in a relatively small number of the precincts and have subpenaed and examined many witnesses.

In our investigation it was revealed that in some precincts ballots were deliberately miscounted and false returns made of the election results to the election commissioners. We also discovered wrongful, illegal, and wholesale marking of ballots, vote buying and bribery, and illegal participation of party workers who were not polling officials in the counting of votes, gross negligence, carelessness, and indifference on the part of judges and clerks in the performance of their duties.

MISCOUNT OF VOTES

The grand jury subpenaed the ballots, tally sheets, poll books, and other records from the election commissioners and recounted the ballots in certain precincts. Miscounts of shocking proportions were revealed. A significant fact is that where a sizable miscount of votes was found the count invariably was in favor of one factional slate of Democratic candidates. In not one instance in which a consequential miscount was found was the miscount in favor of a candidate other than the candidates upon that particular factional slate.

The grand jury recommends further investigation, including a complete recount of all ballots in the race for the Democratic nomination for Representative in Congress for the Fifth District of Missouri, by the proper authorities. It is our belief that Roger C. Slaughter, in this race was deprived of the nomination by a fraudulent miscount of votes and by other types of fraud.

In the race for the Democratic nomination for presiding judge of the county court of Jackson County, Mo., the grand jury found a miscount in favor of John H. Thompson, and a miscount against Perrin D. McElroy, which was more than enough to deprive Perrin D. McElroy of the nomination.

In the race for the Democratic nomination for prosecuting attorney of Jackson County, Mo., the grand jury found a miscount in favor of James H. Anderson and a miscount against Michael W. O'Hern, which was more than enough to deprive Michael W. O'Hern of the nomination.

Our investigation revealed a deliberate, calculated, and premeditated plan to miscount and otherwise steal votes from these candidates.

MARKING BALLOTS FOR VOTERS

The election laws and the rules of the election commissioners are explicit and specific, that ballots may not be marked for voters except under certain circumstances and then only after an oath of assistance has been made by the voters. It is apparent that there was serious disregard of these laws and regulations by certain voters, workers, and polling officials, which resulted in widespread fraud.

VOTE BUYING

Our investigation left no doubt in the mind of the jury that an organized plan was set up by certain party workers to pay money to voters, and that some voters looked forward to and expected to receive money for their votes or for voting the names of others, either before or after they did so.

IMPERSONATION AND GHOST VOTING

Our investigation revealed that in certain precincts the names of some registered voters were voted by impersonators, and in some instances payments were made to the impersonators. This type of fraud can only be perpetrated by collusion and conspiracy.

ILLEGAL PARTICIPATION IN COUNT

Our investigation and indictments further reveal that improper and unauthorized persons were wrongfully permitted by the precinct officials to handle ballots and count votes, and otherwise participate in the preparation of the official returns as certified to the election commissioners. In certain precincts watchers and challengers, usually precinct captains, unlawfully and wrongfully took charge of the ballots after the polls closed and after the ballot boxes were opened through collusion with, or intimidation of, polling officials. In all precincts where this was permitted there was a wide discrepancy between the official returns as certified by the polling officials and the true count as determined by the grand jury.

NEGLECT OF DUTY BY POLLING OFFICIALS

It is the responsibility of all judges and clerks of election, individually and collectively to count, canvass, and tally all of the ballots. Our investigation has revealed that this procedure was not followed, and in some precints the ballots were unlawfully counted by only one or two judges of election, and that in some precincts the Democratic judges and the clerk alone counted all Democratic ballots while the Republican judges and clerk alone counted all Republican ballots. This practice lends itself to widespread fraud, and when followed plays into the hands of unscrupulous officials, and others, and can and does usually result in a serious miscount and fraud in the count of the votes cast. It is further revealed that the laws and regulations requiring all judges and clerks of election to count, canvass, and tally all ballots were consistently disregarded.

The jury in its investigation found that certain judges and clerks of election who served in that capacity on August 6, 1946, could scarcely read or write. The jury further found that in certain cases the judges and clerks of election had criminal records.

LACK OF MATERIAL RECORDS

We were handicapped in our invesigation by the fact that no record was furnished us of the names of the persons who served as watchers and challengers in the various precincts on August 6, 1946, and we were further handicapped due to the fact that we were not furnished by the Board of Election Commissioners in Kansas City, Mo., with a book of complaints of election law violations as we understand they are required by law to keep. It is provided in section 12183 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri, 1939, that "It shall be the duty of such election commissioners to aid in the prosecution of all crimes and offenses against this article, and they shall keep a book in which shall be entered all complaints against persons alleged to be guilty of the violation of this law, and when in the judgment of such election commissioners such offense has probably been committed, it shall be their duty to cause a prosecution to be instituted in accordance with the provisions of this article, and cause the parties to be punished accordingly."

It is recommended by the grand jury that in the future the Board of Election Commissioners at Kansas City require, keep and have available such records for examination.

FEDERAL AUTHORITIES

In our investigation of vote frauds we have confined our efforts, of necessity, largely to a recount of the ballots. The grand jury strongly stresses the fact that in an investigation of vote frauds and irregularities the great majority of the fraud can only be substantiated and proved by a thorough, scientific examination of the ballots and records by competent scientific methods by trained men. There were definite indications of conspiracy and irregularities requiring such expert services bearing on the identity of handwriting, pencil marks, finger prints, etc. It is a matter of general knowledge that the Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice, has such expert examiners and facilities to carry on such an investigation. We strongly urge that the United States Department of Justice and the FBI enter this investigation.

FUTURE GRAND JURIES

Due to lack of time this jury has been unable to complete its investigation of vote frauds in the August 6, 1946, primary election as instructed by the Honorable John R. James. The jury recommends that other grand juries, both State and Federal, further inquire into this matter.

INSTRUCTION TO FOREMAN

The grand jury unanimously recommends and hereby instructs the foreman of this jury to forward copies of this report to the Attorney General of the United States and to the Governor of the State of Missouri in order that they may be fully advised of conditions as we have found them in the August 6, 1946, primary election.

COUNTY INSTITUTIONS

The jury inspected all county institutions and while in every instance the conditions were not all we desire, we did find a disposition on the part of the superintendents to make needed improvements insofar as their budgets would permit.

We found in our investigations several instances in which trained personnel had been put in charge. The grand jury commends this practice and urges that more employees of this type be obtained when, and where possible.

We wish to thank the Honorable John R. James, judge, the prosecuting attorney, James G. Kimbrell, and his staff, and Mr. J. A. Purdome, sheriff, and his force and in particular George J. Punshon, deputy sheriff, for their assistance, guidance and helpful cooperation.

Respectfully submitted.

Hon. ALBERT L. REEVES, Jr.,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Yesterday afternoon the Jackson County grand jury, which has been investigating the election frauds committed in the Democratic primary August 6, 1946, filed a report in which it expressed the conclusion that Roger C. Slaughter had been deprived of the nomination by reason of fraudulent votes cast and other irregularities. The grand jury further recommend that the Federal Government enter the case and that the ballots be counted by the appropriate authorities. Last night the vaults of the election commissioners were broken into and ballots and other records stolen. Full extent of this robbery not known at this time.

The brazen and disgraceful theft of ballot boxes here following grand jury investigation and indictments is most shocking to all decent citizens of this community. Hon. A. L. REEVES, Jr.,
Member of Congress:

Yesterday a Jackson County grand jury, after investigating irregularities in the primary election last August, submitted a report finding wrongful, illegal, and wholesale marking of ballots, vote buying, and bribery. Inasmuch as balloting for Federal offices was involved, I strongly urge that you demand a congressional investigation of this deplorable corruption of the franchise. According to press reports evidence of these crimes was presented to the Attorney General but no action was ever taken. I urge you to seek a congressional investigation of the failure of the Department of Justice to act in this matter and in line with the grand jury's report, make available the superior facilities of the Federal Government in unearthing all the irregularities to the end that guilty parties may be properly punished.

Hon. ALBERT L. REEVES, Jr.,
Member of Congress,

Local grand jury has disclosed flagrant violation of law in connection with August primary. According to the press, this information was given to Attorney General of United States months ago, who refused to take action. Reported ballot boxes now have been stolen to destroy evidence. If Attorney General had acted, this could not have happened. Congress should immediately institute vigorous investigation, and, if investigation justified, take action to impeach culpable Federal officials. You, as our Representative, should take lead.

W. C. SHANK.

KANSAS CITY, MO., May 28, 1947.
Congressman ALBERT L. REEVES, Jr.,
Old House Office Building:

The theft of election records of recent primary is most disturbing. I believe all public officials having jurisdiction should immediately investigate.

LOU ELLA ADAMS.

Mr. Chairman, in the fifth paragraph of its report the grand jury says categorically that "It is our belief that Roger C. Slaughter in this race was deprived of the nomination by a fraudulent miscount of votes and by other types of fraud." On page 4 of its report, the grand jury declares that "There were definite indications of conspiracy," and strongly urges that the Department of Justice and the FBI enter the investigation.

How long will the Congress tolerate the kind of fraud, and violence, and election thievery which has characterized primary and general elections in Kansas City, Mo., for many years? It is a weak and evasive alibi for the chief law-enforcement officer of the United States to say that the laws are inadequate and ineffective. They were adequate and effective enough 8 years and less ago to convict scores of persons, representing the same corrupt political machine in Kansas City, who had been guilty of no more than the offenses committed in the primary of last August—offenses which have resulted in some 50 State court indictments during the last several weeks. If the Federal election laws require strengthening, the Congress should act, and promptly.

But so far as the perpetrators of last August's primary frauds and crimes are concerned, the time has come—to borrow words which made history several years ago—to move on them again. And I do not mean the small fry alone. When the investigation has been completed, Mr. Chairman, a far broader aspect of the situation may have been presented.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I want to take this occasion to state that no matter what is done in connection with the appropriation for soil conservation payments, I hope that we will not overlook the value of the county committee system or do anything to diminish its importance. Believing as I do that there is a moral obligation on the part of the Federal Government to carry out the program contained in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1947, I supported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, to increase the appropriation to $300,000,000. When that was defeated, I supported the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri to increase the amount for administration in the field and supported a similar amendment on the part of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Whatever amount is finally appropriated by the Congress for soil conservation payments, the work will have to be done by the county committees. These committees, of course, have many other duties to perform in connection with agricultural programs. To them goes much of the credit for the success with which these programs have been carried on in the past. In the future, it is my hope that we will have more, rather than less, administrative control in the local communities.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to interrogate the chairman of the subcommittee on the Sugar Act provision in this present bill. I hope the Members have in their possession the report. On page 26 of the report this language appears:

> The amount allotted for payments to sugar producers under the budget is $53,623,885.

Further the report states:

> However, the committee has decided to reduce the national office administrative expense item by $50,000, which will make that amount additional for payments to sugar producers.

My question is, in the event the administrative funds after you have cut them $50,000 are not sufficient to administer the Sugar Act, how could it be administered?

Mr. DIRKSEN. On the basis of all the testimony we are satisfied that there are more than enough administrative funds to administer this program. I may say to the gentleman from Colorado that we have increased the amount that will be available for payments to sugar producers so that a large area of sugar production may be brought into cultivation during this crop year. In addition I may say this has been quite a big program. The amounts that have been collected through the so-called sugar processing tax have averaged more than $15,000,000 in every year, so that the Federal Government has actually realized a reasonably substantial profit on this operation from year to year. We are confident that the money that is involved here for administrative purposes is ample for all administrative detail in connection with the administration of the act.

Mr. HILL. I thank the gentleman. May I call the attention of the House again to what the subcommittee chairman has said, that this program on domestic sugar has not cost the taxpayers a single penny and has placed in the Treasury of the United States more than $15,000,000.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I commend my able and distinguished colleague from Colorado for calling this to our attention. I wonder if he can cite any other investment made by the Federal Government which brings a greater return. Not only have we reaped a $15,000,000 profit but we have supplied the Nation with sugar.

Mr. HILL. I might say to my colleague from Colorado that I think the sugar program has probably been the best administered of any program in agricultural activities during this administration.

There are a few things we must keep in mind. In the continental United States we must be careful how we proceed from now on in regard to increasing sugar acreages in other parts of the world and not curtail acreage from our sugarcane and sugar-beet producers.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Can the gentleman name any other governmental activity which shows a profit each year?

Mr. HILL. I cannot.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I would like also to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that according to the best reports from the sugar-beet industry there is now a surplus of sugar in this country. I might add that a committee of your Committee on Agriculture that has been looking into this sugar supply at the present time feels that there is not very much reason to hold down the American housewife in the use of sugar in the days just ahead.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL SCHOOL-LUNCH ACT

To enable the Secretary to carry out the provisions of the National School Lunch Act of June 4, 1946 (Public Law 396), $45,000,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for matching funds from sources within the States derived from the sale of lunches.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PHILLIPS of California: On page 52, line 23, strike out "$45,000,000" and insert "$25,000,000."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, in order that we may arrive at some time limit, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto and amendments to amendments close in 20 minutes.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this section and all amendments thereto and amendments to amendments close in 25 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 126, noes 101.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] is recognized.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Chairman, I have protested so many times about this Government giving away billions of the taxpayers' money to foreign countries and disregarding our own people and country that in justice to my constituents and conscience, I must again raise my voice against the reductions for the Department of Agriculture appropriations, H. R. 3601.

Agriculture is the basis of the economy of our Nation. Agriculture is the backbone of our country; and anything which is done to weaken or take away the governmental services of this industry is bound to effect the entire country.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand how members of the Committee on Agriculture and other Members of Congress representing farm districts can agree to reduce such items of the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture as the school-lunch program, rural electrification, soil erosion, forest protection, production and marketing administration, marketing service, to conserve our natural resources, and all of the other services which are so important to our agricultural population, and all of which contribute so richly to the prosperity of our country.

Many of our veterans are taking up agricultural pursuits, and to my amazement, even appropriations having to do with programs and benefits for these exservice men are being either discontinued or so reduced by the reductions in this appropriations bill that this deserving group will be deprived of assistance to which they had looked forward to being provided by their Government through the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, many times I have pointed out on the floor of this House that it was my privilege to represent one of the most important agricultural districts of this country, and I take this opportunity to say that as the representative of my district I have opposed and I now do most vehemently oppose these reductions in the approprations for the important and necessary services to my district and agriculture in general.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD following the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, there is no man on the floor who is more interested in the school-lunch program nor more in favor of the school-lunch program than I am. I want it understood that the only issue before the House at this time, no matter what oratory may be heard upon this floor, is who shall supervise, who shall manage the school-lunch program; whether it shall be directed from Washington or directed locally; whether it shall actually be as it started out to be, a school-lunch program involving surpluses, or whether it shall become a complete nutritional program the jurisdiction over which rests no longer with the Committee on Agriculture but with the Committee on Education and Labor; and, finally, who shall pay for it.

I have had experience with this program. It has been my observation, and this can be supported by the facts, that the best programs have been those which have been supervised locally, managed locally, and for which, for the greater part at least, local or State money has been used. Such programs for years have been carried out by churches, Rotary Clubs, Kiwanis Clubs, and other groups like these, as well as by school groups like the PTA.

There must be some sort of a Federal clearing house, and my amendment is directed to maintaining Federal supervision, and enough for an actual matching program, and to let additional money for the program be raised in the States. I do not see how any Member of Congress can say this should become a paternalistic, federally-supported program when there are surpluses in every State treasury. We have in my State, for instance, a balance of $430,000,000; you apparently have in the treasury of Alabama a current balance at the present time of $30,000,000; Mississippi has $22,000,000, and States which are spoken of as in great need have from $3,000,000 to $501,000,000. I say that California can well afford to pay the costs of this program in California out of its own funds. I know of nothing more important than the children of the United States of America.

To my mind, the needs of children, as future citizens of the United States, takes precedence over any other necessity to be paid from a State pocketbook. I think this should be a State-supported program and not by Federal payments. For that reason I offer the amendment which is now before you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the amendment which will increase the amount of the school-lunch appropriation for fiscal 1948 from the $45,000,000 recommended by the committee to $75,000,000, and to eliminate the restricting proviso regarding the ability of the State to match the funds derived from the Federal Government with income from the school lunches themselves. We must give the first thought in this program to its maximum effectiveness and the second thought to the details of the business arrangements between the Federal Government and the States. I do not see that we have any right to harm the program because the business arrangements do not seem to the Committee appropriate but rather that every effort must be made to improve the arrangements so that they are suitable without impairing the program. We must not forget that the whole program is provided for by Public Law 396 of the Seventy-ninth Congress and I see no reason for departing from the principle approved by that act. Therefore, I will vote to appropriate the full amount the program required for the next fiscal year as set up in the budget—$75,000,000.

As I said at the time I fought for the deficiency appropriation for the school-lunch program for fiscal 1947:

I consider the school-lunch program a part of the national responsibility for health. The program of a hot lunch for school children has met with the universal approval of mothers, teachers, educational authorities, and Parent-Teacher Associations. The cost is infinitesimal compared to the benefits. The health of the child determines the health of the man. I look forward to legislation which will be a national expression of the responsibility for the health of all citizens. The school-lunch program is an early and a necessary step.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK] is recognized for 1½ minutes.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUCK: On page 52, line 23, strike out "$45,000,000" and insert "$11,470,400."

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, the National School Lunch Act, ever since it was first presented to us, has been replete with misrepresentation. Originally declared to be for the purpose, among other things, of encouraging the domestic consumption of nutritious agricultural commodities and other food, it was enacted at a time when food rationing still prevailed in this country and when millions of people throughout the world were starving. Even today when our fabulous exports of foodstuffs are depleting our own supplies and causing prices to rise proportionately, the Administrator of the School Lunch Program, in testifying recently before the subcommittee, made the outlandish statement on page 1151 of the hearings that the program had "provided one of the best possible outlets for nutritious farm products that might otherwise contribute to local or national food surpluses." Proof that this bureaucrat did not himself believe the statement I have just read is evidenced by his further statement two pages beyond in the hearings which reads:

In the current year, with the exception of potatoes and a few other perishable commodities, surpluses suitable for the school-lunch program have been limited.

The fact is that schools have purchased food for the lunch program with complete freedom of action and in disregard of whether or not a particular commodity is surplus.

The height of misrepresentation, however, is in connection with State matching of Federal contributions. I am certain it was the impression of 95 percent of the Members of this House that this matching would be bona fide. Yet what do we find was the actual practice for the fiscal year 1947? The Federal Government will have expended $72,975,000. State and local governments appropriated but $11,470,400. The difference—and I submit that this is one of the most unconscionable acts of financial finagling which has ever come to my attention—was made up by the assumption that the pennies paid by the children for their lunches were a part of the State contribution. Then, for good measure, the States included as their contribution for matching purposes $25,000,000 of unaudited and unauditable "donations" from churches, parent-teachers' associations, service clubs, and so forth.

My amendment is for the purpose of reducing the Federal contribution to the amount actually appropriated for school lunches by the State and local governments during the fiscal year 1947.

I feel that even this sum is excessive in view of the fact that the Federal Government is some $260,000,000,000 in the red whereas at the end of the fiscal year 1946, there were surpluses in the treasuries of every State in the Union, as per the following figures published by the Bureau of the Census:

Alabama	$30,000,000
Arizona	11,000,000
Arkansas	12,000,000
California	490,000,000
Colorado	22,000,000
Connecticut	29,000,000
Delaware	13,000,000
Florida	38,000,000
Georgia	15,000,000
Idaho	10,000,000
Illinois	188,000,000
Indiana	89,000,000
Iowa	49,000,000
Kansas	27,000,000
Kentucky	25,000,000
Louisiana	27,000,000
Maine	9,000,000
Maryland	33,000,000
Massachusetts	13,000,000
Michigan	84,000,000
Minnesota	29,000,000
Mississippi	22,000,000
Missouri	62,000,000
Montana	9,000,000
Nebraska	10,000,000
Nevada	5,000,000
New Hampshire	6,000,000
New Jersey	42,000,000
New Mexico	7,000,000
New York	501,000,000
North Carolina	98,000,000
North Dakota	17,000,000
Ohio	162,000,000
Oklahoma	26,000,000
Oregon	58,000,000
Pennsylvania	180,000,000
Rhode Island	6,000,000
South Carolina	18,000,000
South Dakota	15,000,000
Tennessee	32,000,000
Texas	55,000,000
Utah	3,000,000
Vermont	8,000,000
Virginia	74,000,000
Washington	90,000,000
West Virginia	22,000,000
Wisconsin	93,000,000
Wyoming	8,000,000

Thus there is not a single State in the Union which could not adequately finance its school-lunch program without any participation by the Federal Government.

In conclusion, I wish to address myself to the Members of the House who represent the States who will pay the bulk of the cost of any money spent by the Federal Government for the school-lunch program.

You Members from Massachusetts should know that your State will receive back in benefits but 43 cents of every dollar your taxpayers must pay into the Federal Government for the school-lunch program. For Connecticut taxpayers the figure is but 28 cents; for New York, 18 cents; for New Jersey, 50 cents; for Pennsylvania, 57 cents; for Ohio, 40 cents; for Indiana, 67 cents; for Illinois, 31 cents; for Michigan, 43 cents. This program short-changes your taxpayers. I hope you will all bear this fact in mind in your consideration of this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. What is the parliamentary situation with respect to amendments that are pending? The time, of course, was closed on this amendment and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does action occur now on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK]?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, immediately upon the presentation of the amendment I submitted a substitute which I sent to the desk. I took it for granted it had been read.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri be read now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. CANNON:

Page 52, line 23, strike out "$45,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000,000."

Page 52, line 23, strike out the colon, insert a period and strike out the remainder of the paragraph through line 25.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. As I understand it, the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri is not presently before the Committee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have offered it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It could not have been offered, otherwise it would be before the Committee at the present time. I want to be sure that the members of the Committee appreciate the parliamentary situation and the things on which we vote. My understanding is we vote first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK] to reduce the amount from $45,000,000 to $11,470,000.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. DIRKSEN. When that is disposed of, then the gentleman from Missouri will offer his substitute or amendment to modify the pending amendment, to raise it from $45,000,000 to $75,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. DIRKSEN. What about the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS]?

The CHAIRMAN. That will be the last amendment voted on.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, if there is no more time desired, I should like to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. There are others on the list. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PRESTON].

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] a moment ago told us how much he loved the little children of America, how important they are to the country, yet in the same breath he wants to take this money away from them. That just does not add up, to me.

A few years ago the big tax burden that the people bore was by State and county taxes. Today the big tax burden is from taxes due the Federal Government. The States, the municipalities, the counties, and the various subdivisions of our country are not getting back in return the proper ratio of money that we are paying into the Federal Treasury. Our taxes are pyramiding. This program is a program which works as a return from our Federal tax dollars. It is a uniform program that provides nutritious lunches throughout the entire United States. We all know it has paid huge dividends. I want to go on record favoring the amendment by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] to increase this appropriation to $75,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS].

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks, I quote from a statement issued by the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, which I submit for the consideration of Congress with the hope that adequate funds will be provided for this necessary and worth while program. I feel that it would be neglect of our duty if we do not do so.

Today the number of school children who cannot go home to a nourishing meal at noon is multiplying rapidly. For example, children attending high schools or consolidated rural schools often cannot go home for lunch, the large areas served by these schools make for distances too great to be covered during the noon hour. Also, many mothers are either employed or for other reasons have no time to prepare and serve a nutritious lunch during their children's brief noontime recess. Moreover, children of the same family who attend different schools are seldom able to get home at the same time, and under these conditions lunch at home becomes a hurried, unsatisfactory arrangement. Finally, parents living in large cities frequently prefer their children to remain at school rather than face traffic hazards at the busy noon hour. Student and police patrols cannot be effectively operated during this brief midday interval. The war revealed that malnutrition is much more widespread than most of our people realized. It was found to be most prevalent among the low-economy groups, but many young people from families having good incomes and from farm homes having an abundance of food also showed dangerous dietary deficiencies. These could be attributed only to poor food habits, cold and unpalatable meals, and unbalanced diets. It is generally believed that if all school children were assured a nutritious and palatable meal at noon the health of the school children could be greatly improved and foundations laid for healthier adulthood.

The school-lunch program should be the answer to this, and has proven that it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I can only make a very brief observation in the time allotted me. In that time I want to restate the facts that were cited by my colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY], a few minutes ago. I want to point out to you that less than a month ago this Congress appropriated $350,000,000 with which to feed the so-called starving people of Europe, half of whom 3 years ago were running bayonets through good American bellies; and yet you have only $45,000,000—less than one-seventh of that amount—to spend on our own children.

I can show you undernourished children now down in the State of Mississippi. I can show them to you in Tennessee, in Arkansas, in Louisiana, and other places; and I assure you they would be in a pretty bad fix if it were not for this school-lunch program. I think it would be criminal to refuse to restore the funds for this school-lunch program. If you vote to cut the funds any further for this item or if you leave it stand at only $45,000,000 you ought to go home and hang your head in shame.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, in its report on H. R. 3601 the Appropriations Committee stated they are reducing the budget of the school-lunch program from $75,000,000 to $45,000,000.

According to the provisions of Public Law 396 covering the school-lunch program, $10,000,000 was authorized to be set aside for nonfood items, which includes equipment. Thus, in effect, there will be but $35,000,000 left for food in the program.

If the recommendations of the committee are taken the result will be that States will have to do one of two things:

First. The States will have to choose the number of schools within the State that can be handled throughout the next school year, which in turn will mean that approximately only 35 percent of the presently participating schools will be included in the program.

Second. In the event the States choose to continue the program in all presently participating schools, it is estimated that the program will last only through the first half of next year.

I feel that either of these alternatives would be disastrous, and consequently urge that the House restore for the school-lunch program the seventy-five million requested.

Everyone familiar with the wonderful work done by this program should insist that this project be maintained in its entirety.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I asked for this time because I am going to support the amendment for $75,000,000, but I want to say this in the short time allotted to me, that we have 26,000,000 bushels of Irish potatoes in excess of the needs of the country. I do not understand why a great committee like the Committee on Appropriations, interested in saving funds and saving food, I suppose, could not have worked out a proposition whereby some of the 26,000,000 bushels of Irish potatoes that are spoiling and wasting in this country, and which cannot be sold at home and abroad, might not be given to some of these school children throughout the length and breadth of the United States. If we want to do a real service to the school children of the country as a whole we should make some arrangement whereby some of these funds can be used for the purpose of supplying the school children with food that otherwise would go to waste and spoil and rot in this country. I commend this thought to the gentleman from Illinois as a proposition of a humanitarian nature that he can work upon without expending any funds.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, in the reduction of the school-lunch program appropriation from the $75,000,000 recommended by the Bureau of the Budget to the $45,000,000 recommended by the Appropriations Committee, the Republican majority in the House has hit the American school child a body blow where it would hurt most—his little stomach. It seems almost inconceivable that Republican economy should go so far. When we see the program of the Republican Party taking shape first in the form of big tax reductions for the higher brackets and penny reductions for the low-income groups; then in the threatened extension of excise taxes which would put the burden of reducing the national debt on those least able to pay; later, in the reduction of the various appropriation bills, thereby throwing thousands of faithful Government employees with years of service out of work; and finally, in this last economy move of curtailing school lunches, we are filled with well grounded fear for the future welfare of the country.

We have voted millions of dollars for the relief and rehabilitation of the countries of Europe, some of which were our enemies. But when it comes to taking care of the first line of defense of our own country—our own children—the Republican majority is apparently willing that they should go undernourished and underfed.

I have time after time heard our colleagues on the other side of the aisle rant and rave about communism. Of course, it is a threat and a danger, but it is because of the program which I have referred to before that it will become a greater danger and a greater threat to this country. Hungry mouths will make Communists. That is the procedure that Russia is using to Sovietize the countries within its present sphere. That is the procedure that will make Communists in our own country. I hope that the House will adopt the Cannon amendment to increase the school-lunch appropriation to $75,000,000—it will be the humanitarian and patriotic thing to do.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, in the usual steamroller fashion of this Congress the majority party has again limited debate on an important amendment. I wish to announce that I shall support the substitute amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] which seeks to increase the inadequate amount, $45,000,000, allowed by the Republican majority for the vitally necessary school-lunch program to the amount, $75,000,000, requested by President Truman and the Bureau of the Budget for the fiscal year 1948.

Less than a year ago Public Law 396 of the Seventy-ninth Congress which I supported was approved by President Truman and our school-lunch program became basic law. Now, less than a year later, at a time when we are spending billions of dollars for foreign relief, the Republican majority of this House scraps the law and denies a pitifully small sum needed for the most valuable assets we have, our American children. Mr. Chairman, I have all along supported our school-lunch program and I shall continue to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORRIS].

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been before us on another occasion when we were asking for a deficiency appropriation, and I had something to say about it at that time, as other members did, and I do not wish to belabor you nor to criticize you and to speak in terms of maudlin sympathy about the poor little children, and so on. But, as a matter of fact, my friends, the poor little children are involved.

I wish to address myself in this minute and a half that I have, which is very short, to the thought of the strength of our Nation. I am alarmed and worried about this great Nation of ours like you are. You are as honest and sincere and patriotic as I am; I am certain of that. But all of us who are honest and sincere and patriotic American citizens are trying to look not to the next election but to the next generation, and I am thinking about the health of our Nation and the strength of our Nation, and I am telling you that there are very few things we can do to strengthen our Nation more, in my judgment, than to keep the school-lunch program going in a big way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

THE SCHOOL-LUNCH PROGRAM: "WE FEED THE GERMANS AND JAPS BUT NEGLECT OUR OWN MOST VALUABLE CROP—OUR CHILDREN"

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I consider this action by the Committee on Appropriations the most outrageous of all the meat-ax slashes they have made.

Last session we passed a law, after long and careful consideration, to help supplement the diet of undernourished children. Now they come in and cut the appropriation and by that action virtually nullify the law.

Millions have been appropriated for the relief of hungry and needy people of other countries. For the terrible Turks and for the Greeks you have appropriated more millions, not alone to feed and clothe them, to provide them with arms and munitions.

MONEY TO HELP PRODUCE RECORD CROP—BUT NOT FOR CHILDREN

We have appropriated more millions on millions—and you have voted for those appropriations—to provide fertilizer and soil conservation programs to help the farmers produce record crops; but for the most valuable crop of all, our children, the future citizens, yes, and soldiers, of America, you are providing a niggardly sum, grudgingly and disparagingly.

Yes, you have voted for appropriations to save the cattle, to guard against foot-and-mouth disease, to feed wild ducks—but to feed needy children of our own, American children, you have cut down the already too small budget by $30,000,000.

My colleague, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], has told you that only 1 out of 10 of the school children obtains the free lunch available under this grant. Let his figures be correct; yet I still say to you that that means we can make it possible for 750,000 school kids to be happy with a hot midday meal, to be better students and better junior citizens, and to grow up to be better and stronger and healthier adults.

He has told you that in Chevy Chase the children all buy their own lunches and pay the regular full price; but he neglected to tell you that Chevy Chase is perhaps the wealthiest community in Greater Washington.

THIS ECONOMY IS A CHEAT ON THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

I have voted for all measures designed to help the American farmer to raise his income, his standards of living, and these wonderful record-breaking crops of which we all have been so proud.

No one has begrudged those funds.

But now for the benefit of children who otherwise might not be able to eat a lunch at all, or at best would have a scrap of bread or a cold boiled egg, I surmise that all of you will vote for this paltry sum on the pretext of economy.

What a cheat you are giving the American people.

You have just passed a bill reducing the tax bill of the wealthy by $3,000,000,000. Is this the way you will make it up—by taking even the lunches away from poor, defenseless urchins?

FOLLOWING DICTATES OF PARTY LEADER

In all this you are, I presume, following the advice of your real party leader, former President Hoover, for he testified before a House committee only a few days ago that he is in favor of feeding the Japanese and the Germans, though we still have not started to bring back the bodies of our 300,000 dead, and our hospitals still are overcrowded with the maimed from the war of resistance against their aggressions. I suppose this is on the theory that we started the war against the Nazis and the Japs.

I well remember that it was this same President Hoover who prevented money appropriated for the relief of starving cattle from being used for the relief of starving people when it appeared the cattle would live without it.

It is easy to understand that his heart would bleed for our defeated enemies but not for our own underprivileged children, who may be the next victims of those enemies when they have been rehabilitated.

You have done everything possible to encourage the high prices which make it harder and harder for underpaid parents to feed their children, with the cost of bread and milk nearly doubled; but you will not do this little bit to make up for that.

The American people will not soon forget this triumph of selfishness over humanity.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BRYSON].

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Chairman, with your indulgence, I should like to speak to you briefly and informally.

A matter of great importance which I would like to refer to is the school-lunch program about which my fellow Carolinian has spoken to you. I am very much interested in public affairs now, and I have been for a quarter of a century. I have been in public affairs for that length of time.

I can truthfully say that I know of nothing for which public moneys are expended from which we receive so much value as the school-lunch program.

In my State, of necessity, we have had to consolidate many schools. I would like to point out, too, that in spite of the report about the poor schools in the South, I do not know any State that spends more per capita than the State of South Carolina.

I might add that that assumption as to the state of the schools in the South is now entirely justified. Lately I saw statistics to prove my statement above. South Carolina is carrying a greater load than any other State in an effort to meet its school problems.

Very often children are required to travel 40 and 50 miles to school in our State by way of bus. I remember when we had the controversy about daylight-saving time.

I have seen children in the first grade standing on the highway at the break of dawn, and frequently standing in the chill of the early morning hours, waiting to be transported 40 or 50 miles to school.

I have children in my own home and I know that they get up in haste and confusion, and they frequently do not feel like eating breakfast. As a result, they go away to school, and if they are not provided a hot lunch during the midday, they do not have any warm food until they reach home at the close of day.

I cannot too strongly endorse the school-lunch program.

Mr. PRICE of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this cut in appropriations in the funds for our school-lunch program. In the past weeks we have seen this House vote for millions of dollars to feed the hungry of Europe and I have no quarrel with that program but we should remember that charity begins at home. Why should we not look after the underprivileged of our own States? The records show that millions of our young men were rejected by our armed forces due to the lack of proper nourishment while they were growing into manhood. Let this House forget political promises and campaign talk when it comes to feeding the children of our country.

We can go along with the Republicans on their economy drive in many instances but let us not bring such questions into this argument.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I am disturbed and dismayed by the amendments offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK] to reduce the child-lunch appropriation to $11,000,000 and the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] to reduce it to $25,000,000. I am convinced that the $45,000,000 appropriation recommended by the Appropriations Committee is not enough and consequently I will vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] to increase that amount to $75,000,000.

I must compliment the Republicans for the well-organized steam roller they have used throughout this session and in the consideration of this bill to take away from the American people and the American children the help and the assistance which the Government should rightly give to them. The result has been that organization has triumphed over consideration of our people's needs and the steam roller has functioned at the expense of specific Government obligations and duties in behalf of people who need our assistance.

I am amazed at the callousness of the opposition to the school-lunch program. We can appropriate millions to relieve the distress of people overseas, but we find it difficult to look after our own. I have received scores of letters and telegrams in behalf of the school-lunch program and, as a consistent supporter of it, I will continue to give it my full support. I hope the House will vote to increase the amount for the school-lunch program because we will be investing our money in our greatest national asset—our children.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER].

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, last year on the 6th day of June the Congress of the United States passed this act:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress, as a measure of national security, to safeguard the health and well-being of the Nation's children, and to encourage the domestic consumption of nutritious agricultural commodities and other foods, by providing an adequate supply—

Mr. Chairman, I trust that we will not bypass that word "adequate." If we intended to hold out to the people of this country that we recognize the value of this program and that we propose to enter into an agreement with the several States to furnish an adequate supply of foods for the school children of this country, we ought to stand by it now. With all due respect, I suggest to the members of this committee that it is mockery to make this amount less than $75,000,000. Let us be sincere in this matter.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] to raise the appropriation for school lunches to $75,000,000 instead of the sum of $45,000,000 now in the bill. I expressed myself on this matter in general debate yesterday and I cannot say much in the short time now allotted.

This school lunch has been written into our statutory law. The law authorizes $75,000,000 as the Federal contribution to the joint State-Federal program. I am supporting this amendment to appropriate the full amount authorized by law.

No one knows better than I do the trials and tribulations of a boy being reared under hard financial circumstances. I have known what it means to be hungry. We have many American children now who know what that means. I consider, Mr. Chairman, that this school-lunch program, this provision to give a school lunch to children standing in need of it, is a program to strengthen America and make our future citizens not only strong physically but strong mentally. We want to build and keep America strong and certainly this school lunch is a very effective way to do it.

I cannot too strongly urge the adoption of the Cannon amendment and thus insure to the American children a continuance of this program. I make this appeal in behalf of the children of America. Stand by them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, of all the puzzling matters that face the American people today, I think there is more confusion and more indignation on the part of the population generally concerning the acts of our Government in regard to this one thing; that is, that we are voting millions and billions of dollars to aid the people in the war-stricken countries and even the enemy countries and doing so little relatively for our own people. The majority are acting in the name of economy. I am willing to see work done in other parts of the world to rehabilitate those devastated lands, but I hate to see a refusal on the part of our own Government to do likewise for our own sections of the country. I am willing to clothe and feed the people of the world but we must not neglect our own, and we are doing it in this Agriculture appropriation bill just as the House did in the Interior appropriation bill some weeks ago.

When the school-lunch program had its origin the idea may have been to accomplish two things at once, to distribute surplus agricultural products of food and at the same time to benefit the school children by this nutritional program. It may be that the first objective is no longer needed, but who can tell when it may be needed? I, too, have heard a great deal of complaint about spring potatoes being destroyed, and I also think it is a shame. Of course I know that new potatoes may be of such a perishable character as to make them entirely unsuited for shipment abroad to starving people. But that does not necessarily prevent the use of such food for American children. The other great value of the school-lunch program continues to exist.

With so many millions of our young men disqualified for military service in the war because of lack of nutrition in childhood, it ought to be a warning that the very safety of our Nation depends upon the good health of our boys and girls. Even if we no longer need a market for surplus food in school lunches, the other need is all-compelling, and we are short-sighted indeed if we do not exercise great generosity in implementing the program with suitable funds. I know what school lunches mean in the far Southwest, and I know that even in the best of farming communities many children are suffering from malnutrition. Liberal support and scientific management in this work will repay the Nation and the future great dividends. A saving here is expensive.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN].

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise now merely to point out the implications that are contained in all these amendments. There are 50,000 schools having school lunches and receiving Federal aid today. There are over 200,000 schools in the United States. On that ratio, you can, by multiplying the amounts by four times, find the implied responsibility this Congress is assuming under these amendments. Under the Buck amendment calling for $11,000,000, eventually, if all the schools participate, it will be approximately $45,000,000.

Under the Phillips formula it will be $100,000,000. Under the committee amendment which I support it will be $180,000,000, eventually, if all schools participate, or four times the amount in the bill which services 50,000 of our 200,000 schools. Under the Cannon amendment it will be $300,000,000.

I want the committee to have the full importance of all that is implied in these amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Chairman, I supported the school-lunch program heretofore. I am for it now. I feel that some of my friends who want to economize on the children of America and who talk about inefficiency and waste are among those who have voted repeatedly to give billions of dollars to foreign nations, much of it for waste and extravagance. I feel the time has come when we should look after our own people. Charity still begins at home.

Mr. Chairman, to cut the budget estimates 32 percent in the appropriations for the Agriculture Department is not justifiable. It is true that there are duplications that should be eliminated. It is equally true that there are some cuts that should be made. But such cuts should not be made on wealth-producing projects such as the REA, soil conservation, and land-purchase projects for veterans and others. These and others are wealth-producing and not wealth-consuming projects.

I know that the Appropriations Committee claims that the REA has more money than it can spend. That may be true in some localities, but not in others. In my own State only 1 farmer out of 10 has electricity in his home. Modern facilities demand that these farmers, who help feed the Nation, be given some of the conveniences enjoyed by city people. Modern civilization and full production demand that the REA be extended to every farm in this Nation where it is at all practicable. This cannot be done by cutting the REA appropriations.

The REA has a backlog of applications now totaling $240,000,000. The REA estimates this figure will be $270,000,000 by July 1 against which it will have only $10,000,000 in unallotted funds. In other words, it would take $260,000,000 to break even on July 1—without any money to cover new applications through 1948.

The truth is that in place of cutting REA loans $25,000,000, the budget estimate, the committee, realizing the great benefit of REA, should have increased it. If the REA was to accept all of the applications, and extend the benefits of the REA to all the applicants, it would take $361,000,000 by June 30, 1948. I feel that at least the $25,000,000 should be reinstated.

I also feel that the 28½-percent cut in administration funds will mean 25-percent fewer farm people who will receive electricity in 1948 than if the cuts were not made. I feel that at least part of these administration funds should be restored. A 28½-percent cut is too severe.

The committee argues that the REA co-ops, when once set up, are capable of running their own business without Federal supervision. In this way they feel that the expense can be cut. I do believe in local self-government but the committee forgets that the REA is still a very young institution, and that its activities are still expanding. This is especially true in North Dakota and other States like North Dakota. I shall, therefore, vote to restore the budget estimate in the appropriation when that amendment is offered.

Next we come to soil conservation. Here again we have not only a wealth-producing project, but a wealth-saving project; a project that prevents depletion of our soil; a project that prevents erosion, and the dust bowls. Here again the committee argues that the program is completed. Yet the program has but started. Surely to severely cut the estimates in this appropriation is a mistake.

This is especially true when we consider the foreign commitments, the commitments such as the $3,750,000,000 gift to Great Britain, the $750,000,000 gifts made recently and the $27,000,000,000 that we have at present committed ourselves to, but that I am satisfied another administration and another Congress will repudiate.

However, be that as it may, if we are to continue to fulfill these commitments in any degree at all, we will have to conserve our soil. We will have to prevent soil depletion, erosion, and dust bowls. I shall, therefore, vote for and support the restoration of the budget estimates for soil conservation.

I am proud that I voted against the gag rule that was adopted yesterday. That gag rule permits the Appropriations Committee to write the Nation's laws. It virtually sets it up not only as an appropriation committee, but as a legislative committee. I feel that that gag rule, the same as gag rules under previous Congresses, is an insult to the Members of Congress.

I realize that first we gag ourselves, and then say we cannot do anything because we were gagged. I am sorry that so many of my friends yesterday voted for the gag rule. Party regularity must cease when the Nation's welfare is at stake, when the problems of agriculture are at stake. These are not party issues; they are American issues.

Under the gag rule which we adopted yesterday, Members are prohibited from raising points of order. This rule was expressly adopted—deliberately adopted—to permit the Appropriations Committee to change laws as well as to make appropriations.

Under the 1935 law there was a permanent appropriation for agriculture of a sum equal to 30 percent of custom-duty receipts. This amounted to about $148,000,000 each year. Under the law this was used by the Department of Agriculture to steady the market of surplus commodities.

A point of order could have been made against this on the grounds that it is legislation in an appropriation bill, but the gag rule prohibits this. It waives all points of order. I shall assist and do all I can to have that legislative provision stricken from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. ROHRBOUGH].

Mr. ROHRBOUGH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri. I do that because I am interested in young people. We have been having reports that there is a wave of juvenile delinquency. It is mighty hard for young people to be good when they are hungry. I do not know whether or not as we grow older we forget how much it means to youngsters, to small boys and small girls, to have enough to eat.

We are commanded to hunger and thirst after righteousness, but I tell you that the people who are hungry physically cannot hunger and thirst after righteousness. They cannot be good. So, I support the amendment to prevent malnutrition and to promote better citizenship.

Mr. POTTS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the arguments for and against the provision in the Agriculture appropriation bill with respect to school lunches.

The people of my district have been writing to me on this subject and there is no doubt that they want adequate provision made for continuation of the program.

Accordingly, in compliance with the will of the people of my district, as expressed to me, I intend to vote against those amendments which will reduce the appropriation of $45,000,000 as contained in the bill for school lunches and I intend to vote for the amendment which will increase the appropriation to $75,000,000.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the school-lunch program is primarily a measure of agricultural stabilization. It is only incidentally a child-feeding program. The sum that will tend best to stabilize the agricultural program of our country is the sum we should support. In my opinion that sum is seventy-five million.

While some States may be prepared to take over the child-feeding portion of the program, other States are not.

My district is primarily an industrial district. But I recognize the complete interdependence of industrial and agricultural communities. A crippling blow to the stability of agriculture is a crippling blow to American industry and vice versa.

It is poor economy to cut the school-lunch figure when that cut is a blow to agricultural stability.

Furthermore, how can we justify crippling the child-feeding feature of the program? Which schools do we wish to strike out? On what particular children do you wish the ax to fall?

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to a number of provisions in H. R. 3601 and hope that they will be corrected by proper amendment. The over-all cut of 32 percent in the appropriation for the Agriculture Department, as set forth in H. R. 3601, is entirely too severe and deprives the Agriculture Department and the farmers of many needed services to which the farmers are entitled and which are necessary to preserve their present prosperous economy. These cuts affect not only the farm program, but the living conditions and welfare of the farm population throughout the Nation.

I am especially opposed to the provision which reduces the allowance for the school-lunch program from $75,000,000 to $45,000,000. The program was eliminated by the House deficiency bill for 1947, but was reinstated by amendment over the objection of the Republican leadership. Now after this was done, this bill reduces this much-needed appropriation from $75,000,000 to $45,000,000 for 1948. In my opinion, this reduction is absolutely unjustified and is a step backward in the farm life of our Nation. It comes at the very time when this much-needed program was expected to be a permanent set-up and a great advantage in promoting not only the education, but the health of the children of our Nation. It is a disappointment to everyone concerned in this splendid program because it was expected that the program would be expanded rather than abandoned.

We have not time to enumerate the many advantages of the school-lunchroom program or the benefit that the children of the Nation derive from the program. These are demonstrated by the expansion and growing popularity of the program.

The declaration of the policy contained in the act of the Seventy-ninth Congress is as follows: "It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress as a measure of national security to safeguard the health and well-being of the Nation's children and to encourage domestic consumption of nutritious agricultural products and other food, by assisting the States through grants and aid and other means in providing an adequate supply of food and other facilities for the establishment, maintenance and operation and expansion of nonprofit school-lunch programs." In initiating, supporting, and maintaining the national school-lunchroom program, the Government of the United States has rendered invaluable aid to the cause of public education and to public health in all of the States of the Union and it seems a tragedy to cut it out when it probably is just entering upon a period of its greatest use to public education.

The very able and progressive superintendent of public instruction in North Carolina, Dr. Clyde Erwin, has urged me and the other members of the North Carolina delegation in Congress to support the program and to urgently request the Appropriations Committee of the House not to desert this important needed legislation which contributes immeasurably to the health and education of the children of the United States. I am informed that the education leaders of many of the States of the Union have written similar letters to their Congressmen urging that this program be supported to the limit.

I hope the Cannon amendment will be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit a letter received from Mr. W. D. Reynolds, county agent of Mecklenburg County, Charlotte, N. C., giving a very intelligent picture of conditions of agricultural life and future prospects of agriculture in the United States provided that the agriculture program is not cut in such a severe way as to handicap, if not destroy, the farm program which has proven so successful and has made the farmers prosperous for the first time in the history of our Nation:

OFFICE OF COUNTY FARM AGENT,
Mecklenburg County, Charlotte, N. C.

Hon. HAMILTON C. JONES,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN JONES: I understand there is a bill being considered by the Agricultural Committee of the United States Congress to reduce the appropriations for agriculture. First, let me suggest to you that in my humble opinion farm people of America have made more progress during the last 15 years than any time in history, and I sincerely believe that one of the big factors causing this splendid progress has been the far-sighted leaders in our Federal Government, the Congressmen, Senators, and others. To me, it would be no less than a tragedy now to hamper this progressive segment of society by reducing the appropriations of the Federal Government to such a point that our agricultural agencies would not be able to render to the farm people the same good services they have become accustomed to during the past few years. Let me hasten to assure you that it is my humble opinion that the farmers have never had more than their share of the appropriations made by our good Congress, and I further believe that the money appropriated has been spent wisely.

As I travel over the county and State and talk to farm people, I am almost daily reminded that this farm or that farm was an old run-down, washed-away farm 15 or 20 years ago. But today we find the soil being reclaimed and rebuilt through the help of the agricultural agencies. I am particularly thinking of the terracing program and soil building, the farmers being encouraged to plant cover crops, pastures and forest trees on certain spots or fields, and then too, the material such as lime, acid and potash that the farmers have been educated to use. Through the help of the Agricultural Department they have been encouraged to use these better practices in a number of cases by certain allowances made to them by our good Government.

It is an uphill road when we go out and talk to farmers about the needs of their soil and they explain to us in all too many cases that they do not have the wherewith to finance the project, but when the Government lends encouragement by supplying certain materials, the road is made easier and progress is much faster.

Now, we have heard some discussion about the overlapping of certain agencies, but in my humble opinion that is merely a mole hill and it has been developed into a mountain by people who do not know how the different agencies plan and work together. Certainly, that is true of our county and there is no reason why that could not be true in every county in the United States. The county agent's program is purely an educational program while the Triple A for instance cooperates by furnishing some of these materials that we have spoken of, which certainly helps to make for a better rural condition. Let me assure you that the farm people are asking no special favors, but they do feel that they are entitled to their fair share of Federal help, and it is useless for me to tell you that unless we continue to encourage the farm people to use better practices in preserving their soil when cultivating their crops and in fact in using better agricultural practices in both field crops and livestock, America stands to lose much. In fact, the whole world will be affected. We must give to the farm boy the same opportunity that business and other professions offer.

Your continued interest in our farm people will not be forgotten by those who till the soil.

Yours truly,

W. D. REYNOLDS,
County Farm Agent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, let us get the parliamentary situation ironed out. The bill as reported by the subcommittee contains $45,000,000 for school lunches with the proviso that the money paid by children for lunches shall not be considered for matching purposes.

The gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] offers an amendment to reduce the amount to $25,000,000.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK] offers a substitute amendment to reduce the amount to $11,470,000.

When it is in order, the gentleman from Missouri will offer to make it $75,000,000, which was the budget request.

Let us see where we are on this thing and notwithstanding, I hope you will pardon me when I say it, but it is the only adjective I can think of, some of the mawkish sentiment that has been expressed here, as a matter of fact, if we did not offer anything in this bill, there would still be $160,000,000 for school lunches. Secondly, let us make it clear that this is not a free lunch. When the deficiency appropriation bill was here for $6,000,000 recently, the welkin resounded in the well of this House with talk of free lunch. Let us see what Dr. Ockley said. Here is his testimony: "One out of every nine children gets a free lunch."

I asked him that, and he said, "Yes, sir." He said, "One in nine is free, and eight out of nine pay the full amount. The ninth child gets a ticket."

Now, then, they can go right on with their school-lunch program, even if the Federal Government did not contribute a nickel to this.

You talk about potatoes and about surplus. This is a cash program. When this money is made available the Department sets it up on a quarterly basis and the cash is allocated to the various States. Do they have to buy surplus potatoes with it? No. They do not. Do they have to buy any food that is in abundance? Read the testimony. The Department says they do not have to buy any surplus supplies. We have no control over them. It is a nutrition program, on a cash subsidy basis. That accounts for the fact that we cannot order them around and tell them what to do on this thing, without writing a lot of provisions and provisos in here that are impossible. Now, that is the whole story.

The logical amendment is the one offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK], because if you are going to match direct appropriations by States and counties, it is $11,400,000. So he proposes to match it. That is the law. If you want to include nonfood assistance, then you take the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, because that would be a little more than direct matching, plus the $10,000,000 for nonfood assistance. Now, why $45,000,000 in the bill? First, we match the direct appropriations. Secondly, we include the nonfood assistance, and that is $10,000,000. Then we give credit to all donations and contributions by churches, by luncheon clubs, whether they are offered in kind or cash or in materials or what. So I thought we were extremely generous in the subcommittee in making it $45,000,000. However, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK] has offered the logical amendment, and the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS], who has given special study to it and who is a member of the subcommittee, has included, no doubt, the nonfood assistance, and reduced it from $45,000,000 to $25,000,000.

So that is the story. Then, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] will come along and ask you to approve $75,000,000.

Let me conclude by saying that only 25 percent of the Nation's schools are being fed through this program today. If you want to carry it out logically, make up your mind, according to the testimony before the committee, that this will cost the Federal Government somewhere between $350,000,000 and $600,000,000 a year. There is going to be an end to it, but the children will be fed just the same.

One other thing. Out in Chevy Chase they have a school and they serve hot lunches. Mr. HORAN'S wife goes there three times a week to that school to help serve. They pay 25 cents for the lunch. They get no Federal help. They have $600 in the school treasury. They can buy playground equipment if they want to. However, if you go into the Federal program, all the money must go into the program and there will be no opportunity to use it for playground equipment. The children will still be fed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

All time for debate has expired.

The question comes first on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK].

The substitute was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. CANNON to the amendment offered by Mr. PHILLIPS of California:

On page 52, line 23, strike out "$45,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000,000."

On page 52, line 23, strike out the colon, insert a period, and strike out the remainder of the paragraph through line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The question comes on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, on that I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. CANNON to act as tellers.

The Committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 139, noes 155.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, may we have that amendment reread?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the Phillips amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk reread the Phillips amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PHILLIPS of California) there were—ayes 85, noes 153.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses necessary to enable the Secretary to administer the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937 (7 U. S. C. 608c–608d), including personal services in the District of Columbia, $525,300.

Mr. PASSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks after the reading of line 10, page 52 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PHILLIPS of California: On page 53, line 6, strike out "525,300" and insert "$725,300."

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, may I have the attention, please, of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], and presumably those other members of the subcommittee who might be on the conference committee between this House and the other body.

I am introducing this amendment so that it will be in the RECORD, and the discussion will appear in the RECORD at this point. This item, on page 53, appearing as $525,300, is the amount of money appropriated by the subcommittee for the administration of the marketing acts. Heretofore this money has been taken from the administrative percentage of the section 32 funds. When representatives of the Department of Agriculture came to the subcommittee this year and asked for an appropriation, they set no amount, expecting that it would be taken from section 32 funds. The subcommittee appropriated exactly the same amount that was used in fiscal year 1947, thinking we were appropriating all that the Department wanted.

It is my belief that a part of the section 32 funds will be released. Immediately the administrative percentage will apply, and those funds may then be used for the item which now appears on page 53. I am therefore putting in a figure of $725,300, which I believe will be the amount needed. I am suggesting that when it goes to the other body, the committee there will probably remove this item entirely from this position in the bill and will apply it against the administrative percentage of section 32 funds.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment may be printed in the RECORD, and that I may now withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Market news service: For collecting, publishing, and distributing, by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply and demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, quality, condition, and market prices of livestock, meats, fish, and animal products, dairy and poultry products, fruits and vegetables, peanuts and their products, grain, hay, feeds, cottonseed, and seeds, and other agricultural products, $1,520,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Page 53, line 19, strike out "$1,520,000" and insert "$1,527,500."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the amount involved is $7,500 for a marketing news reporter for dairy products in the Cleveland area. It is a committee amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON. Has it been approved by the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; unfortunately it has not. I had not hoped it would be necessary to take the time of the Committee to discuss it, but I shall do so. A very gracious and charming Member of this great deliberative assembly, the gentlewoman from the State of Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] spoke to me about this little matter quite some time before the committee concluded its reports. They have a marketing news reporter for dairy products at a number of places, including Atlanta, Detroit, St. Louis, and elsewhere, and it was felt there was a great need for the installation of two people in existing office facilities at a cost of $7,500 for this service. I think it is richly deserved, so I promised the lady that I would bring it to the attention of the committee. It has had the approval of the subcommittee, and I hope the House will do this good turn for a very charming and very competent Member of this body.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I realize it is a lack of gallantry, Mr. Chairman, to oppose any proposition from the Member's district, and I fully concur with what the gentleman from Illinois has said about her charming personality. I am very anxious to go along, but this bill is part of a project to cut the President's budget $6,000,000,000, and now instead of cutting the budget we are even going above the budget.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I might say to my very genial friend from Missouri that we could set up 1,000 offices or an equivalent amount for the amendment he offered a few months ago.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, but we could feed 7,000,000 children and perhaps that is a little more important than a marketing service. The Department has not recommended the expenditure, at least we have had no official notice of it, the Budget Bureau does not approve of it, so, Mr. Chairman, I am constrained reluctantly to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Loans: For loans under title II, $60,000,000.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTEN: On page 58, strike out all of line 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Loans: Title I and section 43, $25,000,000; title II, $60,000,000; in all for loans, $85,000,000."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes, the last 15 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

Mr. WHITTEN. I will reserve the right to object unless the next to the last 5 minutes is reserved for that side of the committee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Obviously the chairman of the committee cannot agree to that. After all, this is an amendment that departs from the committee action.

Mr. WHITTEN. I mean of the last 10 minutes, 5 are to be reserved for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I suggest to the gentleman that that motion is subject to a point of order since there has been no debate on the amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Very well. Since no debate has ensued, I withdraw my motion for the moment.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman can submit a unanimous consent request.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not want to encumber the gentleman from Mississippi further.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, this provision of the bill does not represent the considered action of the Republican majority members of the committee. This committee met for eight long weeks, and at the conclusion of the hearings, after hearing innumerable witnesses, the bill was marked up. After 8 weeks of tedious testimony, in many cases, the committee met and marked up the bill. The Republican majority members of the committee subscribed to the amendment which is on the Clerk's desk. Ten days after that happened and 10 days after the clerks had filed the reports and the hearings had been printed, the Republican steering committee met on Monday a week ago. The next day the committee was called back, and then the majority members of the committee reopened this case and struck out the $25,000,000 for the farm-tenant-purchase loan.

In doing that action, which was after the committee had concluded its consideration of the matter, they said to the American veterans, 49,000 of them who made application for the purchase of land under the farm-tenant-purchase program, "You will be cut off and denied the privileges that have been given to other citizens during the time that you were in the service."

I know the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, as smooth and suave as he is, is going to say that land prices are high and it will add to inflation. That is not what they said to those boys when they were out on the battlefronts fighting for their country.

I say to you, under Judge Tarver's chairmanship they carried a provision which protected any purchaser in that the Farm Security could not approve the purchase of a single piece of land unless it was at a reasonable price. Thus, this group on the Republican side who earlier subscribed to this program only had to write such protective language into this bill.

I would like to call attention to the fact further that by striking out that provision for future loans they are striking out the 35,000 applications by the veterans which are in process of being approved. When you go back to your respective districts, I am sure you will have an answer for this.

But as I was saying a while ago, when you were acting on the AAA amendment I had a friend from my State who was defeated for reelection to Congress some years ago. He told me later, "Everything that the people were sore at me about I had perfect defense for, but the trouble was they would not listen to me." Gentlemen, you may have a technical excuse, such as the demands of your party leaders to cut out this program of farm-tenant purchase. You may have a call on you to cut out AAA payments which you guaranteed last year by your action, but I am saying to you that when you break faith with your people back home in your districts you had better send for the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] and some of your Republican leaders because you are likely to need them. I am just afraid your people back home would not listen to them at that.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, the last 5 minutes to be reserved for the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt the gentleman from Illinois, but under the rules of the House on a motion to limit debate may not include assignment of the time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my previous motion and now move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The motion was agreed to

TENANT PURCHASE FUNDS ARE BEING REPAID; LOANS NECESSARY TO CONTINUE IMPORTANT SERVICE FOR FARM VETERANS

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if the Members understood this amendment and the conditions that pertain to the farm-tenancy program, I believe this amendment would be agreed to.

For example, there are 72,000 acres that belong to the United States Government being liquidated under the Tarver amendment. None of that land can be sold unless there is a provision by which the purchasers, who must be veterans, can make loans. Unless provision is made for the extension of loans under the Bankhead-Jones Act, that land cannot be sold—72,000 acres of it.

The gentleman's amendment provides for $25,000,000. The Administrator tells me that 60 percent of all of current loans are going to veterans of the Second World War. That means that $15,000,000 would be virtually earmarked for them.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield.

Mr. MAHON. I think the gentleman's position is further enforced by the fact that the members of the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] have confidence in Mr. Lasseter, who is head of the Administration, and we can be sure that if he cannot loan this money advantageously, it will remain in the United States Treasury.

Mr. HAYS. Exactly. Mr. DIRKSEN's comments evidenced that in the RECORD—his praise of Mr. Lasseter's forthright handling of this program.

Now, here is an opportunity for us, without breaching the economy policy, to provide for several hundred or perhaps several thousand veterans who want land. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] told us that 49,000 of them have applications on file. This is not a breach of the economy policy. This money is being paid back. The Government has loaned $282,000,000 under the Bankhead-Jones Act, and only $50,000 of that is considered lost.

Moreover, we are not adding to the inflationary influence. Let me make that clear. There is a reason for asserting that. The reason is that under the provisions of the law we passed last year it is sold to veterans, not at its present market value, which is an inflated value, but at its earning capacity value.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. Do I understand if we do not approve this amendment that the bill which the gentleman introduced and which the Congress passed last year will be ineffective?

Mr. HAYS. It would be of no effect whatever as to these remaining farms because the loan procedure could not be used. We told the veterans at that time that we were going to take the rehabilitation project land and earmark it for them. In addition we have 3,000,000 acres of land that the War Assets Administration will certify as surplus property for sale, some of which will be available for purchase by farm veterans. The Farm Credit Administration has 300,000 acres by transfer from War Assets that will be for sale. We should sell it at its earning capacity value and in family-size units to veterans of the Second World War.

Altogether we have loaned to 44,000 farmers money with which to acquire title to land under the Bankhead-Jones Act, and 7,000 of them have already paid out in full, although, as I pointed out yesterday, they are 40-year loans. This is not an appropriation of $25,000,000. It is the earmarking of a loan fund, practically every dollar of which will be paid back.

Mr. HAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS. I yield.

Mr. HAND. I think the gentleman has probably answered my question, but is not this program working out advantageously in dollars and cents?

Mr. HAYS. Exactly. Thousands are repaying the debt in advance of the due date. Now, I do not want to hit below the belt. I know none of the Members of this House want to be unfair to the veterans. I have not indicated that any of you are unfair, but as a business proposition, to help some of the 650,000 who once said on an Army questionnaire that they wanted to go back to the land, we ought to continue this service. This is not an emotional appeal. It is good business. The Bankhead-Jones program is working out.

Let us take the $25,000,000 and, as contemplated by FHA, devote $15,000,000 of it to veterans of World War II who are filing these applications by the thousands. Let us put the emphasis on this farm program rather than on the regular veteran farm loans under the GI bill of rights, where we are really adding to the inflationary pressures.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, as indicated by the gentleman from Arkansas, this is not a gift. It is a loan and a sound investment of Government funds. There is not a single good reason why we should deny this Government aid to the underprivileged farmers of America, and especially to our veterans who cannot obtain the necessary assistance from other sources.

I know that my very persuasive and artful friend from Illinois will try to hang this thing around the President's neck. He will blame President Truman for the destruction of the tenant-purchase program, merely because President Truman indicated to the Secretary of Agriculture the desirability of a conference looking toward the prevention of inflation of farm-land values. After the President wrote to the Secretary of Agriculture, the letter to which I have heretofore called your attention, the gentleman from Illinois held another star-chamber session and without hearings of any kind, but under the lash of his party leadership, struck this $25,000,000 from the bill and abruptly ended the tenant-purchase program. I invite the gentleman's attention again to the letter from Secretary Anderson, which I read this morning, in which he stated definitely that he had conferred with the President and that the President assured him definitely that he did not intend for his letter to have such disastrous and devastating effect upon this very worthwhile program. When I knew that the gentleman from Illinois would attempt to hold the President responsible for the action taken by his committee, I communicated with the Secretary of Agriculture and also with the White House, in an effort to ascertain the President's views with reference to the tenant-purchase program. I realized, of course, that the President was at the bedside of his mother, but appreciating the importance of the matter and believing that I knew the President's views, I insisted that he be advised as to the interpretation being placed upon his communication to the Secretary of Agriculture. The President, within the last 48 hours, was advised of the interpretation being placed upon his communication, and the letter from Secretary Anderson, which I read this morning, explains the President's position.

I know that this program cannot possibly be continued without the support of at least some of the Republicans in this House. May I remind you of the fact that the Farmers Home Administration bill was written by both Republicans and Democrats. My recollection is that it passed the House unanimously only a short year ago. It was recognized then as a sound program. Since its approval it has been managed properly by a man who has made an excellent record. I beg you Republicans to reconsider the action of your committee. Why should we single out veterans from the rural sections of America and attempt to economize by depriving them of the benefits of legislation which we so recently enacted in their behalf. You say you are trying to protect veterans from the evils of inflation. If you are so interested in veterans, why not protect all of them from the evils of inflation? Why not accord the same treatment to the veterans who live in the city? All of this talk about inflation is nothing but a lot of ballyhoo and nonsense and a desperate effort on your part to cover up the real purposes you have in mind. Loans which have recently been made by the Farmers Home Administration have averaged slightly more than loans made in the previous year. The Secretary's letter to me indicates an increase of only $3 a farm. Suppose the average loan has been somewhat higher than in the previous year, that does not necessarily mean inflation, because there has been a general rise in prices of everything. All of this talk about inflation is just an afterthought. If we have inflation now, certainly we had it 30 days ago, and at the time when this very able and distinguished subcommittee first reported this measure.

I take great pride in the successful operation of this agency. During the last 12 months the agency has been careful and cautious in making loans. I have not heard of a single unusually large loan being made anywhere in the country. All of the loans have been small loans to finance the purchase of family-size farms. Certainly both parties should take pride in the record which has been established since Congress authorized the creation of the Farmers Home Administration.

I stated earlier in the day that veterans' organizations were in favor of the tenant-purchase program. At the Forty-seventh Encampment of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, which was held September 4, 1946, the following resolution was adopted:

Be it resolved by the Forty-seventh Annual Encampment of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, That the national legislative committee be authorized to take such action as it deems appropriate to insure that adequate Federal appropriations are available to provide the credit, guidance, and other services required by farm veterans; and be it further

Resolved, That the national legislative committee also inquire into the adequacy of the legislation affecting veterans as family-type farmers, and to the extent that it fails to meet the needs of farm veterans so advise the Congress and the various agencies and departments of the Government that are involved, and support specific legislation affecting the welfare of veterans as family-type farmers as may come before the Congress from time to time.

On February 16, 1947, the following resolution was adopted by AMVETS national executive committee:

Whereas a definite service can be rendered by assisting veterans of World War II who desire to become farmers and there is need for representation by AMVETS in the making of policies affecting agriculture: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That a national agriculture committee of American Veterans of World War II be created to further the interests of veterans who are engaged in agriculture, such as:

1. Assistance to veterans in their efforts to purchase and to become established on farms.
2. Further extension of rural electrification power lines.
3. Improved farm-to-market roads.
4. Better rural health facilities.
5. Improved rural educational facilities; and be it further

Resolved, That this committee consist of seven members to represent the various phases of agriculture throughout the Nation and to be selected on the basis of training and experience in agricultural problems. This committee shall be composed of a chairman and a member from each of the six AMVETS districts, the district members of the committee to be selected by the respective district vice commanders and the chairman to be appointed by the national commander and to serve during the administration of the national commander.

Moved by William Kipp, of Illinois. Seconded by Joseph Crespi, of Georgia. Adopted by unanimous vote of national executive committee.

The agricultural policy of the American Legion as expressed May 16, 1946, is in the following language:

Veterans are coming back to farming at a time when good farms and farming equipment are both hard to find and expensive to buy. During the years they were in the service, they missed their chance to benefit by the good yields and high prices of the wartime period. By every rule—economic necessity, law, and sentiment—the veteran farmer has first call upon opportunities in the field of American agriculture.

The American Legion, however, realizes that in many instances the interests of the veterans are best served by the furtherance of a program benefitting the entire agricultural population.

Therefore, the Legion supports a program for all farmers and asks only that veterans receive preference in obtaining the basic farm needs.

It shall be the policy of the American Legion to endorse and encourage adequate programs to make available: (1) family-size, sound, economic farm units, (2) short- and long-term credit at low interest rates, (3) farm stock, machinery, and equipment, (4) farm housing facilities—and it shall further be the policy of the American Legion that veterans shall have definite preference in acquiring the benefits of these programs.

It shall further be the policy of the American Legion to sponsor extension of existing Government credit facilities to enable disabled veterans to obtain farm purchase and operating loans.

It shall further be the policy of the American Legion to endorse and encourage adequate programs to make available: (1) rural medical care, (2) extension of power lines to rural areas, (3) improved farm-to-market roads, (4) improved marketing facilities, (5) extension and improvement of rural education.

It shall further be the policy of the American Legion to endorse and encourage adequate programs to conserve and extend our natural resources.

On March 7, 1947, at the national rehabilitation conference of the American Legion, in the city of Washington, the following recommendation was adopted with regard to the activities of the United States Department of Agriculture:

That the United States Department of Agriculture should make available maximum assistance, not only in providing financing but also in planning and sound management guidance.

You take your positions with the facts before you. The Republican Party must take full responsibility for the result achieved. This is a sad day for American agriculture. This is the testing ground. This is the place where the roll is called; the place where the truth, however cruel and disappointing it may be, is made known.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I can appreciate the difficulty of trying to examine 2,800 pages of hearings. I appreciate also the advantage that the members of the subcommittee enjoy because for seven solid weeks they have lived with this thing intimately. So now and then inaccuracies creep into the debate, which are quite natural. That is understandable.

Let us look at this whole picture a moment. Is it such a heinous crime for the chairman of a subcommittee to confer with his own leadership? Have you gentlemen not done it for 14 years? Is it treason or a felony for the chairman of this subcommittee to sit down with the distinguished Speaker of this House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], or the distinguished majority leader of this House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], or the steering committee, and compare notes on matters of policy? Is there something so wrong with that? But that is not the reason there was a reconsideration of some items in this bill.

That reconsideration took place on the afternoon of May 20, early in the week, and let me tell you why it took place. It was on a previous Saturday that the very esteemed President of the United States had notified the Secretary of Agriculture to convene a conference on the 9th of June, a few days from now, and that the conference should concern itself with one thing—the appreciation in land values.

What did the President say about it? First, he pointed out that land values had appreciated 92 percent over the 1935–39 level. That is not the gentleman from Illinois speaking; that is the distinguished President of the United States from the great State of Missouri, your President and mine. He pointed out in that statement, which was made public, that in the last 12 months ending March 1, 1947, land values had increased by 12 percent. But the President said something more than that which intrigued my fancy, and I quote him:

In many areas land prices have reached peaks which cannot be sustained by probable long-time farm earnings.

In addition thereto he expressed a special concern for the war veterans of the country who are interested in buying land. My good friend from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS], and my good friend from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY], talked about the war veterans. I am interested in the war veterans and the President is interested in them also and does not want to see them saddled with high-priced farms which in the face of a recession of commodity levels will stick them and send the farms back to the Government or make them lose the farms as a result of foreclosure.

We reconsidered this matter and we finally took out farm-tenant loans entirely. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] wants to restore that $25,000,000.

Let us see in dollars and cents what has actually happened. I yield to no one in my regard for Mr. Lasseter, the Administrator of the Farmers Home Administration. He is a grand fellow, he is one of the finest administrators in Government today, he was candid and forthright with the committee. What did he say? He said first of all, and this is in contravention of the statements that have been made on the floor, that farms did not increase $3 over last year; they increased $1,700 over last year. Here are the figures: The 1945 average was $5,947; the 1946 average was $7,610. Those are Mr. Lasseter's figures.

But he said something more and you will find it on page 1416 of the hearings, if you are interested:

Owners are getting fearful right now, owners of land, and they want to sell to veterans, to farm tenants who can qualify.

The owners now want to get out and get the high price and stick the veteran and stick the farm tenant, then let the Government bail them out at a later date.

Mr. Lasseter said something else, and you will find it on page 1419 of the hearings. He said:

We have to shop around very carefully to get suitable farms.

They are very difficult to get. Now, there is an opportunity for the veteran, and you gentlemen who have made a case here against this bill yesterday and today have not told the whole truth. Why do you not say that these are 40-year, 3½-percent loans and that there is an opportunity under the GI act to get 40-year, 3½-percent loans, and nearly three times as many have been made in the space of 18 months as would be made in twice that length of time under the Farmers Home Administration. So, the opportunity is there, and this is a wise and discreet action on the part of the committee, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITTEN) there were—ayes 94, noes 129.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I want to solemnly protest the tragic action of the Appropriations Committee in fairly ruining our farm appropriations. This action is a calamity of the first magnitude to our rural sections. Its full proportions will not be seen for some time to come, but every section of the Nation will feel the impact of this drastic reduction within the next few months.

I feel the action of this committee in cutting the soil-conservation payments is especially to be condemned. Out of the full sum of $300,000,000 recommended by the Bureau of the Budget as being the sum necessary for this year, only $165,000,000 has been placed in this bill. This means a cut to the AAA program for the coming year of $135,000,000 on this item alone; and for the year following, it means the elimination of the entire program.

I doubt that there has been a single phase of the internal program which has meant so much to the farmer as the soil-conservation program and the soil-conservation payments. This program has transformed barren wastes into fertile producing areas. It has taken submarginal land and has made it produce in prolific quantities. It has made it possible in this time of world-wide food scarcity for our farmers to produce all-time records in crops. Our President has called upon our farmers to help produce for a starving world; and with the aid of this most valuable program they have gone to work and have done the job. Millions of people throughout the world who otherwise might starve will now live because of the remarkable results from this great program.

At this particular time, Mr. Chairman, the farmers in our section are interested in the fertilizer program. They have already made commitments for fertilizers, and they are now engaged in placing these fertilizers in the soil and over the meadows. They are moving ahead as requested by the President and as indicated by the statements of former President Hoover to again produce a record-breaking harvest. The world fairly cries out in anguish for the American farm production, and our farmers are working as the hungry peoples of America and other lands pray for the harvest. At this particular time the cut of funds creates a new problem for them; it takes their mind off their work; it makes it impossible for them to meet some of their commitments; and it most assuredly will affect the amount of the harvest.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses: For the making and servicing of new loans, insuring mortgages, the servicing and collecting of loans made under prior authority, and the liquidation of assets transferred to Farmers Home Administration pursuant to the Farmers Home Administration Act of 1946, $18,000,000.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTEN: Page 58, line 21, strike out "$18,000,000" and insert "$25,000,000."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I think this matter deserves the serious consideration of each Member on the floor. There have been many times in the past, when this agency was the Farm Security Administration, that I certainly disagreed with many, many things in connection with it, but the gentlemen who have had charge of it in recent years have done a splendid job, with which I think all will agree. The thing you cannot avoid is that there are now $800,000,000 of debts outstanding that are owed to the United States, and those loans must be serviced. Those people should repay the Government of the United States and should pay their debts as fast as they can during the time their income is fairly good. The man who is now administering this agency has done a splendid job. Last year he was one of the few in the departments who came in with a request for less personnel. This year he came in with a request for still less personnel than last year. Last year an amendment was offered on this floor to reduce the administrative personnel of the then Farm Security Administration from $24,000,000 to $23,000,000, only a $1,000,000 cut. At that time the distinguished chairman of this committee opposed any such amendment and said:

There are many outstanding loans that must be collected, and you will find a table in the hearings to the effect that there are $16,000,000 that could be charged off at the present time. So if we reduce it too much and use what I commonly call a meat-ax technique with respect to this administrative appropriation, we may lose an equivalent amount or more and curtail or cripple some of these functions.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. If the committee action stands and the gentleman's amendment is not adopted, it will reduce this administrative cost to 2.4 percent of the amount of outstanding assets to be administered.

Mr. WHITTEN. That is right. The fact that you have eliminated new loans will not cut out more than just a few people in the administrative personnel, but this agency under Mr. Lasseter reduced the personnel from 8,900 to 8,400 last year, and this year under the President's budget reduced it from 8,400 to 7,200. The committee cut this fund from $30,000,000 for the over-all operation to $25,000,000 in its first meeting, and 10 days later went back and cut out an additional $7,000,000. In 1 year you are reducing an agency that administers $800,000,000 of loans from 8,400 to 4,250 administrative personnel, if you do not adopt this amendment.

If the gentleman from Illinois was correct last year in saying that he was opposed to the use of a meat-ax technique, certainly when you reduce an agency to which you must look for the collection of $800,000,000 and cut it in half within 1 year, you are using the meat-ax technique.

I plead with you, whether you are in sympathy with this program or not, whether you are on this side of the aisle or on that side of the aisle, where you have an administrator that comes in and shows you a good record of reducing personnel in his agency by 1,000 or 1,500 people each successive year, I say that when he is charged with the obligation of collecting $800,000,000 and of trying to see that these people do come back and get to be good citizens and farm owners and worthy members of the agricultural fraternity, it is poor business to reduce this appropriation by any such figure as from $30,000,000 to $18,000,000, to reduce his personnel by approximately 50 percent. I think this amendment certainly should be adopted.

Mr. COOLEY. Does not the gentleman believe it will be impossible to manage the affairs of this agency properly with the small amount of money that is now being provided?

Mr. WHITTEN. I think it can be conservatively stated that we will lose $50,000,000 as a result of failure to provide properly for the administration of this agency.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, for more than 30 years the farmers and small-town business people have been interested in the development of an agricultural program which would bring some security and advancement to the farming sections of the country. Their claims to national attention and Federal interest have not been readily granted. The idea, centuries old, that the farmer should supply all others with food, fibers, and general assistance regardless of his own welfare or share in national progress, has persisted in opposition to every move to bring agriculture to a parity with industry. In consequence, the program has been slow in developing and insufficient for its purpose. The aim may be praised, but its accomplishment denied by those who fail to realize that only as agriculture prospers can town and country alike share in general advancement and enhancement of opportunity.

After a war in which victory was made possible by the united endeavors of all, and in which those in agriculture fully met every responsibility, earning and gaining universal approval for their loyalty and the success of their endeavors, it would seem that there should be the warmest approval of expansion of an agricultural program rather than a determined effort to sabotage and destroy it. The program is not perfect. It needs improvement. Undoubtedly it has many weaknesses which are recognized, and which should be remedied. The common endeavor should be its proper expansion and the broadening of agricultural opportunity.

Instead of expansion, this appropriation bill, if enacted, will bring curtailment, and even the elimination of some activities. It is based upon the contention that farmers are doing better, some are making money, hence an insufficient program should be supplanted by another even more insufficient.

The national debt of $259,000,000,000 is pointed to as making necessary reductions in Federal appropriations for the Agricultural Department which administers the many laws passed by Congress for rural betterment. Regardless of the war endeavors of the farmers at home and on the battlefields, and the wartime restrictions which compelled them to live and work under severe handicaps while carrying on for our Nation's success and supremacy, now they are called upon to sacrifice more and more while our Government turns its attention and its resources, including those of agriculture, to the rehabilitation of the world.

This bill, if passed, will reduce Federal expenditures for the agricultural program by $393,000,000, or about 35 percent below the appropriations for the present fiscal year. Nobody objects to the minor economies which can be effected by stopping unnecessary departmental expenditures, the discharge of unnecessary employees, or other savings, even though small, in the interest of general economy, but the purpose should be to improve rather than to destroy. Some features of this bill serve rather to destroy than to improve.

Economy is a broad word. Economizing on agriculture by limiting funds for rural electrification, soil erosion, the Farmers Home Administration, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, school lunches, and other important activities accomplish relatively little savings when compared with other activities which add many times as much to the Federal budget.

For instance, in today's press is the statement that our Federal Treasury will expend nearly $5,000,000,000 for foreign relief of various kinds, an amount 12 times as great as the cut in appropriations in this measure. Recently Congress appropriated $300,000,000 for the rearmament of the army of Greece and rehabilitation of that country. At the same time, another $100,000,000 was voted for equipment for the armies of Turkey, for the possible protection of the American and British oil interests in the Middle East. In these appropriations alone our Treasury will be drawn upon for a greater amount than all the savings proposed in this bill for agriculture.

Is Congress so forgetful of the heroic work of our farmers in war and in peace that it will compel our farm program to be without funds in order to increase the power of the armies of Turkey and Greece? Must agriculture be called upon to pay the cost to the Treasury of the loans, grants, and gifts to Greece and Turkey?

Must the expansion of rural electrification, for instance, be stopped in order to send another $78,000,000 to Korea to rebuild the ruined industries owned by foreign interests in that country?

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Rural electrification has come a long way in my district in Wisconsin since the REA program began. We have 10 rural electric cooperatives that are now serving more than 22,000 members. The why these farm families are putting electric power to use for their own profit and convenience is a dramatic demonstration of the tremendous good that can come out of the rural electrification program.

The money that REA lent to these 10 cooperatives is paying dividends to the farmers, to the communities in which they live, and in turn, to the Nation. But the record does not stop there. The cooperatives are paying back the money they borrowed. They are paying it back with interest.

The 10 cooperatives in my district have paid $1,791,543 in principal and interest, and of this $93,921 has been ahead of schedule.

This outstanding record, which I know is duplicated in all parts of the country, raises a very serious question as to the wisdom of the House Appropriations Committee in reducing the REA appropriation for the next year. In the name of economy the committee proposes to sentence thousands of farmers to at least another year in darkness. This is not economy, because the money these farmers need to build power lines will eventually be paid back. Neither is it good sense to throw obstacles in the path of progress.

In my district, the House bill will affect about 9,000 farm families. All of them will have to wait longer for their light and power if the Rural Electrification Administration has to operate on a curtailed basis. About 5,000 of them will have to wait for loan-fund allocations.

All through the war I received letters from farmers who told me how they were hoping to get electricity with the coming of peace. Since VJ-day many of them have told me they have their farms wired in anticipation of electric service. Occasionally a housewife tells me she has been lucky enough to buy a refrigerator or a milk cooler, and she is anxious to know how long it will be before she can put them into service.

These people are growing impatient. And I do not blame them. They have had an opportunity to see what electricity means to farmers who already have it. While other farmers are in a position to modernize, to cut production costs with cheap power, and to enjoy many of the comforts of twentieth century living, they—the farmers still without electricity—have got to wait. They have to continue living decades behind the times and they have to compete with farmers who are farming on an up-to-date scale.

There are more than 9,000 of these people in my district. Throughout the Nation there are two and one-half million. Some of them, I am sure, are in most congressional districts.

What are you going to tell those who helped elect you? That this action is taken to help cut their taxes? They know better—they know that the REA program is self-liquidating. Are you going to tell them that you do not care if they have to live by kerosene lantern an extra year or two?

If the House bill is approved as it now stands, it simply means this Congress has gone on record as holding back the extension of rural electric service. Is that the kind of a record this Congress wants to make? I, for one, will have no part of it.

Rural electrification is on the threshold of what could be its greatest year in history. Manpower and materials are becoming available again on a scale that would permit line construction to leap forward. The opportunity is here and we cannot take advantage of it by practicing false economy of the kind we have under consideration.

The administration of this program, as shown by its record, is one of efficiency and accomplishment. It has established a record unequaled by any private lending institution. In 1935 the Congress entrusted this agency with the job of making loans to electrify rural America. It has discharged its obligation well. More than $1,000,000,000 of Federal money has been lent to over 1,000 borrowers in a program that has directly and indirectly resulted in the electrification of nearly 60 percent of this country's farms—and, I repeat, this money is being paid back.

In my own district, I know of no Federal program that has done so much for my rural constituents, at such trifling cost to the Nation's taxpayers, as this rural electrification program. I am sure that most of my colleagues would be able to say the same.

I believe, and I know that the people whom I represent believe, that only two things could possibly delay the progress of rural electrification. One would be the influence of selfish interests; the other, our own nearsightedness. Obviously, we are not going to let selfish interests influence us in a matter in which the good of the entire country is involved. At the same time, let us not be nearsighted. If we fail to give full support to this valuable Nation-building program, we will be guilty of subscribing to bad business.

FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION

The Seventy-ninth Congress provided the Farmers Home Administration Act which took over most of the functions of the Farm Security Administration. The committee has deleted completely the budget estimate of $35,000,000 and provides no funds for farm tenant loans. The production and subsistence loan program has been reduced from $90,000,000 to $30,000,000. The Farm Tenant Mortgage Insurance fund has been reduced from an estimated $15,000,000 for 1948 to $1,000,000, and the item for salaries and expense to administer the program throughout the country has been reduced from $30,000,000 to $18,000,000.

The congressional district which I represent is made up of 11 rural counties in which farmers are largely engaged in the dairy industry. As a result of severe drought and low prices that prevailed in the middle thirties, many hard-working, conscientious farmers, through no fault of their own, lost their farms. When the old Farm Security Administration was established many of those farmers were given the opportunity to make a new beginning and to reestablish themselves as farm owners. Since the start of the program and up to January 1, 1947, 10,718 farmers in my district were granted loans to the extent of $8,670,723. Of that number of farmers, 409 were granted farm ownership loans to the extent of slightly less than $2,000,000, of which 109 have repaid their loans in full. Of the total of 10,718 farmers who received loans, 5,733 of such loans have been paid in full as of January 1, 1947, and the total amount loaned has been reduced from $8,670,723 to $2,176,184. As of January 1, 1947, 280 veterans of World War II applied for and received loans in the amount of $578,850. It is estimated that an additional 138 veterans will have had their loan applications approved as of June 30 of this year, making a total of 418 veterans' loans. Private banks in my district have cooperated fully with the Farmers Home Administration. In excess of 5,000 farmers in my district who have repaid their obligations to FSA and the Farmers Home Administration, are now having their credit needs taken care of by local banks and other lending institutions.

Today I received a letter from Mr. A. R. Vogtsberger, vice president of the Bank of Menomonie, Menomonie, Wis., which I quote:

Congressman MERLIN HULL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HULL: I notice that the finance committee has cut the appropriation for the Farm Home Administration by 30 percent.

This seems to me to be a drastic cut since we feel that the administration of the loans that are now outstanding should be continued and we believe too that the cut of $15,000,000 to $1,000,000 for insured mortgages is entirely too drastic.

We believe the farmer has gotten to be the forgotten man again, and we do think that the program that the former Farm Security Administration carried on was a good one and should be continued; and as you will remember, we have cited many cases of farmers who could not have continued if it had not been for the Farm Security Administration.

We know you are opposed to such a cut, but we want you to know how we feel about it.

At the meeting of the Chippewa Club, which consists of 10 banks in this territory, each and every one of them was polled and they were all favorable to keeping the $15,000,000 for the guarantee of loans and also were favorable to the continuation of the FSA work.

With kindest personal regards.

Sincerely yours,

A. R. VOGTSBERGER.

The Farm Security Administration, and its successor, the Farmers Home Administration, have been important factors in encouraging family sized farm ownership, particularly in the interest of our returned servicemen who have no other means of securing the initial funds to acquire farm land, or, in the case of renters, to acquire operating equipment. The program has been highly successful in my State and in my district, and I doubt the wisdom of emasculating this excellent program as proposed in the bill.

THE SCHOOL-LUNCH PROGRAM

As stated in the committee report, during the year 1946 about $234,000,000 was expended on the program in 55,000 schools throughout the country. Of this amount, $75,000,000 was provided by the Federal Government. The committee has reduced the Federal Government's appropriation from $75,000,000 to $45,000,000. For the fiscal year 1947 the sum of $81,000,000 was made available for the program, of which $75,000,000 was obtained from section 32 funds under the act of 1935 which provided that 30 percent of the customs receipts could be used for various purposes, which included the school lunch program. The committee has recommended that all of section 32 funds for the year 1948 are to be rescinded.

During the 1947 fiscal year, $1,108,836.41 Federal food assistance was allocated to the State of Wisconsin from the Federal school lunch fund. With the aid of this Federal assistance, 131,718 Wisconsin school children participated in the grant-in-aid school-lunch program. If the present figure of $45,000,000, out of which $10,000,000 is earmarked for equipment, is appropriated, $525,573.72 will be available for Wisconsin's school lunch food assistance in 1948. This represents a decrease of about 53 percent. Unless a large additional amount is made available from within the State to offset this decrease, the Wisconsin school lunch program will be considerably curtailed the coming school year.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

No one can deny the patriotic response of farmers when requested by their Government to produce food and fiber to win a war. All time production records were broken with less help on the farms, and with worn-out and inadequate equipment. They are still being asked to maintain high levels of production to feed the starving world.

Farmers who were gradually recovering from the great drought and depression of the thirties, during which time soil fertility had become seriously depleted, were again called upon to produce for victory. During the past few years soil fertility has again become depleted. The AAA was, and is, an important factor in stepping up the usage of phosphate and potash fertilizers, and limestone. AAA personnel aided farmers in demonstrating the practicability of strip and contour farming, which added many thousands of tons of food to national production. It should be a matter of public interest to see that the land that produced the food for our armed forces, and much of the food for our allies, is brought back to average productive efficiency.

In Wisconsin in 1937 only 415,000 tons of agricultural limestone was used, as compared with the present level of production and use of limestone of 2,250,000 tons per year. Even prior to the war there was great concern with regard to the general problem of erosion and our dwindling forestry resources. Included in the AAA program was that of farm forestry and gully control, as well as tree planting.

AAA has supplied soil conservation materials, 50 percent of the cost of which was borne by the farmers who applied the materials, planted the trees, and so forth. In Wisconsin from 1940 through 1946 there has been applied 503,414 tons of phosphate and potash fertilizer, 10,422,300 tons of agricultural limestone, 47,301 acres have been planted to trees in connection with the farm-forestry and gully-control program, and 2,028,700 acres are part of the strip and contour-farming program. From 1940 to the present the records indicate sharp increases in accomplishments as described, which demonstrates increasing efficiency on the part of AAA personnel, and greater farmer participation and interest in the program.

In connection with the agricultural-limestone program, there was more involved than simply the application of the ingredient to the soil. Large numbers of people and much expensive equipment had to be provided to quarry limestone deposits, pulverize, and transport it. Such processors of limestone felt they were working on a continuing program. One of the lime-works operators in my district has stated to me that the proposed cut in the 1947 AAA program will bankrupt 70 percent of the limestone producers and truckers who acquired equipment relying on bona-fide contracts entered into with their Government for the 1947 program.

The administrative budget has been so reduced as to end for all practical purposes the popular and wholly justifiable Federal program to aid in the rebuilding of the soil on American farms.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I believe if any person were to study the lessening of duties that are today facing the Farmers Home Administrator he would find that this allowance of $18,000,000 is absolutely reasonable.

Keep in mind another thing. Times are good all throughout the agricultural regions. Farmers do not have any difficulty today in finding the money necessary to pay what is due the Government. They do not need much supervision from any agency of Government. They will pay their loans if they have a good crop and decent prices.

We have fought several times on the floor today against this growing bureaucracy. Here is where there is a great deal of it. Here is where we have excessive duplication in government. Do you people realize that the Farmers Home Administration in many ways duplicates the work of the Extension Service?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. If there was a consolidation of these duplicating activities, we could save $20,000,000.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I believe that we could save at least that under the bill if the Committee on Agriculture would bring together under one head, Extension Service preferably the Soil Conservation Service, the Extension Service, the Farmers Home Administration, and the AAA county and township committee organization.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. If the Congress is going to deprive the returning rural veteran of the opportunity to buy a country home or a farm——

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further because the gentleman is laboring under a misapprehension. The returning veteran does have the opportunity under the GI bill of rights to make a loan. We are not depriving him of that. That is a different category of loan. In this particular portion of the bill we are keeping that veteran from having a great big mortgage indebtedness piled on top of his head from under which he can never get out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITTEN) there were—ayes 93, noes 122.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

All rights, interests, obligations, and duties of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation arising out of loans made or authorized to be made to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of making rural rehabilitation and farm tenancy loans in accordance with the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act of 1947 and prior appropriations and loans under the Farmers Home Administration Act of 1946 are, as of the close of June 30, 1947, vested in the Secretary of the Treasury; the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to transfer, as of the close of June 30, 1947, to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to receive all loans outstanding on that date, plus accrued unpaid interest, therefore made to the Secretary under the provisions of the acts named above, and all notes and other evidences thereof and all obligations constituting the security therefor. The Secretary of the Treasury shall cancel notes of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and sums due and unpaid upon or in connection with such notes at the time of such cancellation, in an amount equal to the unpaid principal of the loans so transferred, plus accrued unpaid interest through June 30, 1947. Subsequent to June 30, 1947, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall make no further loans or advances to the Secretary and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, in lieu of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to lend or advance to the Secretary, in accordance with the provisions of the acts referred to any unobligated or unadvanced balances of the sums which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has theretofore been authorized and directed to lend to the Secretary. For the purpose of making such loans or advances, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under that act are extended to include such loans or advances to the Secretary of Agriculture. Repayments to the Secretary of Treasury on such loans or advances shall be treated as a public-debt transaction of the United States.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have seen men jump from one side of a fence to the other, but I have never seen a man on both sides of a fence at the same time.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN], who just addressed the House a moment ago, stood here and argued very forcefully and, apparently from the vote, very persuasively, that he was trying to protect the poor veterans from the evils of inflation. Then, in the next breath, he said we did not need this agency. He said, "We have all the money we need under the GI bill of rights in another agency of the Government."
